*Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) s. 107, C XLI,
r. 25 Issues, framing of—Duty of Court—Failure of lower Courts to frame proper issues—Procedure—Remand.*

In a suit for redemption of a mortgage, the plaintiff based his title on a legacy under a Will and also on a lease. The defendants denied plaintiff's title under both heads. There was a specific issue as to the genuineness of the Will but none as to the lease, except the general issue as to whether plaintiffs' suit was maintainable. The Court of first instance found the Will to be genuine and decreed the suit but the appellate Court reversed the finding and dismissed the suit. The question of the lease was not gone into in either of the Courts. On second appeal to the High Court:

Held, (1) that it was primarily the duty of the Court to frame the necessary issues though in framing issues parties were entitled to be heard; [p. 2, col. 1.]

(2) that the proper course to follow in the case was not to set aside the decree and remand the whole case including the question of genuineness of the Will to be gone into again ab initio, but to frame issues under O. XLI, r. 25 of the Civil Procedure Code and refer the same to the lower appellate Court and direct it to take the additional evidence required on the issues and return the same to the High Court with its findings. [p. 2, col. 2.]

Second Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ottapalam, in A. S. No. 146 of 1919, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif of Tirur, in O. S. No. 164 of 1919, (O. S. No. 550 of 1917 Parapanangudi Munsif's Court.)

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

The Chief Justice:—This is a second appeal from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Ottapalam, reversing the judgment of District Munsif of Tirur. The plaintiff is suing for the redemption of a mortgage. He and the defendant were at one time joint mortgagees. He puts his right to redeem the mortgage mainly on the ground that he was a purchaser or assignee of the rights of certain legatees under the Will of the mortgagor. It was alleged by the defendant that the Will was not valid, and so in effect he said: "you have no title under the Will. Whoever is in a position to redeem it, you are not." The District Munsif found as a fact that the Will was duly executed and was genuine. The Subordinate Judge found as a fact that the Will was not duly executed. Sitting in Second Appeal, it is not open to us, I regret to say, in this case, to review the judgment of the Subordinate Judge on a question of fact. The plaintiff, however, said: "I have got another ground on which I am entitled to redeem, and that is, I have taken a fresh lease or a renewal of the lease of the property from the jenmi," and he says, that he has raised that in his plaint. The defendant replied to it by saying that this demise was invalid and could not in any way be enforced. In framing issues, there was an issue framed, "Is the suit as brought not maintainable?" but there was no specific issue directed as to whether the plaintiff had a right to redeem under this new demise. I think it was for the Court to frame such an issue although on such application for issues the parties are heard. The result was that this matter was never gone into in either of the Courts below. The first Court, finding the Will genuine, had no particular reason for going into this point at all, even if it had been asked to. The second Court, finding the Will not genuine, apparently had not its attention called to the fact that it left open the question whether or not there was a right under the demise. And it is impossible to blame either Court, because attention was not apparently called to the matter and there was no definite issue on the point before the Court.

Now, under O. XLI, r. 25, which contains the principles on which the Court ought to act when exercising its powers under section 107 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, it is provided that 'where the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred has omitted to frame or try any issue or to determine any question of fact which appears to the appellate Court essential to the right decision of the suit upon the merits, the appellate Court may, if necessary, frame issues and refer the same for trial to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, and in such case direct such Court to take the additional evidence required; and such Court shall proceed to try such issues and shall return the evidence to the appellate Court together with its findings thereon and the reasons therefor. Now, under that, the Subordinate Judge's Court, if the point had been taken there, could have sent this matter back to be inquired into by the District Munsif, in which case the case would come back to the Subordinate Judge's Court with the evidence taken by the District Munsif on the issue, but when a case is sent back by this Court, the practice, no doubt with a view of saving expense, has been to send it to the lower appellate Court and direct that lower appellate Court to try that issue itself. In this case I think that that is the right course to pursue. I had some doubt as to whether we ought not to set aside this decree and leave the whole matter to be gone into again ab initio so leaving open the question to be tried again, whether this Will was duly executed or not. But, on the whole, particularly in view of the fact that I think that considerable blame attaches to the plaintiff for not having got this point decided at the same time, and I am convinced that the decision of the two lower Courts who heard the case would have been the same on the question of the validity of the Will, whether this point had been taken or not, I do not think it is right to remand the whole case: and I think the proper course to adopt is that provided for by O. 41, r. 25 to frame an issue and refer the same to the Subordinate Judge's Court at Ottapalam, and direct that Court to take the additional evidence required on the issue and return the evidence to this Court with its findings thereon and the reasons therefor. My learned brother has framed the necessary issue. The findings will be submitted within three months from the receipt of this order and ten days will be allowed for objections.

The question of costs of this appeal and in the lower Courts will be reserved until the final hearing after the receipt of the finding called for.

Wallace, J.—I agree and I frame the following issue:—

Does the plaintiff hold directly from the jenmi a new or a renewed demise, and, if so, is he entitled by force of that demise to redeem and eject the defendant from the suit property? And if he is so entitled, on what terms should the redemption be allowed? Each party is entitled to adduce further evidence on this point.

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) S. 11—Res Judicata, essential requisites of—Finding in unnecessary suit, whether constitutes Res Judicata.

The only conditions necessary to constitute a matter res judicata are that,—

(1) the matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit or issue must be the same matter which was directly and substantially in issue either actually or constructively in the former suit;

(2) the former suit must have been a suit between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim;

(3) the parties as aforesaid must have litigated under the same title in the former suit;

(4) the Court which decided the former suit must have been a Court competent to try the subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue is subsequently raised;

[p. 5, col. 2.]

It is not a necessary condition that the suit must be one which the plaintiff was bound to institute, there is no warrant in law for the proposition that a finding given in a suit which is perhaps an entirely useless suit and need not have been instituted at all does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit relating to the same matter if the other requirements of law as laid down in section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code have been fulfilled and a finding given in a suit which the plaintiff need not have instituted, but has in fact instituted is as much res judicata as one given in a suit which he was bound to institute.
[p. 5, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 5th May 1920, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Mianwali, dated the 2nd January 1920, dismissing plaintiff's suit.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Appellants.

Shoikh Niaz Muhammad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The subject matter of the litigation which has resulted in this appeal is the estate of one Ibrahim Khan, a Pathan of Mianwali Tahsil, who is alleged to have died more than 32 years ago, leaving him surviving three widows, Musammat Sahibo, Musammat Jatti and Musammat Nuran, and three daughters, Musammat Basso, Musammat Alimon and Musammat Nuran. It appears that on the death of Ibrahim Khan his property was mutated in four equal shares in the names of two of his widows, Musammat Sahibo and Musammat Nuran, and two daughters, Musammat Nuran and Musammat Alimon. The exact reason why Musammat Jatti, the third widow, and Musammat Basso, the third daughter, were excluded from inheritance is not definitely known, but it seems probable that they were not given a share because Musammat Basso had already been married and Musammat Jatti had been turned out by her husband during his life time on account of her unchastity. In 1891 two deeds of gift were executed, one by Musammat Nuran, widow of Ibrahim Khan, in favour of his daughter Musammat Alimon and the other by Musammat Nuran, the daughter, in favour of her mother Musammat Jatti in respect of some portions of the property to which they had succeeded on Ibrahim's death. These alienations gave rise to two suits by the reversioners of Ibrahim Khan, one of which was instituted on the 16th February 1892 against Musammat Nuran, the widow, and her step-daughter Musammat Alimon, and was registered as suit No. 38 of 1892. The other suit against Musammat Nuran, the daughter, and her mother Musammat Jatti was instituted on the next day the 17th February, and was registered as suit No. 42 of 1892. In both suits the validity of the alienations made by the females was challenged, and the usual declarations that these alienations will not affect the reversionary rights of the plaintiffs after the death or the marriage of the females were prayed for. Both suits were dismissed by the trial Court on the ground that plaintiffs were remote collaterals, and as such not entitled to succeed or to question the alienations in the presence of the daughters. The plaintiffs preferred an appeal against the decree of the trial Court in suit No. 38 of 1892, but no appeal was preferred in the other suit. The appeal in suit No. 38 of 1892 was accepted, and it was held by the Divisional Judge that plaintiffs were reversioners of the fifth degree and as such had the locus standi to maintain the suit. This judgment was confirmed on appeal by the Chief Court on 13th July 1893. The judgment of the trial Court in suit No. 42 of 1892 was allowed to become final, and the result of the findings arrived at in that judgment was that as against daughters, other than Musammat Alimon, plaintiffs' right to succeed or to question an alienation remained completely negatived.

In 1919 the widow, Musammat Nuran, remarried, and shortly after her remarriage the present suit was instituted by the plaintiff's for possession of the whole of the estate left by Ibrahim Khan on the allegations that by her remarriage the widow's estate enjoyed by Musammat Nuran had come to an end, and that the plaintiffs who were near collaterals of the deceased, were entitled to succeed to the exclusion of the daughters. The suit was at first directed only against Musammat Alimon and Musammat Nuran but subsequently Musammat Basso and Musammat Nuran were also impleaded as defendants. The defendants repudiated the allegations made in the plaint and contended that the question of the competency of the plaintiffs to maintain the suit and of their right to succeed in the presence of the daughters had already been decided in a previous suit, and that the judgment in that suit operated as res judicata. It was denied that plaintiffs were collaterals of the fifth degree, and it was pointed out that the property in suit was the self-acquired property of Ibrahim Khan to which the daughters had a superior right to succeed than the plaintiffs who were remote collaterals of more than six degrees. On these pleadings the following issues were framed and set down for trial :—

- (1) Are plaintiffs entitled to succeed to the property in suit by custom in preference to Ibrahim Khan's daughters on Musammat Nuran's marriage?
- (2) Is the point res judicata?
- (3) To what share, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled?

litigation, and that the present suit was consequently barred by the rule of res judicata. As to the character of the property in suit the Subordinate Judge held that it was ancestral, but he further found that the plaintiffs were not entitled to succeed as they were distant collaterals of six or more than six degrees. On appeal the learned District Judge differed from the findings of the trial Court on the question of the character of the property in suit, and found on all points in favour of the defendants. The result of these findings was that the plaintiffs' suit was entirely dismissed. The plaintiffs have now preferred a second appeal to this Court.

Mr. Niaz Muhammad on behalf of the respondents raises a preliminary objection that Sarwar Khan, one of the plaintiff-appellants, died on the 7th June 1921, and as no application to have his legal representatives impleaded was made within the time prescribed by law, but was made on the 22nd November 1921, when more than three months prescribed for such an application under the recent amendment of the Indian Limitation Act had expired, the appeal had abated as against Sarwar Khan. It is urged that the time for making such an application could not be extended, and that no sufficient cause had been shown for setting aside the abatement. The appellants have, however, filed an affidavit stating that the delay in making this application was due to the mistake on the part of their local pleader who told them that the period of limitation for applying to implead the legal representatives of a deceased person was six months, and it is prayed that, under these circumstances, the delay should be condoned. No counter-affidavit has been put in by the respondents, and we do not see any valid reason why the statement contained in the plaintiffs' affidavit should not be believed. In our opinion the plaintiffs have succeeded in showing that there was sufficient cause for their not applying within the prescribed period, and we set aside the abatement.

The learned Counsel for the appellants has argued the case before us at considerable length, but there is only one point which we need discuss, viz., the point whether the suit is or is not barred by res judicata, as we are clearly of opinion that on this point alone the plaintiffs' suit and appeal must fail.

It will be observed that half of the property left by Ibrahim Khan was admittedly mutated on his death in the names of the daughters without any objection on the part of the plaintiffs. Indeed, the right of the daughters to succeed to the inheritance of their father and to keep possession thereof till death or marriage was most distinctly recognized by the plaintiffs in the previous litigation. In paragraphs 1 and 2 of their plaint in that suit (No. 42 of 1892) it was clearly stated that the daughter of Musammat Nuran had succeeded to 396 kanals of land on the death of her father, that she was entitled to remain in possession of the land till her death or her marriage, and that after her death or her marriage plaintiffs would be entitled to succeed and to take possession. It was nowhere stated that the daughters had been allowed to take possession by some private arrangement or merely as an act of grace on the part of the widows who, according to the contention of the plaintiffs in this Court, were the only persons entitled to succeed to a life tenure, nor was there any indication given of the fact that on her death or marriage the property would go back to the widows to the exclusion of the plaintiffs. In fact, they could not have said so as the Riwaj-i-am of the Mianwali District clearly recognizes the rights of unmarried daughters to succeed to a portion of their father's estate, and to remain in possession thereof till they are married. It is, therefore, obvious that the daughter was recognized by the plaintiffs as an independent heir, and the contention now raised by their learned Counsel that, during the lifetime of the widow or widows, the plaintiffs had no cause of action to contest the alienation made by the daughter in favour of her own mother, and that if they did contest it, this fact should be completely ignored and the whole litigation from beginning to end treated as non est is wholly untenable. The daughter having succeeded to the property in her own independent rights, the plaintiffs had clearly a cause of action to sue if the alienation made by her was unauthorized or prejudicial to their interests; and if the question of their status and locus standi was directly and substantially in issue and adjudicated upon in that suit, we do not see why the finding then arrived at should not operate as res judicata if the same question happens to arise in a subsequent suit. Nor do we see any force in the argument that it was entirely unnecessary to bring the suit as the alienation was made in favour of her own mother who, it is alleged, was in any case entitled to a life estate on Ibrahim Khan's death. In our opinion Musammat Jatti, the alienee, was not entitled even to a life estate and had very probably been completely disinherited owing to her unchastity, or for some other reason, which is not apparent on the face of the record. From the plaint, to which reference has already been made, it is clear that the rights of Musammat Jatti to succeed were explicitly denied by the plaintiffs owing to her unchastity, and it was distinctly asserted that the plaintiffs were the next heirs. It is, therefore, clear that it was not a case of an acceleration, and the argument that the alienation was in favour of the next heir, and, therefore, need not have been objected to is entirely without any force. Further, it appears to us that there is no warrant in law for the proposition that a finding given in a suit which is, perhaps, an entirely useless suit and need not have been instituted at all does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit relating to the same matter if the other requirements of law as laid down in section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code have been fulfilled. The only conditions necessary to constitute a matter res judicata are those given at page 30 of Mullah's Civil Procedure Code, and they are as follows:—

(1) The matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit or issue must be the same matter which was directly and substantially in issue either actually or constructively in the former suit.

(2) The former suit must have been a suit between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim.

(3) The parties as aforesaid must have litigated under the same title in the former suit.

(4) The Court which decided the former suit must have been a Court competent to try the subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue is subsequently raised.

(5) The matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit must have been heard and finally decided by the Court in the first suit.

There is nothing in these conditions to support the contention that to constitute res

judicata the suit must be one which the plaintiff was bound to institute.

We are, therefore, clearly of opinion that the usefulness or otherwise of a suit is a question which is entirely beside the point, and that a finding given in a suit which plaintiff need not have instituted, but has in fact instituted, is as much a res judicata as in a suit which he was bound to institute.

To turn now to the pleadings and the issues in the former case; it appears that the defendant most unequivocally repudiated the plaintiffs' right to sue and pleaded that they were distant reversioners of more than 6 or 7 degrees. Two issues only were raised, one relating to the validity of the alienation and the other relating to the competency of the plaintiffs to maintain the suit. The Court found that the alienation was invalid by custom, but it also found that plaintiffs were collaterals of more than 6 or 7 degrees and consequently not the true heirs of Ibrahim Khan entitled to question the alienation.

The question relating to the plaintiffs' status or of their right to succeed in the presence of the daughters was directly and substantially in issue in the former litigation, and is also directly and substantially in issue in the present suit, and we do not see any reason why the finding given in the previous suit should not be conclusive between the plaintiffs and the daughters of Ibrahim Khan. It is urged that in the other suit against Musammât Alimon (suit No. 38 of 1892) plaintiffs were held to be collaterals of the 5th degree, and that this finding operates as res judicata not only against Musammât Alimon who was a party to that suit but against the other daughters as well who were no parties, as the suit was one of a representative nature and all the daughters of Ibrahim Khan must be held bound by it. We do not see any force in this contention. The suit was clearly personal against Musammât Alimon in whose favour a particular alienation had been made, and the other daughters were neither privies to that suit nor in any way interested in the result of that litigation. The finding given in that suit is, therefore, binding only on Musammât Alimon, but this alone does not help the plaintiffs in the least, as in order to succeed they must prove a right superior to that of the other daughters as well, which, however, they are unable to do in view of the decision arrived at in suit No. 42 of 1892 from which no appeal was preferred, and which was allowed to become final. Musammât Alimon can certainly say that though she may not have the right to succeed in view of the previous decision against her it is not the plaintiff's who can question that right, and that as long as Musammât Nuran and Musammât Basso or any of their representatives are alive, they have no cause of action to maintain the suit. In our opinion the plaintiffs are clearly estopped by the rule of res judicata from denying the rights of the daughters, and their suit must fail.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Government of India Act (5 and 6, Geo. V, C. 61) s. 107—Application by stranger to expunge passages in judgment of lower Court—Jurisdiction of High Court.

The High Court has no power under section 107 of the Government of India Act to order the expunging of passages in the judgment of a Subordinate Court at the instance of a person not a party to the suit.

The High Court in this case refused to grant a petition to expunge certain paragraphs in the judgment of a Subordinate Court on the ground that they contained language misrepresenting the conduct of a Vakil and damaging to him.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer, A. Krishnaswami Iyer, K. Balasubrahmani Iyer, for the Petitioners.

ORDER.—We are asked in these petitions to direct that a paragraph be expunged from the order of the District Munsif of Kallakurichi on the ground that it contains language misrepresenting the conduct of a Vakil, petitioner before us, and damaging to him. I have already expressed my views on the jurisdiction of this Court to make such an order in In re Krishnaswami Aiyangar (1), and I have been shown and now see no reason for changing them. Very little further in the way of authority has now been referred to. In fact, we have been shown no instance in which this power has been exercised by this or any other Court not mentioned in the case just referred to. I observe that Civil Revision Petition No. 1396 of 1916 is not an instance of the exercise of this power and was referred to as such only owing to the unfortunate misdescription of the case in the judicial index of this Court in Civil Revision Petition No. 888 of 1916 and A. A. O. Nos. 205 and 206 of 1914; also neither of the learned Judges in fact expressed any opinion in favour of the use of the power unless in most exceptional cases.

With these observations I again reach the same conclusion as in my previous decision and, for the same reasons, I would therefore dismiss the Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 848 of 1922 and Civil Revision Petition No. 193 of 1922.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VII of 1885), s. 60—proprietary Ijaradar—Entire estate—Rent payable to two Proprietors—Rent payable to third person—Object of section—Land Registration Act (VII of 1876), ss. 78, 81, applicability of.

Section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act deals with cases where rent is due to the proprietor of an estate. An Ijaradar is not a proprietor, his case, therefore, is not covered by the section.

Although a proprietor may be the owner of an estate or a part of an estate, section 60 merely speaks of "proprietor of that estate," which indicates an entire estate. Therefore, none of the several persons, who are individually registered as proprietors of the fractional share of an estate, is proprietor of the estate.

The case where rent is payable to two or more proprietors, the extent of whose interest is required to be registered under the second part of section 78 of the Land Registration Act, is not dealt with by section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The words "that the rent is due to a third person," in the concluding portion of section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, refer to a third person whose name is not registered at all.

PROBODH CHANDRA v. HARISH CHANDRA.

The object of section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is to afford indemnity to tenants who pay rent to the person whose name is registered under the Act, and to debar them from pleading in defence to a claim for rent by such person that the rent is due to a third person; but the section has not provided for cases where the names of all the part proprietors have been registered under the Land Registration Act.

Section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not concerned with questions of title.

Section 81 of the Land Registration Act has no application to a person who is not himself a proprietor, but who has an interest subordinate to a proprietor.

Section 78 of the Land Registration Act has no application to the case of a person to whom rent has been assigned by a proprietor whose name has not been registered under the Act.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge of Zillah 24 Pargannas, dated the 14th of April 1919, affirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 4th Court of that district, dated the 17th of September, 1917.

Babu Bijan Kumar Mukherjee, for Appellant.

Babu Ram Ch. Mozumdar, B. Harendra Kumar Sarbadhichary, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal was heard once before [see the judgment reported in (1)] but as the judgment proceeded partly upon a concession made by the pleader for the appellant, the judgment was set aside on review, and the appeal has been heard again.

The appeal arises out of a suit for rent under the following circumstances: One Purna was the proprietor of an estate in the Sunderbuns. He sold an 8-annas share of the estate to one Chandranath on the 9th August 1897. The latter got his name registered in respect of the 8 annas share under the Land Registration Act. About six years afterwards, on 12th May 1903, the defendant No. 1 took a lease of 400 bighas of land from Purna alone and executed a registered kabuliat in his favour agreeing to pay a fixed rent of Rs. 350. He appears to have paid rent for some years to Purna alone. Purna died leaving two sons and the plaintiff is the Ijara ar of an 8-annas share of the estate from the sons of Purna, whose names were registered in respect of the 8-annas share. The plaintiff brought a suit against the defendant for the rent reserved in the lease. The defendant pleaded that he had paid an 8-annas share of the rent to the representative of Chandranath who was registered as proprietor of an 8 annas share of the estate under the Land Registration Act and that, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to rent in respect of the 16-annas share. The Courts below have given effect to this contention and the plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

Now, the name of Purna was registered under the Land Registration Act in respect of 8-annas share; and, although the name of Chandranath was registered in respect of the other 8 annas share, he had nothing to do with the lease which was granted by Purna alone and without reference to his co-sharer Chandranath. It appears that the land was not cultivated at the time when it was let out as it was to be held rent-free for the first few years. The position, therefore, was this: one of the co-sharers alone let out a portion of the land of the estate in order to make a profitable use of it by bringing it under cultivation through his tenant. Whether Chandranath had similarly let out other lands or not, and what the arrangement was between the co-sharers, we do not know. But this much is certain that Chandranath had nothing to do with this lease of 400 bighas.

The first question for consideration is whether the provisions of section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act are applicable to the present case. That section lays down that where rent is due to the proprietor, manager, or mortgagee of an estate the receipt of the person registered under the Land Registration Act, 1876, as proprietor, manager or mortgagee of that estate or of his agent authorised in that behalf, shall be a sufficient discharge for the rent, and the person liable for the rent shall not be entitled to plead in defence to a claim by the person so registered that the rent is due to any third person. We are of opinion that section 60 does not apply to the present case. In the first place, that section deals with cases where rent is due to the proprietor of an estate. Here the rent is not due to the proprietor as the plaintiff is not a proprietor, but is an Ijaradar, and as Ijaradar the plaintiff could not get his name registered under the Land Registration Act. In the next place, even assuming that the rent can be said to be due to a proprietor because it was originally payable to Purna who was a proprietor, the section speaks of the proprietor of an estate, and "the receipt of the person who is registered under the Land Registration Act as proprietor of that estate." Purna, to whom the rent was originally due under the kabuliat, executed by the defendant, was, and after his death his sons were, the proprietors of an 8-annas share of the estate. Chaudranath, and after his death his representatives to whom the defendant is said to have paid a moiety of the rent and from whom he obtained a receipt therefor, are registered as the proprietors of another 8-annas share of the estate. So that neither Purna's sons, nor the representatives of Chaudranath are the proprietors of an estate.

No doubt, "proprietor" is defined in section 3, clause (2) as a person owning an estate or part of an estate, and it is contended that Chandra nath who was the owner of an 8-annas share of the estate is a "proprietor." But section 60 lays down that the receipt of the person registered under the Land Registration Act "as proprietor of that estate" shall be a sufficient discharge, so that, although a proprietor may be the owner of an estate or a part of an estate, the section merely speaks of proprietor of that estate which indicates an entire estate. The same observations apply to the sons of Purna from whom the plaintiff obtained his ijara.

The expression "proprietor" is defined in section 3 (8) of the Land Registration Act as every person being in possession of an estate or of any interest therein, and section 78 of that Act lays down: "No person shall be bound to pay rent to any person claiming such rent as proprietor or manager of an estate or revenue-free property in respect of which he is required by this Act to cause his name to be registered or as mortgagee unless the name of such claimant shall have been registered under this Act; and no person being liable to pay rent to two or more such proprietors, managers or mortgagees holding in common tenancy shall be bound to pay to any one such proprietor, manager or mortgagee more than the amount which bears the same proportion to the whole of such rent as the extent of the interest in respect of which such proprietor, manager or mortgagee is registered bears to the entire estate or revenue-free property".

It appears, therefore, that the case where rent is payable to two or more proprietors the extent of whose interest is required to be registered under the Land Registration Act, and which is dealt with in the second part of section 78 of that Act, is not dealt with by section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The words "that the rent is due to a third person" in the concluding portion of section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act seem to refer to a third person whose name is not registered at all. The object of section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act appears to be, to afford indemnity to tenants who pay rent to the person whose name is registered under the Act, and to debar them from pleading in defence to a claim for rent by such person that the rent is due to a third person; but the section does not appear to have provided for cases where the names of all the part proprietors have been registered under the Land Registration Act.

In the case of Abdul Aziz v. Kanthu Malik (1), it was held that "an unregistered part proprietor of an estate is not entitled to succeed as against the defendant who, relying upon section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, has established that his debt has been discharged by payment of rent to the registered proprietor." In that case the name of the part proprietor (the plaintiff) was not registered, and it was pointed out by the learned Judges that there was no contest between two persons both of whom were registered as proprietors under the Act. What the precise position might have been if there had been a contest between two persons both of whom were registered under the Act was not considered in that case.

As already stated, although the name of Chandra nath was registered in respect of an 8 annas share of the estate he had nothing to do with the lease which was granted by Purna alone, and without reference to him. The land was not cultivated at the time of the lease, Purna as a co-owner could have himself cultivated the land and if, in order to make a profitable use of the lands, a portion (400 bighas) of the estate consisting of 4,000 bighas was let out by him to his tenant, without any denial of Chandranath's right, Chandranath would not necessarily be entitled to a share of the rent merely on the ground of his being a co-sharer. It is true, that section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not concerned with questions of title, but if the defendant claims a discharge for the rent by reason of his payment to the heirs of Chandranath, he must bring his case strictly within the terms of the section, when he wants to defeat the suit for rent based upon a lease which he obtained from Purna alone, without reference to Chandranath, although the latter at that time had become co-owner of the estate to the extent of 8-annas.

The next question is whether the provisions of the Land Registration Act are applicable to the case. We have already referred to section 78 of that Act, the second paragraph of which lays down that, "no person being liable to payment to two or more such proprietors.....holding in common tenancy shall be bound to pay any one such proprietor.....more than the amount which bears the same proportion to the whole of such rent as the extent of the interest in respect of which such proprietor.....is registered bears to the entire estate....." Section 79 provides that that the receipt of any proprietor.....whose name and the extent of whose interest is registered under this Act shall afford full indemnity to any person paying rent to such proprietor. It is contended on behalf of the respondent that, having regard to the provisions of section 78 (second paragraph), the defendant would not be bound to pay more than an 8 annas share of the rent to the plaintiff, and under section 79 the receipt of the heir of Chandranath whose names are registered with respect to an 8 annas of the estate, would afford full indemnity in respect to such share.

Section 81, however, provides: "Nothing contained in the three last preceeding sections shall be held to interfere with the conditions of any written contract." In the present case there was a written contract under which the entire rent was due to Purna and his successors. There is some difference of opinion as to the construction to be placed upon section 81 of the Act. See Iswar Chandra Sera

v. Kali Charan Santra (3), and Surja Kanta Ghatak v. Ananda Mohan Chatterjee (4).

In our judgment before review, we followed the latter case treating the ijaradar as being in the same position as a proprietor, on the assumption that he is merely an assignee of the rent from the proprietor. But it is contended on behalf of the respondent that the plaintiff as ijaradar is merely a lessee, and that section 81 has no application to a person who is not himself a proprietor but who has an interest subordinate to a proprietor. We think this contention is correct. The plaintiff is a lessee under the proprietor. Section 81 seems to be a rider to sections 78 to 80, and as those sections deal with the case of proprietors, there is no reason to think that section 81 refers to cases of persons other than a proprietor. It is unnecessary, therefore, to consider this question of construction of section 81. But in that view neither section 78 nor 79 applies to the present case, as the plaintiff is an ijaradar and not a proprietor. In the case of Sukurulla Kari v. Bama Sundari Dasi, (5) it was held upon a construction of section 3, clause 1, sections 38 and 78 of Act VII of 1876, that a patnidar or an ijaradar is not a proprietor of an interest in an estate within the meaning of the Land Registration Act, and it is not necessary, therefore, for a patnidar or ijaradar to register his name under the Act to entitle him to sue. In the case of Syed Serapat Hossain v. Tarini Prosad Dobey (6), it was held that section 78 has no application to the case of a person to whom rent has been assigned by a proprietor whose name has not been registered under the Act. It may be said that if the proprietor himself was, under the section, under a legal disability to claim the rent, because his name was not registered, he could not, simply by granting a lease confer upon the lessee a right higher than what he possessed. This was considered in that case and the learned Judges (though with some hesitation) observed as follows: "Having regard to the fact that section 78 of Act XII of 1876 is the only provision which prohibits a proprietor from bringing a suit for recovery of rent against a person who is not bound to pay him such rent unless he gets his name registered it seems to us that the plaintiff, being a person who does not come within this prohibitory section, cannot be said to be under the same legal disability as his assignor was." Having regard to the fact that the section in terms refers only to proprietors and not to lessees who are not required to get, and cannot get their names registered under the Land Registration Act, we agree with the view taken in the above case. On behalf of the respondents we were referred to an unreported decision of this Court in certain suits in which payment of an 8-annas share of the rent to Chandra nath's representatives was held to be a sufficient discharge for the rent. (See Second Appeal 1388 of 1918 and analogous cases decided by Teunon and Newbould, JJ., on 25th June 1920). Those cases, however, did not relate to the rent of the 400 bighas covered by the kabuliat in the present case, but related to other lands though of the same estate, and the questions considered by us do not appear to have been considered by the learned Judges in those cases.

We are accordingly of opinion (being the same which we held before review, though on different grounds) that the decrees of the Courts below should be set aside and the case remanded to the Court of first instance for decision of the other questions in the case and disposal of the case according to law. Costs to abide the result.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Alienation by father—Necessity, proof of—Delay in suing, effect of—Antecedent debt contracted on security of ancestral property, validity of.

Where a plaintiff challenges an alienation after the expiry of a long time, his conduct in instituting the suit after a long delay is an important factor in determining the nature of the transaction and in finding out whether the alienation was or was not for necessity.

Where an alienation is effected to pay off an antecedent debt, it is not the duty of the alienee to make an enquiry into the nature and necessity thereof.

An independent debt, which is neither illegal nor immoral, contracted by a Hindu father on the security of joint family estate, is an antecedent debt.

A Hindu father has power to alienate the joint family property for an antecedent debt where such antecedent debt has been contracted on the security of the family property.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 24th July 1922, affirming that of the Munsif 1st class, Ambala, dated the 15th and 18th April 1922, dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., for Appellant.

Dr. G.C. Narang, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case giving rise to this second appeal are very simple and may shortly be stated as follows:—

On the 13th of September 1907 the plaintiff's father Nanak Chand sold the land in dispute to the defendants for a sum of Rs. 700. On the 20th of August 1919 the plaintiff brought the present suit for a declaration that the sale was without consideration and legal necessity and that it shall not affect his reversionary rights after the death of his father. Both the Courts below have concurrently held that the land sold was ancestral qua the plaintiff and that the sale was for consideration and legal necessity. As a result of this finding the suit has been dismissed in its entirety, and the plaintiff has now come up in second appeal to this Court.

It appears that, at the time when the sale was made, another plot of land also owned by the plaintiff's father was under mortgage with one Ghasi for a sum of Rs. 614-1-0 and that the present sale was effected in order to pay off this mortgage. It is argued by Mr. Badri Das that the learned District Judge has given no finding as to the area which was under mortgage with Ghasi, that it has not been shown that that mortgage could not have been redeemed by making another mortgage in favour of the defendants in respect of the land in suit, and that it has not been proved that the alienation in question was an act of prudence or of good management on the part of the plaintiff's father. Dr. Gokal Chand, on the other hand, contends, that the finding as to necessity is clearly a finding of fact and that it cannot be impugned in second appeal. I think there is force in this contention and that it must prevail. The statement of Ghasi clearly shows that he was the mortgagee of a certain plot of land near the village abadi and that the land sold to the defendants was of a much inferior quality to that which was under mortgage with him. It is also in evidence that by the sale in favour of the defendants Ghasi had been paid off and that the land under mortgage with him had been redeemed. The mere fact that the area of land which was under mortgage with Ghasi is not known is not sufficient in my opinion to prove that the sale in favour of the defendants was without necessity. It is also clear from the evidence that the defendants had expended a large amount of money in improving the land in suit and that the plaintiff, who is now about 25 years of age and lived in the same village, was fully cognisant of those improvements. It should also be noted that the suit was instituted shortly before the period of limitation was going to expire, and though there is no doubt that the suit is within limitation, yet the conduct of the plaintiff in instituting the suit after such a long time is an important factor in determining the nature of the transaction and in finding out whether the alienation was or was not for necessity. It is clear that the alienation was effected to pay off an antecedent debt and, as held in Jhandu v. Niamat Khan (1), it was not the duty of the alienee to make an inquiry into the nature and necessity thereof. In my opinion the necessity as to this alienation has been fully established and no objection can validly be taken to this finding in this appeal.

Next, it is argued on the authority of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (3) that a debt contracted on the security of ancestral property is not an antecedent debt, the discharge of which would constitute a legal necessity within the meaning of the Full Bench ruling Devi Ditta v. Saudagar Singh (2) with this contention I am unable to agree. The Privy Council case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (3) was explained in a Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court reported as Arumugham Chetty v. Mulhu Koundan (4), and it was there held that an independent debt, which was neither illegal nor immoral, contracted by a father on the security of joint family estate, antecedent to a mortgage sued on, was an antecedent debt so as to support a charge on the sons' shares also to the extent of the sums secured on the prior mortgage. The rule of law is well settled that a Hindu father has power to alienate the joint family property for an antecedent debt where such antecedent debt has been contracted on the security of the family property, and this rule is not affected in any way whatever by the observations of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2). I overrule the objection and am of opinion that the learned District Judge was right in holding that the sale was for valid necessity.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Mr. C. V. Ananta Krishnier, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We have heard arguments in this case at considerable length, both as to the age of the appellant and also on the law applicable to the case, as it was presented to the lower Court, on the footing that the execution proceedings and the sale went through without his being impleaded as a major, although he had become a major prior to the date on which the sale was held. We, however, need not deal at length with those arguments, because two other considerations, to which apparently the lower Court attached very little weight, are in our opinion decisive.

The argument that the appellant ought to have had notice and that the failure to give him notice entitles him to have the sale set aside can only hold good, if he is entitled to notice under some provision of law. The provision relied on is O. XXI, r. 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The argument for the appellant proceeded on the footing that either because more than one year had elapsed between the various applications for execution or because his attainment of majority brought him within the provision regarding the making of the application against a legal representative of the judgment-debtor, he was entitled to notice. But in fact, as reference to the B diary shows, that Execution Petition No. 947 of 1919 on which the sale was held, was presented within one year of the previous application, E. P. No. 1142 of 1918, and that was within one year of the decree. The contention that the application was or could be regarded as having been made against the legal representative of the judgment-debtor after the 2nd defendant attained his majority is clearly unsustainable. The second defendant was the judgment-debtor and there was no question of representation in connection with his being entitled to come before the Court, not through a guardian but in his own person. Certainly, a major who is entitled to appear to the exclusion of the guardian appointed during his minority is not within the definition of "legal-representative" under section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. On this ground alone the appeal might be dismissed.

There is, however, another ground for the same conclusion. It is found by the lower Court that the appellant became aware of the decree under execution and the execution proceedings, certainly in February or March 1920. That is not disputed and it could not be. For on 14th April 1920 he filed a suit for a declaration that the decree was not binding on him. Along with the suit he filed a petition for stay of the sale, that petition being dismissed on the date on which the sale was held, 20th April 1920. All this was done in the Court in which execution was proceeding. It is clear that the petitioner was perfectly aware of the proceedings. Yet he did not think fit to appear in them or to ask the Court to deal with the objections to them. The case is then covered by Ramachari v. Duraiswami Pillai (1); Tanguthurai Jagannatham v. Seshagiri Rao (2); Krishnaswamy Aiyangar v. Seerikutti Ganapathy Aiyar (3); and Radha Krishnaswami Naidu v. Annamalai Chettiar (4). The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

A Probate Court has no jurisdiction to deal with title to property covered by a testamentary instrument. Therefore, title to property cannot be abandoned by a compromise decree passed by a Probate Court in accordance with the terms of the compromise, nor can such abandonment, whether stated orally or written in the petition of compromise, destroy title to immoveable property exceeding Rs. 100 in value, unless there is a registered conveyance.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for recovery of possession of land upon establishment of title. The disputed property belonged to one Prannath Chakrabarty who left three sons, Bisweswar, Panchanon and Baroda. Baroda died childless with the result that the one-third share which he had taken by right of inheritance became vested in his two brothers. Thereafter Panchanon died, leaving a widow who is the plaintiff in this litigation. The surviving brother, Bisweswar, subsequently died, after he had made a testamentary disposition of his properties. An application was made by the defendant for probate of his Will. The application was opposed by the plaintiff. On the 24th August, 1912 the parties to the probate proceedings came to terms and a week later the probate was granted, inasmuch as the lady withdrew her opposition.

On the 7th June 1918, the lady instituted the present suit to recover possession of the one-half share of the property which belonged to her husband. Prima facie, there is no answer to the claim. The husband of the plaintiff was unquestionably entitled to one-half share which upon his death was taken by his widow by right of inheritance. The defendant, who claims under the Will of Bisweswar, resists the action on the ground that, by reason of events which had happened in the probate proceedings, the lady was not competent to maintain her claim. The Subordinate Judge overruled this contention and decreed the suit. Upon appeal, the District Judge has taken a different view and has dismissed the suit. We are of opinion that the view taken by the District Judge cannot be supported.

The appellant has urged that as the property in dispute exceeds Rs. 100 in value, the undoubted title of the plaintiff could have been transferred by her only in accordance with the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, namely, by means of a registered conveyance. In support of this view reference has been made to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Maung Shew Go v. Maung Inn (1), which was applied in Gangaram Rama v. Sakharam (2). As there is no registered conveyance in this case, the title, prima facie, continues in the plaintiff.

There is no further allegation that the plaintiff agreed, at any time, to convey to the defendant her interest in the estate of her husband. No question can thus arise as to a possible right of the defendant to claim specific performance of an agreement to sell. There is, consequently, no room for the application of the doctrine of Walsh v. Lonsdale (3), as explained in Hari Pada Ghose v. Nirod Krishna Ghose (4), and Aminullah Chowdhury v. Mahabat Ali (5). That principle is that when, in pursuance of an agreement to transfer property, the intended transferee has taken possession, though the requisite legal documents have not been executed and registered, the position is the same as if the documents had been executed, provided that specific performance can be obtained between the parties to the agreement in the same Court and at the same time as the subsequent legal question falls to be determined.

As a last resort, the defendant has invoked the aid of the doctrine of estoppel. Our attention has been drawn to the petition of compromise filed in the probate proceedings on the 28th August, 1912. The terms of that petition are as follows :

"(1) Having come to know that the Will is a genuine one, the opposite party has given up the objection she previously filed against the Will; (2) the opposite party or her husband had no interest in respect of the property described in the Will, and, in future, she will not be entitled to lay any claim thereto; if she prefers any such claim, it will not be accepted; (3) the opposite party will be entitled to occupy half the homestead described in the Will during her lifetime, but she will not be entitled to make a gift of it or to sell it or to transfer it otherwise. Neither the petitioner nor his heirs or representatives shall be entitled to exercise any acts of possession during the life-time of the opposite party, but after the death of the opposite party, that property will revert to the possession of the petitioner. The heirs or representatives of the opposite party shall not be entitled to raise any objection to such a course; (4) no costs remain due by any of the parties to the other."

We have been informed that the decree was made in the probate proceedings in accordance with these terms; but the decree could not possibly decide any question of title to the property covered by the Will. It was ruled by this Court in the case of Behary Lal v. Juggomohan (6), which was followed in Jagadindra v. Madhusudan (7), that a Probate Court has no jurisdiction to deal with title to property covered by a testamentary instrument. Sir Richard Garth, C. J., stated that upon a bona fide application for probate of a Will it is not the province of the Court to which the application is made to go into questions of title with reference to the property which the Will purports to dispose. The position, consequently, is that at the worst the plaintiff abandoned her claim to the estate of her husband. But the abandonment, whether orally stated or recited in the petition, could not destroy her title and we have not been able to discover how the principle of estoppel can assist the respondent. We are of opinion that the defendant has no answer to the suit and the Subordinate Judge rightly decreed the claim.

The result is that the decree of the District Judge is set aside and that of the Subordinate Judge restored with costs in all the Courts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. V, r. 1, O. IX, r. 8—Date fixed for plaintiff to attend and find out date of hearing—Absence of plaintiff—Dismissal for default, legality of—Procedure.

Where no date has been fixed for the appearance of the defendant within the meaning of O. V, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court has no power to dismiss the suit in default under O. IX, r. 8 of the Code.

When a date is fixed for the plaintiff to attend and find out what date has been fixed for the appearance of the defendant, and the plaintiff fails to attend on that date, the Court ought to fix a date for the appearance of the defendant, and to proceed with the suit under O. IX, r. 8 of the Code, if on the date so fixed the plaintiff fails to put in an appearance.

Petition under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, and section 44, Act VI of 1918, as amended by Act IV of 1919, for revision of the order of the Munsif 1st Class, Gujar Khan, District Rawalpindi, dated the 19th January 1922.

JANAKI RAM VILAS NIDHI, LTD., v. OFFICIAL RECEIVER, COIMBATORE.

Nemo, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which this application for revision has arisen are briefly as follows :—

On the 16th January 1922 the plaintiff instituted a suit for the recovery of Rs. 740 on a bahi account in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Rawalpindi. The Senior Subordinate Judge made over the case to the Munsif at Gujar Khan for disposal, and ordered that the plaintiff should appear in his Court on the 18th January 1922. On the 17th January 1922 the plaintiff filed an application before the District Judge for the transfer of the said case from the Court of the Munsif at Gujar Khan to some other Court. This application was set down for hearing for the 18th January 1922 and rejected by the District Judge on that very date. On the 18th January 1922 the plaintiff failed to appear in the Court of the Munsif with the result that his suit was dismissed under Order IX, rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Code. On the 19th January 1922 the plaintiff applied under Order IX, rule 4 to the Munsif that his suit should be restored to the pending file. This petition was rejected by the Munsif on the same day on the ground that sufficient cause for plaintiffs' non-appearance on the 18th of January 1922 had not been made out.

An appeal against this order was preferred before the District Judge but rejected, as no appeal lay. The plaintiff has now filed an application for revision against the order of the Munsif at Gujar Khan rejecting his application to readmit the suit which was dismissed in default under Order IX, rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Code.

It is contended on his behalf that the procedure of the Munsif was wrong and that he had no jurisdiction to dismiss the case in default on the 18th January 1922. This contention, in my opinion, is well founded and must prevail. It has been held in Indar Singh v. Sheru (1), a case directly in point, that where no date has been fixed for the appearance of the defendant within the meaning of Order V, rule I, Civil Procedure Code, the Court has no power to dismiss the suit in default under Order IX, rule 3. It is clear that the 18th of January was not a date fixed for hearing in the case but was a date fixed for the plaintiff to attend and find out what date had been fixed for the appearance of the defendant. As held in Indar Singh v. Sheru (1), it was quite unnecessary for the plaintiff to appear on this date, and what the Court ought to have done was to fix a date for the appearance of the defendant, and to proceed with the suit under Order IX, rule 3, if on the date so fixed the plaintiff failed to put in appearance.

I accept the revision and, setting aside the order of the trial Court, direct that the suit be restored to the pending file and that it should be proceeded with in accordance with law. I make no order as to costs.

JUDGMENT.

Oldfield, J.—I agree with the judgment my learned brother is about to deliver.

Devadoss, J.—This appeal is against the order of the District Judge of Coimbatore setting aside, under section 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, a mortgage in favour of the appellant by the insolvent.

The facts of the case are:—One Sama Naicken who was a trader become involved in debt. On the 7th November 1918 he executed an hypothecation deed in favour of the appellant which is a Bank called Sri Janaki Rama Vilasa Nidhi for Rs. 6,000, the consideration for the document being Rs. 2,000 due to the Bank itself, Rs. 2,000 for paying Rama Vilas Nidhi of Pappanaickenpalayam, Puthur, and Rs. 1,000 to Idigarai Devalaya Paripalana Nidhi and Rs. 973-8-0 principal and interest due to one Kasturi Naicken, and Rs. 26 8-0 received by the mortgagor in cash. Sama Naicken, the insolvent, according to the Schedule filed by him, was indebted to the extent of Rs. 38,000 at the time of the execution of the mortgage-deed Ex. A. On 19th November 1918, Rama Vilasa Nidhi presented a petition for adjudication of Sama Naicken as insolvent and he himself presented a petition for adjudication on 28th November 1918 and he was subsequently adjudicated. The Official Receiver of Coimbatore moved the District Court to set aside the mortgage either as a voluntary transfer under section 36 or as a fraudulent preference under section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The appellant contended that it was a bona fide transaction entered into for the purpose of discharging the debt of Sama Naicken. It is urged in appeal that the onus is upon the Official Receiver to show that the intention of the insolvent was to prefer the appellant to other creditors, and Nripendra Nath v. Asutosh Ghose (1) is relied on by Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar who appears for the appellant. The law as to the burden of proof is stated clearly in Williams on Bankruptcy, 10th Edition, p. 303; "The balance of authority would seem, therefore, to be in favour of holding that the trustee must give some evidence of a view to prefer on the part of the debtor other than the mere fact that he was insolvent." In this case it is proved that the insolvent was in embarrassed circumstances, that he had debts to the extent of Rs. 38,000 at the time of insolvency and that, according to his own showing, his assets amounted to Rs. 25,000 of which Rs. 16,000 was in the shape of cotton with one Kuppusami Naidu, and it has not been proved that that quantity of cotton was property in the order and disposition of the insolvent, or that the Official Receiver was able to get the cotton or its value from Kuppusami Naidu. There is no evidence that the appellant Bank either pressed for payment of his debt or that there was any strong motive which could influence the insolvent to give a mortgage in favour of the appellant and which could not be attributable to his intention to prefer. The question whether the rest of the consideration, namely Rs. 4,000, was paid by the Bank bona fide, in order to sustain the transaction entered into with a person who was on the brink of insolvency is not free from doubt. It was contended, and I think rightly, that though the evidence may be taken to establish that the insolvent had an intention to prefer Rama Vilas Bank, the Idigarai Bank and Kasturi Naicken, his maternal uncle, that would not vitiate the transaction in favour of the appellant. If money is raised by pledging property for the purpose of paying creditors, whatever may be the view of the mortgagor in paying the creditors, if the mortgagee acts bona fide the transaction would be valid against the Official Receiver. So far as Rs. 4,000 is concerned, the transaction cannot be impeached as a fraudulent preference because it was not a debt due to the mortgagee, but it was cash got from the mortgagee for paying certain creditors of the insolvent, it may be with a view to prefer them. Therefore, so far as that amount is concerned, section 54 of the present Provincial Insolvency Act can have no application. But the question is whether the transaction offends against section 53 of the present Act or section 36 of the previous Act. In this connection, a few facts have to be considered. As I have said, Exhibit A was executed on 7th November 1918. Application for loan was made on 3th November 1918 and the report as regards the sufficiency of the security was made on the same day by the Secretary of the Bank. The insolvent's father was one of the directors of the appellant Bank and, according to the appellant's first witness, "Rama Naicken, the Director who has sanctioned the loan in Exhibit II, is insolvent's father." Exhibit II is the application by the insolvent to the appellant-Bank for the loan of Rs. 6,000. One Narayana Naicken filed a suit, O. S. No. 97 of 1918, against the insolvent and presented an application on 11th November 1918 for a temporary injunction restraining the appellant-Bank from paying the mortgage amount of Rs. 6,000 to Sama Naicken's creditors till the disposal of the suit. The appellant-Bank objected to the injunction on the ground that the appellant was not a party to the suit and that no injunction could, therefore, issue against one who was not a party to the suit. The District Munsif cancelled the temporary injunction on 3rd December 1918. The Rama Vilas Bank presented a petition on 19th November 1918 for the adjudication of Sama Naicken as insolvent and he himself presented a petition for the same purpose on 28th November 1918. The appellant-Bank paid through its Vakil by insured post Rama Vilas Bank Rs. 2,000 on 18th December 1918 and Idigarai Bank Rs. 1,000 on 16th February 1918. Under section 16 (6) of the Provincial Insolvency Act "an order of adjudication shall relate back to and take effect from the date of the presentation of the petition on which it is made." The payments by the appellant-Bank to the creditors of Sama Naicken after the presentation of the Insolvency Petition upon which an order of adjudication is made would not be valid against the Official Receiver. The property of the insolvent, by reason of the principle of relation back, on the date the insolvency petition was presented, became the property of the Official Receiver, and a payment made by the appellant-Bank to the creditors would not relieve it from its liability to pay the amount to the Official Receiver. It is not suggested that the appellant-Bank was unaware of the presentation of the insolvency petition. On the other hand, there is a statement of the 1st witness for the appellant—"We sent the money by insured post of our own accord. Before we remitted money, Rama Vilas Bank had applied to declare the debtor an insolvent." It is also in evidence that the appellant-Bank was aware that the insolvent had other debts to discharge and that he would not give security to the Rama Vilas Bank as he had a large number of debts to pay. It is not suggested that the appellant-Bank had undertaken to pay the three creditors to whom the amount of Rs. 4,000 was due and that the appellant-Bank could not, after undertaking to pay, withdraw that undertaking on hearing that Sama Naicken had presented a petition for adjudication. From the evidence it is clear that the appellant-Bank paid these sums voluntarily to the creditors of Sama Naicken. From a reading of Ex. A it is clear that the mortgage amount was to be paid to the mortgagor himself, and there is no undertaking in Ex. A that the appellant-Bank to pay directly any of the creditors of the insolvent.

Taking all these circumstances into consideration, I hold that the mortgage under Ex. A is not a bona fide transaction and is, therefore, void against the Official Receiver under section 30 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

Mr. Govindaraghava Iyer on behalf of the appellant suggested that if that was the view that would be taken, he should be given an opportunity to meet the case and that such a case was not put forward in the lower Court. The Official Receiver made his application under sections 53 and 54 of the present Act, corresponding to sections 36 and 37 of the old Act, and it cannot be said that the appellant had not an opportunity of meeting the case put forward by the Official Receiver.

The next question is, what is the order to pass. So far as Rs. 2,000 a portion of the consideration of the mortgage under Ex. A is concerned, it was with the view to prefer the appellant-Bank that security under Ex. A was given. As regards Rs. 4,000 the appellant-Bank paid the creditors knowing the circumstances evidently with the object of screening the property from the creditors and, in the circumstances, it cannot be said to be acting bona fide in paying the creditors of the insolvent after an application for adjudication was made. The order of the learned District Judge is confirmed with the variation that the transaction is void under section 30 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The Official Receiver may take any action he thinks proper against the Rama Vilas Bank, Idigarai Bank and Kasturi Naicken who have been paid in full by the insolvent. The attention of the Official Receiver is drawn to In re Payne, Ex-parte Read (2) and In re Blackpool Motor Car Co., Ltd., Hamilton v. Blackpool Motor Car Company Limited (3).

Hindu Law—Joint family—Suit by father to recover possession of family land, nature of—Co-parceners, whether bound by result of suit.

The question whether a Hindu father represents his co-parceners in a particular litigation is a question to be decided with reference to the circumstances of each case. [p. 20, col. 2.]

There is a great difference between the case of a Hindu father suing in respect of contracts which the Mitakshara law empowers him as manager to make on behalf of the family and a father suing in respect of rights in immoveable property, rights which he can only hold equally with his co-parceners. At the same time, the right of the father and of the Manager to represent the joint family in the latter class of suits has been recognised traditionally in the Courts. Where the interest of a joint undivided family is in issue and one member of that family has prosecuted a suit or has defended a suit, and a decree has been made in that suit, that decree may afterwards be considered as binding upon all the members of the family, their interest being taken to have been sufficiently represented by the party in the original suit. [p. 20, col. 2, p. 21, Col. 1.]

A suit by a Hindu father for recovery of possession of land alleged to belong to the joint family must be deemed to be a representative suit on behalf of all the co-parceners and the latter are bound by the result of the suit. [p. 21, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Foster, J.—The facts of this case are as follows :—Hukum Mahto is the father of four sons and they form a joint Mitskhara family. In the course of a revisional record of rights in their village the defendants were recorded as the raiyats in possession of 10 kathas 2 dhurs, the property now in dispute. That property had admittedly once belonged to the uncle of Hukum Mahto and it is the defendants' case that they acquired the same by purchase. In the course of the Settlement operations a larger area, including this 10 kathas, 2 dhurs, had been at first recorded in the name of Hukum Mahto's son Makhoo Mahto. When the ultimate decision of the Settlement authorities was against the plaintiff, Hukum Mahto and his son Makhoo Mahto brought a suit for the following reliefs, stated briefly :—

A declaration that the record of rights is incorrect, recovery of possession and mesne profits.

The plaint is not on the record of this present case but it appears to be agreed between the parties that this is a correct statement of what happened. For some reason or other, in the course of that suit Hukum Mahto and Makhoo Mahto as plaintiffs applied for leave to withdraw the suit with permission to bring a fresh suit. The order on this application was passed on the 1st November 1919 to the following effect :—

"The plaintiffs are to pay the defendant his costs within one month from this date. On failure the suit will stand dismissed".

The plaintiffs did not deposit the costs in Court within the appointed period, nor were the costs in fact paid till about eight months subsequently. On the 10th November 1919, that is, nine days after the order I have quoted, the present suit was instituted for the same reliefs as those of the previous suit and on the same cause of action; the only distinction in the form of the suit being that the plaintiffs were no longer only Hukum Mahto and his eldest son, but were Hukum Mahto and all his four sons. The defendant resisted the suit on the ground that the costs not having been paid within one month in the previous suit and that suit having in consequence been dismissed, the plaintiffs were debarred from bringing a fresh suit on the same cause of action. On the other hand, the plaintiffs stated that whatever may be the effect of the order as against Hukum Mahto and Makhoo Mahto, the right of the other plaintiffs who sued remained unaffected by the dismissal of the previous suit. The Munsif dismissed the present suit. In appeal to the Subordinate Judge this decision was upheld on the ground that in the previous suit Hukum Mahto sued not only for himself but in a representative capacity as manager on behalf of his three younger sons. This is the decision upon the correctness of which I have to pass judgment.

The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code that are pertinent to the question are sections 10 to 12 and Order XXIII, rule 1. Section 10 has only an unimportant bearing upon the question because it only affects the position of Hukum Mahto during the period between the 10th November 1919 when he filed the present suit and the 1st December 1919 when his suit became dismissed; during that period the previous suit must be considered to have been pending. Under clause (3) of Order XXIII, rule 1 it is provided that, where the plaintiff withdraws from a suit without permission to bring a fresh suit he shall.....be precluded from instituting any fresh suit in respect of such subject-matter. Section 11 provides that no Court shall try any suit in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties.....litigating under the same title in a Court competent to try such subsequent suit and has been heard and finally decided by such Court; and section 12 provides that, where a plaintiff is precluded by rules from instituting a further suit in respect of any particular cause of action, he shall not be entitled to institute a suit in respect of such cause of action in any Court to which the Code applies.

The principal question in deciding this appeal appears to me to be whether Hukum Mahto in the previous suit represented his three younger sons. If he did represent them then they would undoubtedly have reaped the benefit of any decree obtained by him and it would be irrational to suppose that in those circumstances they would not also suffer the ill effects of the representative's failure in the suit. So, if Hukum Mahto was their representative and if he was precluded by the order of the Court from bringing a fresh suit, that order must debar the three younger sons just as much as their father. Against the contention that he was a representative it may be argued that there is nothing on the record that expressly shows that he sued as a representative and it may be argued that if he was suing as manager of the joint family, where was the necessity to join Makhoo, the eldest son, as co-plaintiff? In respect of the latter contention, a ready answer suggests itself, namely, that Makhoo's name stood in the record of rights before the dispute in the course of Settlement which resulted in the present cause of action. The question whether a Hindu father represents his co-parceners is a question to be decided with reference to the circumstance of each case. There is a great difference between the case of a Hindu father suing in respect of contracts which the Mitakshara Law empowers him as manager to make on behalf of the family and a father suing in respect of rights in immoveable property, rights which he can only hold equally with his coparceners. At the same time, the right of the father and of the manager to represent the joint family in the latter class of suits has been recognised traditionally in the Courts. Where the interest of a joint undivided family is in issue and one member of that family has prosecuted a suit or has defended a suit, and a decree has been made in that suit, that decree may afterwards be considered as binding upon all the members of the family, their interest being taken to have been sufficiently represented by the party in the original suit. This practice of the Courts has been referred to in Jogendra Deb Roy v. Funindro Deb Roy (1). The question whether a manager of a joint Hindu family is competent to bring a suit under the Bengal Tenancy Act was raised in the case of Muhammad Sadiq v. Khedari Lal (2), but not decided. It was, however, decided that there was nothing to prevent such a manager from bringing a suit to recover possession of proprietor's private land. The present suit in regard to this first relief is obviously one which the plaintiff is empowered to make by virtue of section 111 A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Such a relief can, of course, be claimed by any member of a joint Mitakshara family. But the second relief is for recovery of possession of land alleged to belong to the joint family and it follows that any coparcener who sues for such a relief as that, must be taken to be claiming to recover possession on behalf of the other members of the joint family. Therefore, from the very nature of the suit it appears to me that Hukum Mahto in the previous suit must be deemed to have been suing in a representative capacity; for, otherwise, I do not see how he could claim recovery of land from a person who alleges that he has purchased from a deceased member of the plaintiffs' family. Where a manager or the head of a family sued for such a relief as this, it is always open to the defendant under Order I, rule 13 of the Code to raise a plea of defect of parties, but if the plea is not raised at the earliest opportunity it will not affect the progress of the suit. I do not see how I can hold otherwise than that Hukum Mahto in the previous suit not only sued on his own behalf but also on behalf of those members of the joint family who had a title coincident with his own. It is noticeable that in the plaint of the present suit there is no repudiation by the younger sons of the acts done on their behalf by their father.

It is urged that the dismissal in the previous suit should be taken to be valid only against Hukum Mahto and his son Makhoo and that the three younger sons should be allowed to proceed with the suit after making Hukum Mahto and Makhoo Mahto defendants, for such relief as they are entitled to. In support of this the learned Vakil for the appellants has cited the case Gopi Lal v. Lala Naggu Lal (3). In my opinion there is no real resemblance between that case and this. In that case Gopi Lal first sued alone for a debt. It does not appear that he was a manager of the joint family to which he belonged. The other members of the joint family did not appear to have been his sons or even his younger brothers so far as we can see from the judgment. In the first suit the defendant raised a plea of non-joinder of plaintiffs and Gopi Lal obtained permission to withdraw the suit on condition that he must pay the defendants' costs before bringing a fresh suit, or else the suit would stand dismissed with costs. Gopi Lal joined these other two persons as plaintiffs, namely, Mewa Lal and Shamraj, and filed a fresh suit before paying the costs. It was held that Gopi Lal could no longer sue and should be joined as defendant, but the rights of the other two plaintiffs were not affected by the previous decision.

There was no question of representation in the case.

For these reasons I hold that Hukum Mahto and Makhoo Mahto are precluded from bringing the present suit and that the three younger sons are equally precluded inasmuch as their father and their representative is debarred. For these reasons I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Order XXII, rule 9 (2), of the Civil Procedure Code is confined to cases in which abatement takes place by reason of an application not having been made within time to implead the legal representatives of the deceased party, and has no application to cases in which the suit abates on account of some other cause, e. g., when the Court holds that the right to sue does not survive or that the death of one of several defendants causes an abatement in toto. Niranjan Nath v. Afzal Hussain, 128 P. R. 1916, followed.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 21st June 1919.

Mr. Aziz Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals, Nos. 2355 and 2356 of 1921, arise out of the liquidation of the General Trading Company, Kahuta, and will be disposed of by one judgment. The Company which was not a limited liability company, contracted a large number of debts and went into liquidation. A Liquidator was appointed, and he called upon the shareholders to pay a certain proportion of their unpaid share money to liquidate the debts of the Company. The shareholders raised certain objections to the calls made which were disallowed. An appeal was made to the Chief Court which was accepted and the case remanded to the Court below with a direction that the total liabilities of the Company should be determined and an inquiry made into the objections raised by the contributories to their liabilities as such. It appears that Tehl Singh, one of the contributories, died before the appeal was preferred to the Chief Court. No application to bring his legal representatives on the record was made within the time prescribed by law. Tehl Singh left four sons. Two of them joined with the appellants in preferring the appeal but the others were impleaded neither as appellants nor as respondents to the appeal. In December 1918, when the case came back from the Chief Court, it was discovered that Tehl Singh had died and that no application had been made to bring his legal representatives on the record. On this defect being discovered the District Judge passed an order on the 21st of June 1918 to the effect that the proceedings against the contributories whose liability was joint, had abated in toto and that the case be consigned to the record-room. On the 7th of August 1919 the Official Liquidator applied under Order XXII, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code, for an order setting aside the abatement. This application was dismissed by the learned District Judge on the 10th of May 1921 on the ground that no such application was entertainable and that an appeal ought to have been preferred against the order of the 21st of June 1919 which was tantamount to a decree. Two appeals have been filed in this Court, one against the order of the 10th of May 1921 rejecting the application for setting aside the abatement, and the other against the order of the 21st of June 1919 holding that the proceeding had abated.

As to appeal No. 2356, which is an appeal against the order rejecting the application for setting aside the abatement, I have no hesitation in holding that the order of the learned District Judge is correct. It has been held in Niranjan Nath v. Afzal Hussain (1), that Order XXII, rule 9 (2), Civil Procedure Code, is confined to cases in which abatement takes place by reason of an application not having been made within time to implead the legal representatives of the deceased party and that it has no application to cases in which the suit has abated on account of some other cause, e. g., when the Court holds that the right to sue does not survive or that the death of one of several plaintiffs causes an abatement in toto. It has further been held that in the latter cases the orders of the Court are decrees and as such are appealable. In the present case it is clear that the learned District Judge intended to hold that the proceedings abated not only as regards Tehl Singh and his representatives but as regards the other share-holders as well. This was obviously an adjudication on the rights of the parties with respect to a matter in controversy which should have been appealed against and which clearly does not fall within the purview of Order XXII, rule 9. I agree with the learned District Judge that an application for setting aside the abatement was not competent under Order XXII, rule 9, and this appeal is, therefore, dismissed.

With regard to appeal No. 2355 a preliminary objection has been taken that the appeal is barred by limitation. For the appellant it is contended that he is entitled to the benefit of section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act inasmuch as he was prosecuting in good faith another civil proceeding in a Court which from defect of jurisdiction was unable to entertain it. I am unable to agree with this contention and am of opinion that the appeal is clearly barred by limitation. It appears from certain applications made by the Official Liquidator to the District Judge after the order of the 21st of June 1919 was pronounced that he was fully cognisant that the order was tantamount to a decree and that an appeal lay from that order to the Chief Court, he asked for permission to file an appeal and a certain amount of money was sanctioned by the District Judge for prosecuting the appeal. It is wholly inexplicable why an appeal was not filed but an application only made for setting aside the abatement under Order XXII, rule 9. I do not think that it has been made out that the appellant was prosecuting another proceeding in another Court in good faith, and I, therefore, hold that he is not entitled to the extension of time prayed for. The appeal is clearly barred by limitation and is dismissed.

USMAN AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—

ASAT, WIFE OF JUMA—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENT.

Muhammadan Law—Custom—Marwari Silawata community—Succession—Exclusion of females from inheritance—Evidence—Instances—Opinion—Burden of proof—Essentials of valid custom.

There is no custom amongst members of the Marwari Silawata community by which, in derogation of the rules of Muhammadan Law, females are excluded from inheritance.

To establish the exclusion of females from inheritance it is of vital importance to prove that some of the females asserted their rights as heirs and that their rights were denied. Mere passive acceptance of their position by females in cases where their male relations accord to them all that is necessary for their daily sustenance and their refraining from actively asserting their rights to any share in property is not enough to prove that they are excluded from inheritance.

Where females are dependent upon their male relations and subservient to their control, to establish their exclusion from inheritance, it must be satisfactorily proved that they were aware that they were excluded by reason of a custom having the force of law. [p. 26, col. 2.]

The party relying on a custom which is to have the effect of overriding the ordinary law, must prove it by clear unambiguous evidence. [p. 27, col. 1.]

A custom to be valid must be (1) immemorial, (2) reasonable, (3) continued without interruption, (4) certain. [p. 27, col. 2.]

In questions of custom evidence merely of the opinion of leading members of caste is not enough, instances must be proved in which the alleged custom has been established and proved. When the oral evidence emanates from a class of highly interested witnesses, it is of infinitesimally small value. [p. 27, col. 2.]

Per Kennedy, J. C.—Numerous instances of non-taking of inheritance by women would not be sufficient to establish the custom of their exclusion from inheritance unless it were shown that the women wished to take their share of inheritance and were refused on the ground of the custom and unless it were also shown that there were no instances to the contrary. [p. 32, col. 1.]

USMAN v. ASAT

JUDGMENT.

Raymond, A. J. C.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was originally filed by Usman Imambux by this next friend Haji Khaju against Asat, the daughter, and Rupli, the widow, of one Pira who died in 1897, for a declaration that he was the adopted son of Pira, for recovery of Pira's property both moveable and immoveable, valued at Rs. 50,000 which was in possession of Rupli, and for mutation of names. The parties belong to the Marwari community and are known as the Marwari Silawatas and evidence has been led to show that their ancestors were Hindus and residents of Jessulmer in Rajputana and were converted to Muhammadanism about 200 years ago, and after the conquest of Sind some of them migrated to Karachi and some to Hyderabad in search of employment and have settled in these places ever since. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that, even after the conversion of the Marwari Silawatas to Muhammadanism, they retained several Hindu usages, amongst them being the practice of adoption. The father of Usman is one Imambux, the son of Mubarak, who was the brother of Pira, and it is alleged that in 1907, as Imambux claimed a share in the estate of Pira under the Muhammadan Law and differences had arisen between Imambux and Rupli, they were settled on the intervention of the Marwari Panchayat by the adoption by Rupli of Usman as a son of Pira. In 1913 Rupli died and Imambux applied that he should be brought on the record as her legal representative, this application was opposed by Asat, the daughter of Rupli, but the Trial Judge directed that Imambux should be placed on the record as a defendant, leaving the determination of the question as to the legal representative of Rupli for future consideration. Imambux filed a written statement wherein he took up the position that, in the event of the adoption of Usman not being proved, he should be awarded the whole of Pira's estate as his nephew inasmuch as, according to long established usage in the Marwari Silawata community, females are excluded from inheritance, and, in the alternative if this relief be not accorded to him, he should be allotted his share in Pira's estate according to Muhammadan Law. In October 1915 the Trial Court of its own motion directed that Imambux should be made a co-plaintiff with his son Usman on the ground that "the broad question involved in the suit" is who is entitled to the property left by Pira, and that, in the event of Usman not being proved to have been adopted by Rupli, further litigation would ensue to establish the right of Imambux to the estate. Counsel for Asat strenuously objected to the introduction of Imambux as a co-plaintiff but he was overruled. The result was that, though the substantial issues so far as the claim by Usman was concerned were with regard to the factum of his adoption and the custom prevalent as to adoption in derogation of the rules of Muhammadan Law, the introduction of Imambux as a co-plaintiff necessarily rendered imperative the consideration of the further questions as to the exclusion from inheritance of females by the custom that was set up, and whether the share of Imambux in the estate of Pira was not barred by limitation. It need hardly be said that these additional points for decision considerably protracted the proceedings in the lower Court.

Now, in the appeal before us the pleader for the appellant has confined his arguments to the four issues that have been decided by the Trial Court adverse to him. They are,—

1. Whether Usman was adopted by Rupli?
2. Whether there is a custom of adoption having the force of Law among the Marwari Silawata community in derogation of the ordinary rules of Muhammadan Law?
3. Whether there is a custom excluding women from inheritance and restricting widows to maintenance and inheritance, having the force of Law among the Marwari Silawata community in derogation of the ordinary rules of Muhammadan Law?
4. Whether the claim of Imambux is barred by limitation?

I propose to first discuss the question of the adoption of Usman by Rupli.

[After discussing the evidence on the question of adoption the learned A. J. C. concluded]:—

I have discussed the factum of the adoption

at some length as it forms the crux of the case. For the reasons given above, I feel quite satisfied that plaintiffs have not proved that Usman was adopted by Rupli. This finding renders it unnecessary to consider the question as to the custom of adoption prevailing in the Marwari community to which the parties belong. The result, therefore, is that, so far as Usman is concerned, his appeal must be dismissed and the finding of the lower Court confirmed.

I now proceed to discuss the claim set up by Imambux to the estate of Pira. This claim is based on an alleged custom prevailing, it is contended, amongst members of the Marwari Silawata community by which, in derogation of the rules of Muhammadan Law, females are excluded from inheritance. It is urged that this community after its conversion to Muhammadanism retained several Hindu usages and practices, and the position which it seeks to assign to the women in the community has no parallel either in Hindu or Muhammadan Law as I shall presently point out. It is essential in the first instance to formulate accurately the custom that is set forth. After Imambux was brought on the record as a co plaintiff an amended plaint was filed and it would be useful to reproduce paras. 1, 2, 3 of this plaint.

1. That the Marwari Silawatas were originally Hindus and after their conversion to Muhammadanism, they have retained several Hindu customs which have the force of law.

2. That according to the said customary Law, a Marwari Silawata widow is entitled only to maintenance and residence in her husband's property till her death or remarriage.

3. That according to the said customary Law all female relatives of the deceased including his daughters are altogether excluded from inheritance.

Now Pira at his death left him surviving his widow Rupli and two daughters, Asat, the wife of Jumo, and Rahimati who died before this suit was filed, also plaintiff Imambux, the son of his deceased brother Mubarak. Plaintiff's contention, therefore, is that on the death of Pira, the whole of his estate vested in him subject to Rupli's right of residence and maintenance, and Asat as a female was entirely excluded from inheritance.

Has the exclusion of females from inheritance by custom been established?

According to the custom that is sought to be established, a father would not be bound to maintain his unmarried daughter or even an infant female child nor would he be bound to provide them with residence as it is only a widow that is entitled to residence and maintenance. In fact, a widow of a member of this community takes no estate at all whether restricted or absolute for on her husband's death the estate is immediately vested in the next male relation of her husband, however remote the relationship may be, and she can only claim a right of residence and maintenance, and the other female relations, however close they may be, are rigidly excluded from all right to inheritance. The custom, therefore, that is set up in the present case does not place females of the Marwari community even on a level with females under the Hindu Law. I may further remark at this stage, in view of the custom of adoption set up in this case, that the exclusion of females from inheritance would lead to a most incongruous position as if, by reason of the alleged custom, Imambux succeeds to Pira's estate on his death, Rupli, who had the right of exercising the power of adoption without authorisation, could by adopting, divest Imambux of the estate which would then vest in the adopted son.

Substantially the same witnesses that have deposed to the adoption of Usman and to the custom of adoption prevalent have also given evidence to the exclusion of females from inheritance in this community. The oral evidence must be judged in the light of the remarks that I have made on the evidence as to adoption. The existence of the two factions in the community must not be overlooked as also the acute feeling prevailing. True, that wealth and apparent respectability have been arrayed on the side of the plaintiff's but in my opinion the oral evidence is a negligible factor and something more is required in the circumstances to establish the custom that is set forth.

Evidence has been led by the plaintiffs of a large number of instances of exclusion of females from inheritance and we have been taken by the pleader for the appellants through all of them. Several of them he himself has not ventured to press.

They are:—E. F. 25 of 871, E. F. 49 of 889, E. F. 50 of 1898, E. F. 32 of 873, E. F. 26 of 1875, E. F. 24 of 1914, E. F. 53 of 887, E. F. 29 of 1885, E. F. 28 of 1900, E. F. 34 of 1885, E. F. 35 of 1895, E. F. 45 of 1887, E. F. 15 of 1884, E. F. 5 of 1890, E. F. 75 of 1895, E. F. 58 of 1895, E. F. 8 of 1898, E. F. 10 of 1898, E. F. 77 of 1898.

Though these were pressed and considered by the Lower Court.

We did not call upon the pleader for the respondents to offer any comments on several of the remaining instances, except those to which I shall advert in detail, as we were of the same opinion as the Trial Judge. As they were of no value as instances to prove the exclusion of females from inheritance, it is unnecessary to refer to each of them in detail and give my reasons for rejecting it. They refer to instances where the property was of very little value, consisting of one or two small houses and some paltry ornaments, or where the females in the family had at their marriage received some allowance. The learned Judge of the lower Court had considered each instance in detail and given good reasons for not holding them as instances which could be of any use to establish the exclusion of females from inheritance. It is not only that the property capable of division amongst the descendants is of little value but no evidence is given which would be of vital importance that any of the females concerned did assert their right to any portion of the property left by their ancestor and that their right was denied.

The instances to which I have referred in some detail appear to me the only instances which may offer some ground for the contention that females are excluded from inheritance. Excluding from consideration those instances which have not been pressed by the pleader for the appellants the remaining instances which I have perused appear to me thoroughly inadequate as evidence of custom and I am entirely in agreement with the Judge of the Trial Court in rejecting them as instances of the custom sought to be established. They are instances where, as I have observed, the property susceptible of division is insignificant, or where the daughters have already received their share in the shape of marriage expenses or marriage presents, or where the evidence in support of the exclusion rests on the oral testimony of one person and is not of convincing character. What is of great importance is, that there is no instance forthcoming of a female having demanded her share and being resisted on the ground of her exclusion from inheritance. In Mirabivi v. Vellayana (1), the contention was that females were excluded from inheritance if sons or son's sons exist, by a special custom obtaining among the Ravuthans of Palgat who though Muhammadans had adopted the custom from the Hindu Law, it was held that the custom had not been established by the evidence and the following observations in the judgment are worthy of consideration. "In many parts of this country it is unusual for Muhammadan ladies to insist on their unquestioned rights. They will often prefer to being maintained by their brothers to taking a separate share for themselves and when they are married the marriage expenses and presents are often by express or implied agreement, taken as equivalent to the share which they could claim. Moreover Muhammadan females are so much under the influence of their male relations that the mere partition of the property among the males without reference to them cannot count for much." The last remark was accepted with approval in Bibi Sona v. Mir Hussain Khan (2). It is true that the women of the Marwari class with whom I am dealing are not strictly parda-nashin but there can be little doubt that they are so dependent upon their male relations and subservient to their control that there must be satisfactory evidence on the record that females excluded from inheritance should be aware that they are excluded by reason of a custom having the force of law.

The party relying on a custom which is to have the effect of overriding the ordinary law, must prove it by clear and unambiguous evidence, as remarked by the Privy Council in Mir Abdul Hussain v. Bibi Sona (3). Any special usage modifying the ordinary law of succession should be ancient and invariable, and certain. In this particular case we have what I may term an insignificant community consisting of about 300 families setting up a custom which, in the first place, can certainly not be described as ancient and equally not invariable for an appreciable number of this small community strenuously assail the existence of any such custom as is set out by the plaintiffs, and there is documentary evidence on the record to which I now advert which certainly throws grave doubts on the existence of the custom as set forth by the plaintiffs, apart from the instances which defendants have adduced to prove that the alleged custom is a myth.

I shall stop here, the instances that I have cited do by no means exhaust all the cases wherein females of this community have asserted their title to the property left by their relatives but I think these instances will suffice to show that the plaintiff's allegation as to the custom of excluding females from inheritance rests on a very slender basis. And what is most significant is that a considerable number of the plaintiff's witnesses, particularly those of the wealthy and apparently respectable set who in their evidence have solemnly proclaimed that according to the custom in their community females are excluded from inheritance, have been the very persons to support the declaration of females to their title to inherit property. But the documentary evidence that shatters the custom does not rest here.

It has been shown above that the instances produced by the appellants as to the exclusion of females from inheritance are so meagre as to exclude the possibility of founding a custom upon them. No doubt, there is a quantity of oral evidence adduced by the appellants, particularly of the leading men of the Marwari Silawata community who depose to the custom of the exclusion of females, but, as was observed in the case of Rahimatbai v. Hirbai (4), in questions of custom evidence merely of the opinion of the leading members of the caste is not enough, instances must be proved in which the alleged custom has been established and proved. And in Lachman Rai v. Akkar Rijan (5) it was observed that the best proof of custom is instances in which it has been acted on and documentary evidence that it has been enforced. Besides, when the oral evidence, as in this case, emanates from a class of highly interested witnesses it is of infinitesimally small value. Now, there is a fair amount of evidence on the record brought by the respondents for the purpose of establishing that females in the Marwari Silawata community have owned property and the evidence is not purely oral but in some cases has been supported by documentary evidence. The lower Court has set out these instances in detail showing daughters, son's daughters, sisters, mothers, widows and son's widows holding property. It is unnecessary in this judgment to travel over the same ground and specify the instances as they have been discussed at some length by the Trial Court. It will suffice to remark that they nullify the existence of the custom.

In Mahamay a Debi v. Haridas Haldar (6) it was observed that "for a custom to be valid it must have four essential requisites, (1) it must be immemorial, (2) it must be reasonable, (3) it must be continued without interruption since its immemorial origin, and (4) it must be certain in respect of its nature generally as well in respect of the locality where it is alleged to obtain and the persons whom it is alleged to effect. What have we here? A comparatively insignificant community consisting of about 300 to 400 families attempting to set up a custom, the earliest instance of which they can give is not beyond 1880. It is a custom which is not only in derogation of the rules of Muhammadan Law by which the parties are ordinarily governed, but is not in accordance with the Hindu Law though they profess that after their conversion to Muhammadanism they retained certain Hindu rites and usages. It would be a travesty of language to say that the custom has been uninterrupted, for the various applications to the Revenue authorities and the instances of the possession of property by females are overwhelming enough to show that the members of this very community refused to adhere to any such custom. An attempt was made in the lower Court to explain the possession and ownership of property by females on the allegation that the community in which females were permitted to hold property was the 'Mazurs' as distinguished from the community of the plaintiffs and their witnesses who are pure Silawatas. This contention was not pressed in this Court by the appellant's pleader and on evidence it seems to me that it was a desperate endeavour to formulate some explanation for the evidence which went a great way to shatter the custom set up by the plaintiffs.

In my opinion, it is impossible to hold on such evidence as has been produced that the custom of the exclusion of females has been proved and I entirely agree with the elaborate and exhaustive judgment of the lower Court on this point. There remains the question of limitation. It is contended that the claims of Imambux either for the whole property left by Pira either on the basis of the alleged custom of the exclusion of females from inheritance or for a share under the Muhammadan Law is barred by limitation. Pira as is proved died in 1897 and the suit was filed in 1912. Art. 144 of the Limitation Act applies which provides a period of 12 years from the date of the possession of the defendant becoming adverse to the plaintiff. Now if, according to the alleged custom, Imambux succeeded to the estate of Pira at his death, then the latter's estate vested in him subject only to the burden of providing residence and maintenance for Rupli, the widow; so also on the death of Pira Imambux became entitled to his share in his estate under Muhammadan Law. Admittedly, Imambux was never in possession of any part of Pira's estate which has all along continued in the possession of Rupli. I am not satisfied on the evidence that Imambux took his residence with Rupli on Pira's death in 1897 and in my opinion Rupli held the estate of Pira ever since his death to the exclusion of Imambux. It was in February 1900 that Rupli applied to the City Deputy Collector and the Karachi Municipality for the transfer of the property standing in the name of Pira to her name alone, and it was in 1901 that Rupli applied for a certificate of heirship to Pira's estate which was opposed by Imambux who applied for the grant of the certificate to himself alone.

Now, the suit filed in 1912 was by Usman alone and it was after Rupli's death that Imambux applied on the 6th August 1913 to be brought on the record as her legal representative, and he was placed on the record though the Court did not expressly find that he was the legal representative of Rupli, and Imambux filed his written statement wherein he claimed either the whole of Pira's estate to the exclusion of Rupli and Asat or his share according to Muhammadan Law. It was on the 21st October 1915 that the Court directed that Imambux should be brought on the record as a co-plaintiff and the plaint amended accordingly.

Now, the contention of the pleader for the appellant Imambux is that, though Rupli may have adopted an hostile attitude towards Pira when she applied for the transfer to her name of the property standing in Pira's name, she could only be deemed to have claimed adversely to the appellant Imambux when, on the 22nd August 1901, she first challenged his right to Pira's estate and as Imambux should be deemed to have asserted his claim on the 6th August 1913, the suit by him is in time.

Now, even if it be accepted that after Pira's death in 1897 Imambux went to live with Rupli, yet on his own showing he was driven out of the house by her in 1900 as a dispute arose between them over the property of Pira and the allegation of Imambux himself is that the dispute was settled by the adoption of Usman, therefore, in 1900 at least limitation would begin to run, and when once limitation has begun to run no subsequent disability or inability to sue stops it. Therefore, the claim of Imambux would be barred at the end of 1912. Even if a reconciliation had been effected in 1907 by the adoption of Usman the most that could be said is that the claim of Usman was recognised and not that of Imambux.

Further, I do not agree with the contention of the pleader for the appellant that Imambux should be deemed as having asserted his claim on the 6th August 1913. Mr. Kalumal relied on the case of Narsingh v. Vaman Venkatrao (7) where it was held that a party transferred to the side of the plaintiff from the side of the defendant is not a new party to whom the provisions of section 22 of the Limitation Act would apply but it must not be overlooked that the transposition of Imambux from the category of a defendant to that of a plaintiff was to bring on the record a new plaintiff with a cause of action and a relief entirely distinct from that of the original Plaintiff Usman. In fact, Imambux should never have been on the record as a co-defendant, he was not the legal representative of Rupli nor was he placed on the record in that capacity. He was placed on the record in some unaccountable way as a defendant and as by his written statement he asserted a right to Pira's property independently of Usman he was transposed as a plaintiff. The amended plaint in which Imambux claims the property of Pira as his to the exclusion of the females or in the alternative asserts his right to a share in it under the Muhammadan Law is dated the 21st October 1915 and in my opinion this should be regarded as the date when he first seeks for a declaration of his title to the property of Pira. Whether we take the date when Imam Baksh filed his written statement or the date when the amended plaint was filed the suit is in either event time barred.

* The appeal should therefore be dismissed with costs.

KENNEDY, J. C.—In the year 1897 died one Pira leaving him surviving a wife Rupli and a daughter Asat and another daughter Rahmat. The second daughter died s. p. but Asat married one Juma.

Pira had a brother named Imam Baksh and Imam Baksh had a son named Usman.

In 1913 Usman brought, through his next friend Haji Khaju Mithu, a suit to recover from Rupli and Asat the estate of Pira on the ground that he (Usman) was the adopted son of Pira, such adoption having been effected in compliance with a caste custom by Rupli in 1906.

The Court raised issues as to the factum of the adoption, and the validity and existence of the custom and proceeded to trial. Rupli died, and on the application of the plaintiff (who was the son of Imam Baksh) proceedings were taken to join Imam Baksh as legal representative of Rupli. In that capacity he put in a written statement supporting the claim of the plaintiff (his son) to succeed as adopted son of Pira, but averring that if the adoption or its validity was found not proved, he himself was entitled to succeed on the ground that there was a custom in the caste, whereby females were excluded from inheritance and that he was the nearest male heir. Further, he said that in any case he was entitled to his share under Muhammadan Law to the property of Pira.

The claims of Imam Baksh to be considered the legal representative of Rupli were not admitted by the defendant Asat and the Court reserved that question, putting him on the record as a party necessary for the decision of the suit. Ultimately, he was made a plaintiff and the Court raised further issues arising from the pleadings as to the existence of the custom excluding women, and as to limitation.

The trial Court, Hayward, A. J. C., found against the assertions of this double-headed claim. That is to say, it found as regards the adoption that it had not taken place, and that there was no custom of adoption in the caste. It found also that there was no custom of exclusion of females in this caste. It found also that the claim of Imam Baksh as heir under the ordinary law was barred by limitation, and on the whole dismissed the conjoined suits with costs as between attorney and client. Both plaintiffs appeal here.

It is to be regretted in some ways that the litigation has taken the course it has, because in my view of the case the question was really decidible on the question of the factum of adoption. The finding as to the custom is thus obiter and though the opinion of a judge like Hayward, A. J. C. after a minute and painstaking enquiry cannot but possess considerable authority his finding is still merely an opinion. Even admitting, moreover, (which is a considerable admission) that the claims of Imam Baksh were rightly agitated in this case, yet there again the finding being that the claim is barred by limitation the finding of the lower Court and of this Court also as to the alleged custom of exclusion of women is nothing more than an opinion, though I trust that all the members of this caste will accept that opinion as conclusive. The result of the agitation and decision of these questions has been that there has been a sad delay in disposal of this matter and that the parties have been put to very heavy expense.

In view of the lucid, thorough and painstaking judgment of Hayward, A. J. C., (with which in so far as we have thought it necessary to consider the points at issue I thoroughly agree) and in view of the fact that the judgment of my colleague Raymond, A. J. C., covers the whole field of enquiry, it would perhaps not be necessary for me to say more than that I agree with the latter judgment, but in a matter of this importance, one, moreover, on which the legal advisers of the parties have bestowed so much pains, it would not be improper to express my views shortly and concisely.

The first point is as to the factum of adoption. I cannot find that any such adoption took place. There was I believe some sort of reconciliation between Rupli and Imam Baksh in the year 1906-07. Rupli I think contributed to the circumcision ceremonies of Usman and shortly thereafter to the expenses of his marriage. I am by no means convinced that the 'Bara Dari' ceremonies of Pira took place in 1096-07, and am inclined to think that they took place earlier.

It is easy enough to assert that an adoption took place, but as there is apparently no ritual in the custom as set up, not even giving and taking or seating the adoptive child in the lap of its mother, but the adoption is said to be capable of being affected by a sort of arroga- tion castrensis by mere words spoken by the adoptive parent in the absence of the adopted child, it is obvious that it is very difficult to get, and still more to check, any evidence as to the actual adoption. Very few and interested persons say they were present at the actual adoption. A great number say that they were shortly afterwards informed of the adoption having taken place, but they do not speak to anything being done which might not equally well have been done in the case of a reconciliation and the circumcision. On the other hand, one would assuredly suppose that such a definite settlement would have been recorded in writing, and that the writing would have been registered, that there would be some entry in the books of the jamaat, that the boy would have been known by the name of his adoptive father, that he would have lived in the house of his adoptive mother, that the property which was the origin of the dispute would have been transferred to his name, and that any attempt on the part of Rupli whether, spontaneously or under the influence of Asat and Jumo to treat the adoption as nugatory, would have led to immediate litigation. None of these things happened. Therefore, I think that no adoption took place.

Adoption is not permissible among Muhammadans. This is not a matter of deduction or doubtful tradition but explicitly laid down in the Koran. Nor am I aware that any tribe permits itself this liberty to dispense with the obligation of the sacred law in respect of ordinary property. A slave whose peculium theoretically reverts to his master on the death of the holder, or a feoffee of military lands whose interest therein theoretically ceases with his death, may properly adopt and thus indicate to his superior the person to whom he wishes that superior to exercise his beneficence; but this community is not one of Mamelukes or talukdars and their property is their own. The custom, therefore, if it exists, is distinctly worthy of reprobation, and it would need very strong and cogent evidence to induce the Court to find that it exists. We are relieved from the necessity of finding on the existence of this custom in the present case because, in view of our finding on the factum, no finding on the validity would be more than an opinion.

This disposes of the case of the original plaintiff. The case of the second plaintiff is more difficult. I am of the opinion that his claim as heir under the custom is barred and if that is really so, then there would be no necessity of considering the custom. But perhaps it would be better to find also on the question of custom as the facts necessary for the establishment of the limitation bar, are not altogether beyond dispute.

The tribe was originally seated in Marwar, particularly in Jessulmir, and their hereditary profession is that of masons and stone-cutters. They were originally Hindus of the gaundi caste, and were very likely excommunicated by reason of their employment in building Muhammadan shrines. In recent years they have migrated into Sind and are to be found both in Hyderabad and Karachi. Many of them have obtained much wealth by contract and judicious purchases of lands and their names seem to show that they have received a certain amount of religious teaching, still it would be likely enough that a tribe of that origin would be inclined to keep to its Hindu customs. It is to be noted that a custom which shuts out women from the rights of inheritance given to them by the religious law is not so grievous a departure from the ordinances of religion as a custom of adoption, because if there is joint family then the deceased has no property in the sense attached to that word by the Muhammadan Law and therefore there is no question of inheritance. Moreover, the women get an equivalent which is often more valuable than the right denied. In any case, it is well established that a custom excluding women is valid and many tribes have such a custom.

In the present instance, however, I think the alleged custom is not made out. Indeed, it is not very easy to ascertain what the alleged custom is. The original claim was that the position of the widow and daughter was precisely that of a Hindu widow and daughter. But this might present a difficulty. In the case of self-acquisition the widow would be entitled to a life estate and so might the daughter be entitled. In that case the claim of Imam Baksh might be premature. He would come in, if at all, as a reversioner. The allegation now is that females are absolutely excluded from the succession whatever may have been the condition of the family in respect of jointness before death of the pro-positus. Next agnate immediately on the death of the propositus succeeds, but his title is encumbered with an equitable obligation to support the widow or other female heirs, and where the property is small he often allows the female heir to retain it in her own hands. There is, however, obviously a great difficulty in reconciling this scheme with the custom of adoption otherwise set up. For in that case the widow by adopting could divest the heir of an estate already matured.

The custom if it exists therefore, is neither Hindu nor Muhammadan. It works particularly hardly on women. The Mussalman woman gets her share in the inheritance of her kin. The Hindu woman is married into some other family and her rights to maintenance and support are protected by the indissolubility of marriage and by the legal rights given to widows by that system. The Silawata woman is to get nothing from the estate of her father or husband, and (in spite of assertions to the contrary) may be divorced and relegated for maintenance to her dowry.

Nevertheless, grievous as this custom is, the Silawatas may have the benefit of it if they can prove it. I am of opinion, however, that this custom is not proved to exist.

There is not a particle of evidence given that the custom exists in the extended form set up by Imam Baksh, proof of which form is necessary if he is to succeed. There is no instance given of exclusion of a wife or daughter by a nephew or cousin of the deceased. There are a great many instances where wives and daughters have not received shares in the estate of their husbands and fathers and a few where uncles or brothers-in-law have taken the entire estate. The evidence, therefore, would in no case prove anything more than the custom of exclusion of wives and daughters by sons or brothers which is not sufficient for the purposes of the plaintiff 2. But I do not think that even this custom is made out. That a woman does not take a share in the inheritance may be attributed to many causes. Very often the estate is not worth division. A mason has a few tools, a house, some vessels and furniture, and his woman a few jewels. The family must look for its support not to the division of this paltry estate but to the diligence and affection of the adult male members. That is the real inheritance of the family and that cannot be partitioned. Moreover, there is indubitably a feeling in India and not in India alone that it is inadvisable to trust women with property. I never, for instance, knew any middle class Hindu who approved of the position given to the sister by Balambhat. And women share this mistrust of their own capacity. They think it, on the whole, better to trust their affairs to the loyalty and competence of their male kindred. And the minute and fractional sub division of the paternal estate prescribed by the Muhammadan Law is naturally felt to be deleterious to the position of the family, and competent estate being frittered away among a crowd of claimants with the result that all are reduced to poverty. Thus, women heirs are not inclined to press their legal claims, preferring to trust to their brothers and sons to treat them properly, that is to say, to maintain their mothers and to find suitable husbands for their sisters and to provide those sisters on marriage with becoming paraphernalia. Instances, therefore, where mothers and sisters have not received their legal dues do not amount to conclusive proof that they have no legal rights. I do not say that such instances are not to be considered. I do say that they are not conclusive.

On this question of proof an example may be drawn from analogy. I have a bag containing fifty balls of unknown colour. I draw out a ball. It is a white ball. I replace it and draw again. If I repeat this process ten times and in each case draw a white ball there is a suspicion that all the balls in the bag are white. If I do so a thousand times and in each case there comes out a white ball the probability that all the balls are white is very high. If I do so a million times with the same result the probability is very high indeed, but it is never conclusive. The appearance of one black ball on the million and first occasion is enough to destroy the whole of the probability. So here these numerous instances would not be sufficient even if they stood by themselves to establish the custom unless it were shown that the women wished to take their share of inheritance and were refused on the ground of the custom and unless it were also shown that there were not instances to the contrary.

But there are numerous instances to the contrary. The very people who are now setting up the custom have over and over again caused the names of females to be entered in the Government registers as heirs to deceased males. It is true that such entry is no proof of title and that the names of such persons entered may not in all cases be the names of persons entitled to the inheritance of the estate under Muhammadan Law, but surely this action amounts to an admission by the males of the community (who, if any one knows about the custom, ought to know it) that inheritance is not confined to males.

The custom has never been judicially noticed. In one case in Hyderabad it was set up but was disallowed. In another case it was used to defeat a decree-holder who without bringing the matter to trial abandoned his claim. In another case it might have been set up but was not. Nothing can, therefore, be deduced from this evidence. Nor do I think the response of the Jessulmir Durbar can be considered as evidence of the custom. The community is in Jessulmir so small and insignificant (about fifty houses of poor masons) that their affairs are not likely to be well known in exalted circles.

A very curious assertion is made by those interested in setting up the custom. They admit that instances have occurred where the custom has not been followed, but they account for this by saying that there are in the community two sections. One is the more opulent representing the masons and the other the poor who represent the labourers (the mazurs). Oddly enough, the latter are said to be the fewer in number. But the strango thing is that it is alleged that the mazurs keep the Muhammadan custom whereas the superior and wealthy classes keep this same Hindu custom. But this is surely preposterous. It is among the poor and ignorant nominal converts that one expects the ordinances of religion to be neglected and the customs of Hinduism which they had learned and which had not been effaced by any religious teaching in their new faith to be maintained. I think the story of the mazurs is very significant. I have no doubt that with their new faith the Silawatas adopthe religious law. It made little difference to them at first because they were poor and the women did not desire to be awarded their lawful share. Afterwards, they became rich, and were seized with the natural desire to found families and did not like the idea of their estates being frittered away among numerous heirs, many of them women married into strange families. This would be particularly the case with the Silawatas, if it be true that they do not marry their cousins. In such a case any share awarded to a daughter would pass out of the family for ever. Therefore, they are I think now trying to set up that the custom that women did not, as a matter of fact, generally receive a share in the property of their fathers or husbands to the prejudice of the interests of their brothers or sons was a custom of legal exclusion of women from inheritance altogether. This custom they have I think failed to make out.

The question of limitation is next to be considered, because this affects also the claim of Imam Baksh to recover his share under the Muhammadan Law, namely, five-twenty-fourths of the estate of Pira, deceased.

The first thing to do is to decide when Imam made his claim.

On the 13th July 1913, Rupli having died, the plaintiff Usman asked that Imam should be added as her legal representative. The Judge ordered that "the legal representative of Rupli should be joined;" on the 6th August summons was issued to Imam and he appeared in Court on the 27th August 1913. There was a dispute and doubt as to whether Imam was the legal representative of Rupli and the Judge thought that this could not well be decided without trying all the matters at issue in the case as a preliminary to deciding that point. The Judge, therefore, by his order of 13th November 1913 made Imam a defendant. Imam filed his written statement on 16th December 1913 where, for the first time, his claim is legally asserted, either to the whole property on the ground that the male excludes the female heir, or to his share as a Muhammadan heir. On 2nd October 1915 he was made a plaintiff.

I am rather of the opinion that the terminus ad quem in this case is the 13th November 1913 when the appellant Imam was made a defendant. The date 2nd October 1915 would not be the true date in view of section 22 of the Limitation Act. I am inclined to think that the dates 6th or 27th August are too early, because it was not Imam in his personal capacity who was then made a party but Imam in his alleged capacity as representative of Rupli. The character he was then filling was incompatible with the character he afterwards assumed. He is now claiming not as representing Rupli but as representing, or as heir to, Pira. I doubt whether Imam can be said at the date of his first appearance on 6th or 27th August to have been a defendant within the meaning of section 22, Limitation Act.

The next question is the terminus a quo. Immediately on the death of Pira the widow entered on the estate. Her doing so was clearly adverse to the claim of Imam to exclude her from the inheritance of Pira. And as regards this claim, therefore, in my opinion, limitation ran from 97. Imam's claim is, therefore, in any case barred as regards his rights under the special custom.

As regards the rights as Muhammadan heir, true it is, that mere possession by one co-sharer is not by itself notice to the other co-sharers that the co-sharer in possession claims to hold adversely because it is presumed that every man is doing what he ought to do, and it is the duty of the co-sharer in possession to hold for the benefit of all persons entitled.

But, at any rate, the plaintiff Imam ought to have been put on enquiry by his total exclusion from the inheritance, for it is not usual for women to manage an undivided estate where there is a male of full age competent and ready to manage, and Rupli and Imam early began to dispute as to the transfer of the names in the Revenue and Municipal records. But, on the whole, I think the notification to Imam that Rupli was holding adversely to his entire claims must be assigned to some date between 24th November 1900 and 22nd January 1901 when Imam got information of the heirship application. This application was made by Rupli on the earlier of those dates, and Imam filed his objection on the latter date. This application by Rupli does not, it is true, specifically deny that Imam was entitled to a share under Muhammadan Law, but it is inconsistent with his having any claim at all and, coupled with his total exclusion from the estate between the death of Pira and that application, ought to have given him clear notice that the exclusive possession by Rupli was adverse to him. He ought, therefore, at the latest to have brought his suit by 22nd January 1913. As I have said, the earliest date claimed is 6th August 1913. In this view of the matter, then, the claim of the plaintiff Imam is barred, and still more so if I am right in assigning the terminus ad quem to the date 13th November 1913. It is claimed that the true terminus a quo is, on the most unfavourable view of the matter, 22nd August 1901. Rupli in answer to an application by Imam for heirship certificate specifically denied that the plaintiff Imam had any claim at all to any part of the property. If that date be the correct terminus a quo then the suit would still be barred, if I am correct in supposing that the terminus ad quem is the 13th November 1913, or if the true terminus is the 27th August 1913 when Imam filed his written statement. The suit would be in time from that date only if the terminus ad quem be the 6th August, the date of the order directing the legal representative of Rupli to be put on the record. But, in the first place, I doubt if that order gives the date of the true terminus ad quem and, in the next place, I do not think that the date of the objections of Rupli is the true starting point of limitation. There could be no doubt in the mind of Imam that she was holding adversely to the plaintiff Imam long before that, at least as early as the date when her application in the heirship matter was made.

It should be noted that the date of the order of Mr. Boyd allowing alteration of the plaint at page 120 is incorrect and should be 29th October 1915 not 1913. On the whole, therefore, I am of the opinion that the claim of Imam to succeed either to the whole of the property of Pira or to five-twenty-fourths of that property is barred by limitation. Nothing is shown to have happened in 1906 which would revive it.

ORDER.—The facts of this case are that the plaintiff Zihrus Syed Alvi of Sehagpur advertised a rifle for sale and his advertisement was answered by the defendant Kirwan, who was a Police Officer resident at Kathgodam in the United Provinces, on the R. and K. Railway. The plaintiff sent the rifle to defendant 1 on approval. The defendant 1 found it had certain defects, among them that the screw fastening the stock to the barrel was broken, and, after a somewhat acrimonious correspondence, the defendant 1 returned the rifle by Railway parcel to the plaintiff at Sohagpur. On arrival the stock was found to be broken, and the plaintiff, therefore, sued the defendant 1, the Rohilkhund and Kumaon Railway and the Great Indian Peninsula Railway on whose lines the parcel had travelled, for damages in the Small Cause Court at Sohagpur. The Judge of the Small Cause Court at Sohagpur passed a decree for Rs. 100 against defendant 2, the Rohilkhund and Kumaon Railway Co., and dismissed the suit as against the other defendants.

The Rohilkhund and Kumaon Railway Co. apply in revision to have the decree set aside. This suit has been disposed of in a very peculiar manner. The defendant 1 was not served and did not appear. There is no proof of any of the letters put in by plaintiff purporting to be from defendant 1. The Judge of the Court below has relied on this correspondence and in particular on a copy of a certificate given by two residents of Kathgodam on 6th February 1922 stating that they had examined the rifle and found certain defects in it and that it was carefully packed in its case and sown in gunny and one of them undertakes to send it to the Railway Station and book it to the plaintiff. The certificate is not in original and neither of the persons signing it has been examined, so it is inadmissible in evidence as not being proved.

No objection was taken to its admissibility in the lower Court and, under the ruling in Dalchand v. Ganga Singh (1), if no objection be taken in the first Court to the admissibility of evidence on the ground of improper proof, such objection cannot be raised in appeal. This case follows Akhar Ali v. Bhyea Lal Jha (2) Chimnaji Govind, Godbole v. Dinakar Dhonddev Godbole (3) and Hiriley Krishna Das v. Prasanna Kumari Chowdhurani (4). Later cases on the same point are Kishori Lal v. Rakhal Das (5), Lakshman Govind v. Amrit Gopal (6) and Shahzadi Begum v. Secretary of State for India (7).

There is, however, no evidence to show that the stock was not broken when the parcel was delivered to the Railway Company, as the certificate was written at a period prior to the delivery to the Railway Company, and expressly mentions that the parcel was to be conveyed to the Railway Station in the Motor of one of the signatories to the certificate, and he has not been examined to prove that he delivered the parcel undamaged to the Railway Company at Kathgodam Station.

The parcel was booked the same day and on delivery at Sohagpur the box was found to be undamaged and the seals intact, but the stock of the rifle was broken.

The Judge of the lower Court has referred to the rules of the Railway Company regarding explosives and dangerous goods. I do not find the Railway rules he refers to, but a gun is not explosive or dangerous when unloaded and though it appears from the certificate that the parcel contained nine cartridges, there is no evidence that any intimation was given to the Company that the parcel contained explosives, and the Railway Receipt, which must have been filled up from the information supplied by the consignor, merely mentions "a gun." The Railway Company are, therefore, under no obligation to open the package. The liability of a Railway Company under section 72 of the Railways Act is that of a bailee under sections 151, 152 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act. The Company is bound to take as much care of the goods bailed to them as a man of ordinary prudence would of his own goods, and in the absence of any special contract (which does not exist here) they are not responsible for damage to the parcel. The evidence of the plaintiff on this point is of importance. He admits that he could not suspect anything from the appearance of the box, the screw connecting the barrel to the stock was broken. There was no grass or cloth put in the box to prevent the gun from sliding up and down in course of carriage. Unless something like grass or cloth was put in to fill up the vacant space in the case the gun would remain loose in the box.

SHANKAR DAS v. MANSA RAM

On the plaintiff's own showing, therefore, the rifle was not securely packed in the box and the shaking in transit may have broken the stock. No evidence has been led as to the manner in which the rifle was packed by the consignor. The certificate only says it was packed carefully, which is contradicted by the plaintiff. The certificate shows the screw connecting the barrels to the stock was broken before the gun was despatched from Kathgodam. This would render the stock loose and the shaking in transit might break it, but the Railway Company were not aware of this defect and are not responsible for it, and no liability attaches to them. Prima facie, the parcel contained only a gun and they were under no obligation to open it. In these circumstances, the decree of the Small Cause Court against the Rohilkhand and Kumaon Railway Co. must be set aside and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs.

The non applicant plaintiff will bear the costs of the Railway Company in this application. Defendant 1 did not appear.

Appeal, second—Questions of fact and law—Construction of document—Finding of fact.

The expression "construction" as applied to a document includes two things, first, the meaning of the words, and, secondly, their legal effect or the effect which is to be given to them. The meaning of the words is a question of fact in all cases, but the effect of the words is a question of law.

There is no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of an erroneous finding of fact, however gross or inexcusable the error may seem to be, and where there is no error or defect in the procedure, the finding of the first appellate Court upon a question of fact is final, if that Court had before it evidence proper for its consideration in support of the finding.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 25th May 1922, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Mianwali, dated the 23rd January 1922.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are fully stated in the judgment of the learned District Judge and need not be recapitulated. The dispute relates to a small strip of land in the town of Mianwali to the north of the plaintiffs' property measuring about 3 marlas; and the sole question for determination is whether the learned District Judge was right in holding that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that they were the owners thereof. The learned Counsel for the appellants has taken me very carefully through the whole facts of the case, and has argued that the construction put by the learned District Judge on the document (p. 8) and other documents on which the suit was based was erroneous, and that they fully established the plaintiffs' claim. I confess I am not satisfied that the appeal can succeed in face of the findings of fact. With regard to the conclusion drawn by the learned District Judge from the documents in question, it is necessary to distinguish carefully between his conclusions of fact and conclusions of law. The distinction as to how far a decision upon the contents of a document is a question of fact and how far it is a question of law, has been very forcibly expressed by Lindley, L. J., in Chatenay v. Brazilian Submarine Telegraph Co. Ltd., (1) where the learned Judge observes:—"The expression 'construction,' as applied to a document, at all events as used by English lawyers, includes two things: First, the meaning of the words; and, secondly, their legal effect, or the effect which is to be given to them. The meaning of the words I take to be a question of fact in all cases, whether we are dealing with a poem or a legal document. The effect of the words is a question of law."

In the present case the learned District Judge has carefully read the documents and has simply decided to what extent the entries in those documents indicate the plaintiffs' ownership of the plot in question. He has in no way interpreted the entries in the documents to indicate any legal point, and his decision on the basis of these documents that the plaintiffs have failed to establish their ownership is clearly a decision of fact and not of law. In Durga Chowdhurani v. Jewahir Singh (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council have laid down that there is no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of an erroneous finding of fact, however gross or inexcusable the error may seem to be, and that where there is no error or defect in the procedure, the finding of the first Appellate Court upon a question of fact is final, if that Court had before it evidence proper for its consideration in support of the finding. No error or defect in the procedure is pointed out in the present case, and the lower Appellate Court was fully justified to construe the documents in the way in which it has done in support of its finding.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Adverse Possession—Co-owners—Transferee from one co-owner—Possession when adverse to other co-owners—Samudayam tenure—Karaiyedu tenure.

The possession of one owner is not ordinarily adverse to the other co-owners. Not only possession by one co-owner but also an exclusion of the others or a denial of their title to their knowledge is essential to render such possession adverse. The same principle is applicable to the case of a transferee from one of several co-owners. Where he prescribes as a co-sharer, he must prove exclusion or denial of title as against the other co-sharers. But in the event of his having neither actual nor constructive notice of the common character of the property, he will be on the same footing as any ordinary transferee with an independent or invalid title or none.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is by the 117th defendant and it is opposed mainly by the 22nd defendant. The hearing has taken a considerable time, but the issues, now that the facts are ascertained, are clear.

The suit was brought for the partition of the Samudayam land of a village in the Tanjore district, the Samudayam tenure, as explained in the District Manual, being a holding in common by the village community known as the murasidars. It is not disputed that the land, of which partition is claimed, was and is Samudayam land; nor has any serious attempt been made to dispute here that it has never been divided and that it is now partible. On this point it may be observed that the 22nd defendant no doubt set up a previous partition in his written statement; but it is clear that the matter is res judicata against him in consequence of Exhibits T. A. and R, the judgments in O.S. No. 367 of 1900. The lower Appellate Court held that the parties before it had established their rights to a certain number of shares in the Samudayam, of 30⁵⁹/₆₄ shares, and, in a portion of its judgment which has formed the principal subject of discussion, it allowed the 22nd defendant to retain as his share the plots in item No. 1, of which he is already in possession, item No. 1 being 4½ volis in extent and the most valuable plot of the property in dispute and consisting in padugai land. The question argued first has accordingly been whether the 22nd defendant has a right to retain, in a division, the plots in item No. 1, of which he is in possession.

Prima facie, of course, the finding, which has already been referred to, in favour of the partible character of the land, entails that no share has been localized so far, since localization could only take place on the ascertainment of shares on partition. The lower Appellate Court has, however, supported the claim of the 22nd defendant in two ways; firstly, on the ground that he has prescribed for the ownership of the plots he is in possession of and, secondly, on certain equitable considerations. It has no doubt not distinguished these two grounds very carefully in its judgment but we think that its decision is based on both of them.

Before dealing with the law regarding the question of prescription, we may observe that something has been said as to the Karaiyedu tenure of the village. This tenure was not referred to at all in the pleadings and it appears to have attracted very little, if any, attention before the District Munsif. More, however, was said of it in the lower Appellate Court, though it is not clear that any finding was reached as to the existence in the village of the tenure. The tenure, we may observe, as the District Manual defines it, consists in a system of shifting severalty of ownership, the village lands being re-distributed among the mirasidars at intervals. It is clear that, when a suit is brought for the partition of the village lands for change to individual ownership, it cannot affect directly the sustainability of such a suit, whether the tenure of the village is ownership by the community, that is, ordinary Samudayam tenure, or whether it is the shifting severalty of the ownership of which the Karaiyedu tenure consists; and accordingly the only importance for our present purpose of the allegations as to Karaiyedu is that they may, if they are established, afford an explanation of the origin and character of the separate possession, on which the 22nd defendant would establish his prescription.

To turn to the direct consideration of that plea we find the District Munsif dealing at some length with the 22nd defendant's title to the different portions of item No. 1 and with his enjoyment; but the lower Appellate Court has not considered the evidence relating to that part of the case in any detail. It has contented itself with a general statement that it thinks that the prescription is made out. Even if the plea of prescription could be accepted at once with direct reference to the evidence as to the 22nd defendant's possession, the lower Appellate Court's consideration of that evidence would be inadequate.

The next material objection to the lower Appellate Court's judgment is, that it has dealt with the 22nd defendant's possession on the basis that it was the possession of a stranger to the co-tenancy, to which the other parties at least belong. It has done this, because there are in various places in the pleadings and evidence general statements that the 22nd defendant is not a mirasidar. The exact meaning of such statements is not clear. It is no doubt shown that the 22nd defendant does not claim his mirasi right in virtue of any lineal descent from a previous holder of mirasi right; but that is probably the case with very few of the mirasidars of the present day. Certainly, it is not the case with all the others who are accepted by the lower Appellate Court as co-sharers in the suit village. The 22nd defendant, however, acquired his mirasi right in virtue of his acquisition of particular properties, which were in fact part of the Samudayam, but are not described with regard to shares in it. It is, of course, conceivable that such acquisitions of Samudayam properties may import an implied denial that they were part of the common property; but it will be for the lower Appellate Court to consider whether that is so, or whether the terms of the sale-deeds simply correspond with the current methods of expression regarding the common property and are consistent with the acquisition of the lands specified in them as parts of the common property and with the 22nd defendant's acquisition of the character of a co-owner or mirasidar.

The importance of this is that a very different measure of proof of prescription will be required according as the 22nd defendant claims to have prescribed as a stranger to the co-tenancy or as a mirasidar or co-tenant. It is possible, although we express no final opinion on the point, that the facts found proved by the District Munsif might be sufficient to justify a plea of prescription by a stranger; but, if prescription by a mirasidar or co-tenant were in question, it might then be necessary for us to consider, and the lower Appellate Court will have to consider, whether those facts included such evidence of exclusion of other co-sharers from possession or of assertion of an exclusive title as would be necessary under the strict rule to which co-owners are subject. We must accordingly call on the Additional Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, to whom the jurisdiction of the lower Appellate Court has now been transferred, to submit findings on the following issues:—

Firstly.—Has the 22nd defendant acquired the character of a mirasidar in virtue of the purchases relied upon by him, or is he for the purpose of his plea of prescription to be regarded as not one of the co-tenants against whom he is prescribing?

Secondly.—Whether the 22nd defendant has completed any prescription for ownership appropriate to the character which he is found to possess?

As we are calling for a finding with reference to adverse possession, we do not at this stage deal with the lower Appellate Court's alternative ground of decision, viz., the claim of the 22nd defendant, on equitable considerations. For the moment we would only observe that such considerations will be relevant in connection with the distribution of the shares as ascertained in a proper scheme after the preliminary decree has been passed and in order to and before the passing of the final decree. We shall, if necessary, point out, in eventually remanding the case for the passing of a final decree, one or two aspects, in which we think that the lower Appellate Court's statement of law is open to question. When findings on remand are received we shall also deal with the claim to reduction of the 22nd defendant's share on the ground that no reduction from it has already been made to correspond with the increases allowed to the shares of other parties.

At this stage, the only remaining matters for consideration are certain claims relating to particular items or cases of particular parties, which have been put forward in the appeal and the Memo. of Cross-objections. In the appeal there is, firstly, a claim based on the words alleged to be a proper interpretation of Exhibits 83 and 49. Before us that claim has not been disputed and we must, therefore, modify the lower Appellate Court's judgment by adding a $\frac{1}{2}$ to the $\frac{1}{16}$ th share already allowed by the Subordinate Judge to the 117th defendant.

Next, the 22nd defendant, in his Memo. of Cross-objections, has claimed an addition of $\frac{1}{32}$ to his share on the ground that Exhibit N has been misread. This is not disputed. His share will be increased by $\frac{1}{32}$.

The other ground in the Memo. which is argued relates to the share of the 6th plaintiff. This has eventually not been pressed before us.

The other claim made by the 117th defendant is that the $\frac{3}{4}$ share awarded by the lower Appellate Court to the 65th defendant should have been deducted from the share given to the 22nd defendant. The only facts which it is necessary to mention at this stage are that the 65th defendant's title is based on a sale-deed, Exhibit 103, to his father by Namasivaya Pillai in 1875, whereas the 22nd defendant's title is based on the sale-deed, Exhibit 150 (b), by Namasivaya in 1883. Prima facie the sale-deed of 1875 would take precedence over that of 1883, though it is of course possible that Namasivaya Pillai may have had properties sufficient to satisfy the claims of both the purchasers. The lower Appellate Court has not dealt with this aspect of the case and has not mentioned the dates of the two sale-deeds, and in the absence of such mention, we cannot consider its discussion satisfactory.

There are no doubt arguments which Mr. Krishnaswami Ayyar on behalf of the 22nd defendant has placed before us, and in particular the plea of res judicata, which may be decisive; but in the absence of any consideration given to the relative dates of the sale-deeds, on which the titles rest, we cannot accept the lower Appellate Court's judgment regarding this matter. We must, therefore, ask the lower Appellate Court to submit a finding on the issue :—

What are the shares which the 22nd and the 65th defendants are respectively entitled to in respect of the purchase from Namasivaya Pillai ?

The findings are to be submitted on the evidence already on record and are due in this Court on or before the 30th August, and seven days will be allowed for objections.

In accordance with the order contained in the above judgment the Additional Subordinate Judge of Tanjore submitted the following

FINDINGS.—In obedience to the order of the High Court, dated 3rd May 1921, in S. A. No. 73 of 1920, I beg to submit the following findings on the three issues remitted for the purpose :—

2. Issue 1.—"Has the 22nd defendant acquired the character of a mirasidar in virtue of the purchase relied upon by him or is he for the purpose of his plea of prescription to be regarded as not one of the co-tenants against whom he is prescribing ?"

* * * * *

I find that the 22nd defendant acquired the character of a co-owner or mirasidar in virtue of the purchases relied upon by him.

Issue 2.—"Whether the 22nd defendant has completed any prescription for ownership appropriate to the character which he is found to possess ?"

* * * * *

The law on the point may be stated as follows, in the language of the decisions : "Uninterrupted sole possession of property by one joint owner by itself is no evidence of exclusion of other interested joint owners," vide Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (1). "Acts of ownership are not, in tenancies-in-common, necessarily acts of disseisin. It depends upon the intent with which they are done and their notoriety. The law will not presume that one tenant-in-common intends to oust another. The entry and possession of land of one co-owner will ordinarily be held to be for the benefit of all," vide Balaram Guria v. Syama Charan Mandal (2). "A co-sharer in possession can convert his possession into adverse possession. This adverse possession so begun cannot be stopped by the other co-sharers merely by affirmations that they are co-sharers," vide Akbar v. Tabu (3). "To constitute an adverse possession as between tenants-in-common there must be an exclusion or an ouster," vide Gangadhar v. Parashram (4).

On a consideration of the law applicable to the case of possession by one co-owner of particular plots in the Samudayam property, which requires unequivocal and open acts of adverseness necessary for the said co-owner to prescribe ownership in himself, I am of opinion that facts have been proved in this suit, as shown by my statement of them in the preceding paragraphs, which would entitle the 22nd defendant to claim prescriptive title over the properties in question, namely, his acquisitions in item No. 1 in the present suit, known as Muttadi Padugai. I find accordingly.

JUDGMENT.—The finding of the lower Appellate Court on the first question remanded, that 22nd defendant acquired the character of a mirasidar or co-owner in virtue of the purchases relied on by him, must be accepted, since no objection is taken to it. To the correctness of the argument based on it by the lower Appellate Court further reference will be made.

The second finding of the lower Appellate Court is that 22nd defendant has completed a prescription for ownership appropriate to his legal character; and this cannot be accepted, if only because it is based on five considerations, of which three possess no substance. For the issue by the melwaramdars of pattas to 22nd defendant alone, the making of improvements by him on the land in his occupation and the language used by 1st and 2nd defendants in their written statement as to their possession of land, with which he is not concerned, afford no evidence of the nature of his enjoyment or that it has been adverse to his co-owners, since the latter would not be bound by the conduct of the melwaramdars or of 1st and 2nd defendants and had no reason for objecting to improvements, which would pass with the land and, if it ever had to be surrendered, would have to be surrendered with it. The two other grounds on which this finding is based, the attitude of 22nd defendant's father in his litigations with all or some of the mirasidars and that of 22nd defendant and his vendor, Velayudha Chetti, to them in respect of part of item No. 1 of the suit property, no doubt might legitimately have been considered by the lower Appellate Court. But they are not conclusive; and, although it could have reached its finding with regard to them alone, there is nothing to show that it would have done so. For these reasons, therefore, the finding cannot be accepted.

In remanding the case a second time for a finding in the light of the foregoing we take the opportunity to deal with two other points, on which argument has been based. Firstly, the lower Appellate Court has observed that the documents evidencing enjoyment under Karaiyedu tenure range down to 1894 and its further statements suggest that it held in favour of the cessation of that tenure in that year. But, firstly, the documents in fact range down to only 1884 and, next, it is a question whether the tenure ceased with them or later; for, secondly, it does not follow that it ceased, when they were executed. The date of its cessation is clearly most important, since, if the tenure was in force at the date of 22nd defendant's entry or his vendees, that fact would be material to the decision as to the character of his possession, as supporting the plea of prescription.

Lastly, it is urged that the special rule as to the evidence necessary to establish prescription between co-owners is not applicable to 22nd defendant, who is not a co-owner, but only a transferee of some co-owners' interests and that it is unnecessary for such a transferee to establish the exclusion or denial of title to the knowledge of his opponents, which would as between co-owners ordinarily be essential. This is supported by reference to Bhavrao v. Rakhmin (5), and the conclusion that the possession of a purchaser from a co-sharer of only the qualified right to an assignment of the land in his vendor's possession, if that be possible at a partition, will prescribe in virtue of his bare possession, "adverse possession depending on the claim or title under which the possessor holds and not upon a consideration of the question in whom the true ownership is vested, whether in a single person or in many jointly;" and the opinion was expressed later that it did not matter whether the transferees in possession, who were before the Court, knew of the property being held in co-ownership or not, although the fact that they were transferees had been regarded in the judgment as important with reference to their knowledge of their real rights. This is no doubt stated generally, but it is possible that it was influenced by the local considerations, which also are referred to. Certainly, it goes beyond the earlier authority relied on Ganesh v. Ramchandra (6), since there the entry into possession was under a purchase in a Court sale of which the other co-sharers were presumably aware and the impossibility of harmonious relations between the parties is expressly referred to. Bhavrao v. Rakhmin was accepted as good law by BEAMAN, J., in Bhaiji Shamrao v. Hajimiya Mahamad (7). But it was construed by HAYWARD, J., as deciding only that a transferee's knowledge of the defect in his title did not prevent his prescribing for the right conveyed by his transfer and as raising no question as to the necessity for knowledge on the part of the true owner that his right was denied or interfered with. That, however, is not enough to explain the case or the statement in connection with an assumption that the transferees knew of the coparcenary character of the property that "a person coming in under a title, which he knows to be defective, is not by a reason of his knowledge deprived of the benefit of the law of prescription," the general rule requiring twelve years' possession of the ordinary character being apparently in question. For that statement, if it is to be understood as generally as its wording involves, is clearly opposed to decisions of the Judicial Committee, which are not referred to in any of the Bombay cases, Watson & Co v. Ramchund (8) and Lachmeswar Sing v. Monowar Hussain (9), as well as Varada Pillai v. Jeevaratnammal (10), the two first defining the point at which the Court will restrain the enjoyment of one co-sharer as interfering with the rights of the others and the last dealing directly with prescription. It is to be observed that in each of these cases the prescribing party was the transferee of a co-sharer, not a co-sharer or his descendant, being in the first a lessee, in the second a purchaser and in the third a beneficiary under a Will, and that, although this was not stated expressly, his knowledge of his rights and those of the other co-sharers was assumed. But the material fact, and it is irreconcilable with the decision in Bhavarao v. Rakhmin (5), is that not only a possession by one co-sharer, but also an exclusion of the others or a denial of their title to their knowledge, was held essential before such possession could be restrained or regarded as adverse. There is, accordingly, no justification for the general statement that a transferee in possession of common property is subject to no special restriction in prescribing against co-sharers other than his transferor. It can be said only that, if he prescribes as a co-sharer, a matter to be decided with reference to the terms of his transfer and the circumstances, he must prove exclusion or denial of title; but that, in the event of his having neither actual nor constructive notice of the common character of the property, he will be on the same footing as any ordinary transferee with an independent, but invalid, title or with none. It will be for the lower Appellate Court in dealing with 22nd defendant's case of prescription to decide to which of these alternatives it is subject.

We accordingly remand the case for a rehearing and submission of revised findings in the light of the foregoing. Findings will be submitted in six weeks. Seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In pursuance of the order contained in the above judgment the Additional Subordinate Judge of Tanjore submitted the following FINDING :—In obedience to the order of the High Court, dated 12th January 1922, in S. A. No. 73 of 1920, I beg to submit the following revised finding on issue 2, namely, whether the 22nd defendant has completed any prescription for ownership appropriate to the character which he is found to possess?

2. The 22nd defendant was found by me under issue 1 to possess the character of a co-owner or a mirasidar in respect of his purchase of the item and that finding has been accepted by the High Court.

9. I find that the Karaiyedu tenure in the village had certainly ceased before the date of the 22nd defendant's father's earliest sale-deed. Such a tenure was not known to have existed after 1879 according to the evidence of Mr. K. Kaliyanasundaram Ayyar (Exhibit LV) already referred to. Such a tenure could not have existed after 1848 (the date of Exhibits M and C-3). With reference to the terms contained in the sale-deeds obtained by the 22nd defendant's father and by the 22nd defendant himself, and with reference to the litigations in O. S. Nos. 435 of 1890, 126 of 1891 and 456 of 1892 and in consideration of the large number of mirasidars who contested the plaintiffs in these suits and of a large number of other mirasidars who had taken part in the sale-deeds of the 22nd defendant's father and who must have known of the purchase and the possession of the plots by the 22nd defendant's father in the village, I find that the 22nd defendant has completed prescription for ownership against all mirasidars, directly as against those who were parties to the litigations and constructively against the other mirasidars. I also find that the 22nd defendant's father and the 22nd defendant had nothing to indicate to them at the time of their purchase that the properties were in common holding.

This Second Appeal and the Memo. of Cross-objections filed by the 13th respondent coming on for hearing on Friday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Wednesday the 17th, 21st, 22nd and 29th days of November 1922, respectively, after the return of the revised findings from the Additional Subordinate Judge of Tanjore, and the case having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

Oldfield, J.—'The lower Appellate Court's finding is in 22nd defendant's favour, and in accepting it, we need deal in detail with one question only, that of res judicata, since no objection of any weight has been taken to it on other grounds.

The previous adjudication relied on is evidenced by Exhibits T., A. and R., the judgments in O. S. No. 367 of 1900 and in first appeal therein and the decree in second appeal; and no doubt in our first order of remand we said that the plea of a previous partition was concluded by them against 22nd defendant. We did not, however, refer to the plea of prescription, which is now in question. That plea is, it is said, now inadmissible, because 22nd defendant's prescription according to the finding before us was complete in 1883 and could have been, but was not, relied on by him in the previous proceedings. The answer is that, whatever the effect of Exhibits T., A. and R. on 22nd defendant's right to plead a title acquired before the beginning of that litigation, they do not affect his right to rely now on a subsequent period of adverse possession, which was then incomplete or debar him from proving what happened before that period, as explaining the nature of his connection with the property during it.

The remaining argument for consideration should have been advanced, before the finding was called for, and can be considered now only with reference to the facts found and as raising a question of law. It is that 22nd defendant cannot, as a co-owner, claim part of the estate in co-ownership in virtue of prescription for that part alone. This is argued on the strength of the decision in Kumarappa Chettiar v. Saminatha Chettiar (11) and particularly the dictum of SESHAGIRI AYYAR, J., therein, that "possession of part of the property" by some of its co-owners "would save limitation as regards the rest of the property" as against the others, that of course stating the law from the stand-point of the then defendants, who correspond with the present appellants. As this dictum is the sole support of the argument attempted, it is necessary to ascertain its exact scope by reference to its context. The plaintiffs in Kumarappa Chettiar v. Saminatha Chettiar (11) claimed in the alternative (1) possession of certain items on the ground that their vendors, 1st and 2nd defendants, had either obtained them in partition or been in exclusive and adverse possession of them for more than twelve years, or (2) partition and delivery of their vendors' share in them. In appeal, however, nothing was said of 1 and 2 defendants' title under the partition. The other defendants, representing other branches of 1 and 2 defendants' family, admitted plaintiffs' right to division and delivery of shares in the items, but on the remaining question as to plaintiffs' or 1 and 2 defendants' prescription for the whole of those items they pleaded Art. No. 127, Sch. I of the Limitation Act. It was in discussion of this plea that the dictum of SESHAGIRI AYYAR, J., now relied on, occurred and that WALLIS, C.J., said: "If the property was undivided and Art. No. 127 is applicable to bar the plaintiff, there must be exclusion from the whole of the joint family property and exclusion from the suit property only will not do." With that part of the decision, however, we are not concerned, and it is unnecessary for us to express an opinion regarding its correctness or the extent to which it is really outlived by the authorities relied on by the learned Judges. For, in the present case, the suit property is not and never was the joint family property, to which alone Article No. 127 statdly applies. In fact in Kumarrappa Chetty v. Saminatha Chetty (11) the argument was conducted on the assumption that the joint family in question had become divided in status and the judgments dealt also with the alternative that, although the property had belonged to a joint family, the defendants' interest in it was at the date of suit that of tenants-in-common. On that alternative the learned Judges did not decide whether Art. No. 127 would apply, holding that, even if (as 22nd Defendant now contends) the proper Art. was No. 144, the plaintiff's claim to possession of the whole items must fail. But, and this is the important point for our present purpose, WALLIS, C.J., reached that conclusion, not on the short ground, which would have been open to him, if appellants' contention here were sustainable, that prescription for a part only of the common property was useless, but because "there was no sufficient evidence of ouster," meaning evidently no evidence of such aggravated exclusion as is required between co-tenants; and, although SESHAGIRI AYYAR, J., referred directly only to the effect of the decisions he had considered, not to any finding of fact to which he applied them, this part also of his judgment is reconcilable with the interpretation now suggested of the case. Shortly, the learned Judges, so far as their dicta support the present appellants, were dealing with what is not at present in question, property which was or had been that of a joint family; and there is nothing in their judgments to impair the application to the common property in dispute before us of the principle, on which the leading cases of Watson v. Ramchand and Lachmeswar Singh v. Monowar Hussain (9) were decided, that prescription for part of such property is not impossible, but must be established by evidence, not only of adverse possession, in the ordinary sense of that term, but further of assertion of title and exclusion, irreconcilable with the existence of any tenancy-in common. We are accepting the finding that such denial of title and exclusion is proved in the present case. The appellant's objections failing, the conclusion must be in 22nd defendant's favour.

(11) 52 Ind. Cas. 470; 42 M. 431; 36 M. L. J. 612; 1 (1919) M. W. N. 328.

Ramesam, J.—The appellant has filed objections to the finding recorded by the Subordinate Judge (on 25th August 1921) on the third of the issues sent down by him. He says the Subordinate Judge omitted, by a slip, to deduct half a pangu out of Namasivayam Pillai's share. This is not admitted by the other side and it is not clear that any slip was made by the Subordinate Judge. The finding is one of fact and is accepted.

* * * * *

The decree of the lower Appellate Court will, therefore, be modified as follows :—

1. The appellants will be entitled to $\frac{1}{2}$ pangu in addition to the pangus allotted in the lower Appellate Court.

2. That the 22nd defendant be and hereby is, allowed to retain the lands (1 veli 16 mahs., and 44 kulis) decreed in O. S. No. 388 of 1884, O. S. No. 456 of 1892 and O. S. No. 126 of 1891 in satisfaction of $11 \frac{1}{16}$ pangus.

3. That the 22nd defendant is entitled to $11 \frac{1}{2}$ pangus in addition, to be allotted to him in general partition.

4. That the remaining lands (the lands other than the 1 veli, 16 mahs., and 44 kulis) should be divided into $19 \frac{1}{2}$ shares and the shares to which the parties are found entitled are to be allotted to the respective parties.

In the Second Appeal, the appellants will pay the costs of the 22nd defendant. In the Memorandum of Objections, each party will bear its own costs except that the 22nd defendant will pay the costs of the 8th respondent.

In a family governed by the Mitakshara school of law the obligation incurred by a father which would be binding upon his sons must have two attributes, namely, first, that it must have been incurred antecedently to the transaction in suit and, secondly, it must have been incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such a joint estate. [p. 46, col. 1]

To establish "necessity" it is not enough to prove that a debt raised by a father on the security of the family property was used in discharging a prior mortgage by him. It must be further proved that the prior mortgage had been effected for necessity. [p. 46, col. 2]

JUDGMENT.

Walmsley, J.—These two appeals are preferred by the defendants and they arise out of two suits, each brought by the mortgagees on a bond of Rs. 2,000. One of these bonds was executed by Dwija Prasad Pandey, predecessor in interest of the defendants in Appeal No. 390, and the other by Brojo Kishore Pandey, predecessor in interest of the defendants in Appeal No. 393.

The defendants are admittedly governed by the Mitakshara School of Law, and it was urged on their behalf that the executants of the bonds could not bind the joint ancestral property. The learned Judge held that the bonds were executed to pay off the sums due to one Madan Mohan on earlier mortgages by the same executants and that those sums were actually paid off and that those debts to Madan Mohan constituted antecedent debt to the extent of Rs. 1,750 in each case. And he accordingly decreed each suit for Rs. 1,750 with interest and dismissed each suit to the extent of Rs. 250. Incidentally he mentioned that the rate of interest payable to Madan Mohan was 10½ per cent. while the plaintiff's lent at 7½ per centum.

Both sides preferred appeals and the learned Judge dismissed all the appeals.

For the defendants the pleas are again taken that the debts due to Madan Mohan on the earlier bonds did not constitute antecedent debts and that necessity has not been proved.

There are many judgments as to the true meaning of the words "antecedent debt" but it is not necessary now to allude to decisions earlier than that of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1), dated March 9th, 1917, the decision to which both the lower Courts refer. That was a decision by the Privy Council, and Lord Shaw, in delivering judgment, quoted a passage from the case of Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohan (2), in which it was said that the decisions had established the principle that the sons cannot set up their rights against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt, he then went on to say: "These expressions.....do not give any countenance to the idea that the joint family estate can be effectively sold or charged "in such a manner as to bind the issue of the father, except where the sale or charge has been made in order to discharge an obligation not only antecedently incurred, but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate. The exception being allowed, as in the state of the authorities it must be, it appears to their Lordships to apply and to apply only to the case where the father's debts have been incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from immoveable assets which do not personally belong to him but are joint family property."

The view thus expressed seems in some quarters to have been regarded as upsetting accepted ideas, and our attention has been drawn in particular to a decision by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court, Arumugam Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (3). We need not, however, discuss that case, for since then there has been another decision by the Privy Council. The case of Ram Singh v. Chet Ram (4) was decided by a Division Bench of the Allahabad Court shortly before the Madras case. The learned Judges quoted the passage that I have just quoted, and held that the obligation incurred by a father which would be binding upon his sons must have two attributes, namely, first, that it must have been incurred antecedently to the transaction in suit and, secondly, it must have been incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such a joint estate. Accordingly, they held that a mortgage by the father in 1904 could not be regarded as an antecedent debt which would make a sale of the mortgaged property in 1907 binding on the sons. The mortgagee purchasers appealed to the Privy Council, and the decision delivered on April 10, 1922 is reported in Chet Ram v. Ram Singh (5). Lord Shaw again delivered the judgment and he repeated what he had said in Sahu Ram's case, and affirmed the view taken of the earlier decision by the Allahabad Judges. It is clear, therefore, that the plaintiffs cannot rely upon the previous mortgage to Madan Mohan as antecedent debt.

The position in the present case is that the learned Judge has followed the decision in Sahu Ram's case correctly, so far as he has refused to treat the debts due to Madan Mohan on the prior mortgages as antecedent debts. He is correct, too, in thinking that the other ground on which the mortgages could be supported as against the sons is the ground of necessity, but when he deals with the question whether there was necessity I think he makes a mistake. He says that the plaintiffs cannot be asked to do more than prove the representations made to them on the strength of which they made the loans, and when they have proved that they were told of the mortgages to Madan Mohan, that their money was used in discharging the sums due to Madan Mohan and that they lent at a lower rate of interest than Madan Mohan, he holds that they are entitled to claim that necessity has been proved. It appears to me that such a line of reasoning reduces to nothing the principle enunciated by the Privy Council; for it amounts practically to saying that although the prior mortgages are not "antecedent debts" within the technical meaning of those words, they are by themselves almost complete evidence of the other independent ground on which the alienation can be supported.

In my opinion the ground of necessity requires proof from additional sources. The prior mortgages are evidence of indebtedness and to that extent of necessity, and the lower rate of interest is evidence of expediency but more is required, and, hard as it may seem, I think it was the duty of the plaintiffs to carry their case further back and prove that the original indebtedness sprang from necessity. It is conceded, however, that they have not tried to go beyond their own mortgages, except so far as vague statements are made about arrears of putni rent: consequently, I hold that they have failed to prove the alternative ground of necessity.

The result is that the appeals must be allowed and the suit dismissed.

With regard to costs, I think that the dates of the decisions which I have mentioned warrant us in showing some consideration to the plaintiffs, and that they should be directed to pay only half the defendants' costs in all Courts.

ASARAM—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1909) Sch. I, Art. 166.—Application to set aside execution sale—Limitation, commencement of.

Under Art. 166 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act, time for an application to set aside a sale in execution of a decree begins to run from the date of the sale and not from the date on which the deposit of 25 per cent. is made by the decree-holder, or the date on which the sale is confirmed.

Appeal against the order in Civil Appeal No. 28 of 1922 of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Wardha, dated 27th April 1922.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. V. Pradhan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the respondent obtained a decree in Civil Suit No. 314 of 1916 on the file of the Munsif, Wardha, against the original mortgagor and Sitaram, the present appellant, a subsequent purchaser. There was an appeal against this decree but it was dismissed. The suit was filed on a mortgage of a house and site. The decree-holder applied for execution of the decree and the house was attached and sold on 21st November 1921. On 22nd December 1921 the present appellant applied to get the sale set aside for various reasons. That application has been rejected as time-barred and the rejection is confirmed on appeal.

It is here argued that time begins to run from the date on which the 25 per cent. deposit mentioned in O. XXI, r. 84, of the Civil Procedure Code, is made and not from the date of sale. Munshi Lal v. Ram Narain

KALU SINGH v. HANSRAJ UPADHIYA

(1) is quoted in support of this view. It is further contended that if time does not run from the date of deposit of 25 per cent. it runs from the date of confirmation of the sale. It seems to me that the proposition that time commences to run from the date of the deposit of 25 per cent. is wrong and as regards the second argument advanced it seems to me, in the words of Sir Henry Stanyon in his judgment in Wasudeo v. Hirulal (M. A. 31 of 1911, dated 16th July 1912), that the contention that under Art. 166 of the Limitation Act time begins to run from the date of confirmation of the sale is repelled by the language of the Article itself. Art. 166 of the Limitation Act states that an application to set aside a sale in execution of a decree has to be presented within thirty days counting from the date of the sale and, in this view of the law, the orders of the Courts below are correct. This second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The appellant will pay the respondent's costs

KALU SINGH v. HANSRAJ UPADHIYA

Mere silence in a lease on the subject that the lessee would be liable to ejectment on non-payment of rent does not imply that the lessee cannot be so ejected. [p. 48, col. 2]

Plaintiffs were granted a lease bila miad to cultivate the land, and were enjoined to pay the rent, and the lessors were given the right of recovering the rent by suit or by distraint:

Held, that the lease was one from year to year and not perpetual. [p. 48, col. 2]

Two independent documents which contain no reference to each other cannot be combined to constitute a Zar-i-peshgi lease. [p. 48, col. 2]

A tenant or a year to year lessee is not a person who has such an interest in the property given to him for cultivation as is contemplated in clauses (a) and (b) of section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act, so as to enable him to redeem the property. [p. 49, col. 1]

Mr. Niamatullah, for the Respondents Nos. 1 and 2. Respondents 3 and 4 (B. Nagar-sen Singh and Pateshwari Singh) duly served—absent. Trial ex parte as against them.

JUDGMENT.—The lessees from a mortgagor sued for the redemption of a mortgage executed by the mortgagor prior to the date of the lease. Their suit was decreed by the first Court of the Munsif of Akbarpur but the decree was set aside and the suit dismissed by the Appellate Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad. The question at issue is whether the plaintiffs had any such interest in the land as is described in section 91 (a) and (b) of the Transfer of Property Act so as to entitle them to redeem. Those provisions of the Law give a right to redemption to any person having any interest in or charge upon the property or upon the right to redeem the property. First, it has to be determined whether the plaintiffs are perpetual lessees or lessees only from year to year. According to the terms of the lease, the lease is granted bila miad to cultivate the land. The lessees are enjoined to pay the rent and the lessors are given the right of recovering the rent by a suit for the recovery of rent or by distraint. The words 'patta bila miad' are also quoted at the end of the document to describe the nature of the document executed by the mortgagors. The learned Judges of the two Subordinate Courts were both Indians and acquainted with the Vernacular. The first Court held that 'bila miad' meant in perpetuity, while the Appellate Court disagreed and held the terms to indicate a lease for which no period was fixed. According to the interpretation of the lower Appellate Court the lease was one from year to year according to the terms of section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. Personally, I think that the terms of the document should be examined to interpret the word which, in its common acceptance, may mean either undetermined or perpetual. In the present case the interpretation put on the bond by the lower Appellate Court appears to me to be better justified according to the terms of the document. There are no words in the document to indicate the perpetual nature of the transfer. It was pointed out that the lessor on non-payment by the lessee could not eject under the terms of the contract. Mere silence on the subject that lessee would be liable to ejectment on non-payment of rent does not imply that the lessee could not be so ejected. In a ruling of the Board of Revenue referred to by the learned Counsel for the appellant (Unpublished decision, Vol. 2, p. 479) the term bila miad was taken to mean perpetual lease, but in that case one of the terms of the document was that the lessees were not to be ejected so long as they paid their rent. I hold that the lease is one from year to year and not perpetual.

My attention was drawn to a bond executed by the mortgagor for Rs. 4,000 in favour of the lessee in which Rs. 2,200 was left with the lessee to redeem the present mortgage in suit. This, however, was an independent transaction and the money was not made recoverable by the sale of the property in suit or by the creation of any charge on the property. The terms of the recovery were the usual ones "from the person and property of the borrower."

The two independent documents which contain no reference to each other cannot be combined to constitute a zar-i-peshgi lease.

The next argument of the learned Counsel was that even if the lease was given from year to year he was entitled to redeem. This argument is not sound. Interest in property cannot mean the interest of a tenant, because in that case when zemindari property is the subject of mortgage all the tenants of the land would have to be made parties to the suit in a suit for sale or redemption under O. XXXIV, r. 1. It was the opinion of a learned Judge of the Allahabad High Court in Rajendra Prasad v. Ramjatan Rai (1), that a mere tenant or an ordinary lessee had no right to redeem though a perpetual lessee had. The mortgagor who had given a usufructuary mortgage put the mortgagee in possession and had no such possession of the land which he could make over to a lessee from year to year and thus there was no such interest in the property in the mortgagor which he could pass to the lessee. The mortgagor was owner of the equity of redemption. He had not made any transfer thereof. I am opinion that a tenant or a year to year lessee is not a person who has a right to redeem the property given to him for cultivation.

The appeal fails and I dismiss it with costs. Costs will be paid to the respondents mortgagees.

DAYARAM —RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLVII and O. XXXVI r. 14—Mortgage suit—Consent decree for instalments, whether final decree—Charge created on mortgaged property—Execution—Charged property, whether can be sold in execution—Right of legal representative to claim property in individual capacity in execution proceedings—Sind Encumbered Estates Act (XX of 1896), s. 19, cl. 3, whether applies to execution proceedings.

In a suit based on a mortgage-bond a consent decree was passed against the heirs of the deceased mortgagor, the decretal amount being made payable by instalments with a charge on the mortgaged property, the personal liability of the judgment-debtors being excluded and property other than the mortgaged property being exempted from liability. It was contended in execution proceedings that this was not a final decree and, further, that it was only a declaratory decree and as such was not capable of execution:

Held, that the decree was a final decree; that the judgment creditor had the right to bring the property charged to sale in execution proceedings, and that no separate suit for the sale of the property was necessary. [p. 50, col. 2]

Ambala Bapubhai v. Narayan Satyaba, 51 Ind. Cas. 929, 21 Bom. L. R. 698, 43 B. 681, relied upon.

Section. 19, cl. 8 of the Sind Encumbered Estates Act applies to execution proceedings as well as to suits. [p. 51, col. 1]

Pinia Shah v. Abdulla 30 Ind. Cas. 25, 9 S. L. R., 45, relied upon.

A party to execution proceedings as a legal representative cannot have a claim in his individual capacity inquired into under the provisions of section 47, Civil Procedure Code, but must file a separate suit in respect thereof, for it is only as a third party that such a claim can be preferred by him. [p. 51, col. 2; p. 52 col. 1]

The object of O. XXXIV, r. 14 of the Civil Procedure Code is to prevent mortgagees from suing their mortgagors on the mortgage debts as such, and in execution selling the bare equity of redemption, thereby depriving the mortgagor of the right of redemption that would be given to him by the decree for sale. [p. 50, col. 2]

Appeals from judgments and decrees, dated the 31st October 1919, of the District Judge, Hyderabad.

Mr. Issardas Ullharum, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kimutrai Bhojraj for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal arising out of execution proceedings. Respondents who had filed a suit on a mortgage-deed, obtained a consent decree against the heirs of one Gulam, deceased, the mortgagor, the decretal amount being payable by instalments with a charge on the mortgaged property. There was a failure in payment of three instalments and the respondents applied for sale of the mortgaged land.

Objections were taken to the grant of the execution application by one of the judgment-debtors Murad, a nephew of Gulam, deceased, on behalf of himself and the wife and daughter of the said Gulam, and as the same objections have been urged before us, I shall formulate them as follows :—

MURAD V. DAYARAM.

(1) The decree is merely a declaratory decree and, therefore, the execution application is not maintainable.

(2) The execution application is time-barred.

(3) No final decree has been passed and, therefore, again the execution application is unentertainable.

(4) It is denied that Murad, the appellant, and his father, Mubarak, were the heirs of the deceased Gulam and the property mortgaged by Gulam and now sought to be sold had been purchased by Murad and belonged to him. The executing Court after consideration of the objections directed execution to issue, and its order was on appeal confirmed by the District Court Hyderabad.

The decree was the result of a compromise between the parties and to this compromise appellant Murad was undoubtedly a party. It is obvious that the decree was not intended to be a preliminary decree, it was made in terms of the compromise between the parties, the decretal amount being payable by instalments and provision was made for the failure in payment of any instalment. The parties clearly intended it to be a final decree regulating their rights and liabilities.

Was it, however, merely a declaratory decree as contended by the appellants? This argument is based on the following terms of the decree. The mortgage lien of the plaintiff will remain intact on Survey Nos. 19 and 20 out of the above specified mortgaged property to the extent of 9-annas share on Survey No. 19 and 10-annas share on Survey No. 20, as it stands in the name of Gulam but the right over the other immoveable property specified in the plaint will continue in mortgage till the satisfaction of the whole amount as far as is shown in the mortgage-deed sued on. Later on the decree provides, "the defendants will not be considered to be personally responsible for the payment of the above amount nor will any property of theirs other than the above-mentioned property remain liable therefor."

The question turns upon the construction of the decree. It will be observed that by the terms of the decree the personal liability of the judgment-debtors has been expressly excluded and equally their property other than that mortgaged has been exempted from liability. The suit was based on the mortgage-deed. Could it then possibly have been the intention of the parties, when they entered into a compromise in terms of which a consent decree was to be passed, that in the event of the judgment-debtors failing to pay any of the instalments the judgment-creditor was to be driven to the necessity of filing a separate suit to realise the amount due out of his security? It would have been a most inequitable compromise if this were to be the result. What the parties evidently contemplated was that the decretal amount should be paid by instalments and the decretal amount was declared a charge on the property mortgaged, which meant, particularly as the person and other property of the judgment-debtors were declared exempt from arrest or attachment, that the property on which a charge had been declared could be proceeded against by sale in execution proceedings. The case of Ambulal Bapubhai v. Narayan Satyaba (1) has several marks of analogy with the present case. There also a lien was declared on certain immoveable property of the defendant to secure repayment of the decretal amount and it was held that the plaintiffs had the right to bring the property charged to sale in execution proceedings, and that no separate suit for the sale of the property was necessary. The object of O. XXXIV, r. 14 is to prevent mortgagees from suing their mortgagors on the mortgage-debt as such and in execution selling the bare equity of redemption depriving the mortgagor of the right of redemption that would be given to him by the decree for sale: Khizarajmal v. Daim (2). In the present case, however, by the consent decree, the decretal amount was payable by instalments, which, if regularly paid, would extend over a period of 8 years; there was a clear stipulation that the judgment-debtors would not be personally responsible for the payment of the decretal amount nor any other property besides the property mortgaged would be liable. It appears to me that with this express stipulation the parties agreed that, in the event of the failure of the payment of any instalment, the judgment-creditors could proceed to sale of the mortgaged property in execution proceedings.

MURAD v. DAYARAM.

(2) With regard to the second objection as to the execution application being time-barred, it appears that the application was made owing to the failure to pay the first three instalments on the 3rd November 1917; the time for executing the decree in respect of these three instalments expired on the 1st January 1915, 1st January 1916, and 1st January 1917, respectively. But, admittedly, the respondents were under the protection of the Manager, Sind Encumbered Estates, from 15th May 1913 to 30th July 1917, and the respondents contend that this period should be excluded in computing the period of limitation. Appellants rely on section 19, cl. (3) of the Sind Encumbered Estates Act as showing that it excludes only the period of time applicable to suits and not to execution proceedings. Section 5 of the said Act provides that the Commissioner, when he has ordered an inquiry under section 4, has the power to grant an interim order of protection in respect of all proceedings in any Civil or Revenue Court pertaining to the debts and liabilities to which the debtor is subject, and cl. B of section 5 lays down that no fresh proceedings, processes, executions or attachments shall be instituted in any Civil or Revenue Court in respect of such debts or liabilities. Section 9 of the Act lays down that, on the publication of the order of management, all proceedings pending in any Civil or Revenue Court in respect to debts and liabilities shall be stayed. Now, though clause (3) to section 19 of the Sind Encumbered Estates Act refers to suits alone, yet it is well established that applications in execution are proceedings in suits: Mulla's Civil Procedure Code p. 308, and the object of the Encumbered Estates Act is to stay all proceedings in respect of all debts or liabilities to which the debtor is subject: Pinial Shih v. Abdulla (3). The respondents could not have proceeded with the execution application during the time the estate of the appellants was under management and therefore this time should be excluded in computing the period of limitation.

(3) It was next urged that a portion of property mortgaged by Gulam, deceased, and now sought to be sold was the property of the appellant Murad and that this contention could be raised only in execution proceedings and not by separate suit, and that both the lower Courts refused to entertain it.

The suit in respect of which the compromise decree had been entered into was filed against the legal representatives of Gulam, deceased, including Murad, he consented to his description as such, and did not raise any contention that the property in respect of which the mortgage-decree was sought was his property. Further, and it is of importance to note, he was a party to the compromise-decree which represented the mortgaged property as that of Gulam, deceased, and consented to the property being subject to the mortgage claim. It was argued that as Murad was on the record as one of the legal representatives of Gulam, it was not possible for him to urge in the suit his right to the property in his individual capacity. I cannot conceive any bar to his protesting against being on the record as a legal representative of Gulam, for if he was the real owner of the property, his individual interests were in conflict with those as a legal representative of Gulam. Besides, I am unable to imagine any difficulty to prevent him from filing a suit for declaration only, (as he contends that the property mortgaged is in his possession) that Gulam had no authority to mortgage the property. But he goes the length, without a word of protest, of compromising the suit with the respondents and consenting to the mortgaged property being liable for the mortgage claim. It cannot be overlooked that what is sought to be sold is the right, title and interest of the deceased Gulam in the property under mortgage, and, so far as I can conceive, there is nothing to prevent the claim of the appellant Murad being notified at the time of the sale, but beyond that it would be outside the province of this Court at this stage to consider whether the appellant Murad has any, and if so what, interest in the mortgaged property. Several cases were cited by Counsel for the appellant based on section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and he attempted to show that the question between the parties was one relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, and that this fell within the province of the executing Court and a separate suit was not maintainable. But the question that the appellant Murad seeks to raise is not as the legal representative of the deceased Gulam but in his own individual capacity. Property directed to be sold under a mortgage-decree does not require to be attached by way of execution and if the property is claimed by a third party, for it is in that capacity that Murad is to be regarded, as he does not claim it as the legal representative of Gulam but in his own individual right, he must file a suit for a declaration that the property belonged to him.

This disposes of all the contentions raised in this appeal which we must dismiss with costs on the appellants.

In Appeal No. 24 of 1921 between the same parties the same Counsel for the appellant relied on the same contentions as in the former appeal. The decree in this case expressly provides for the sale of the mortgaged property if the decretal amount is not paid within the time fixed. For reasons given in the previous appeal we dismiss this appeal likewise with costs.

The office of trustee is incapable of transfer. Therefore, where it is impossible to dissociate the office of trustee from the possession of property, the transfer of property virtually amounts to parting with the office, and such an alienation cannot be recognised. [p. 54, Col. 1]

An assignee of a part of the mortgage security is not liable to contribute as against the mortgagor to the payment of the mortgage-debt. Therefore, if a mortgagor sells a part of an encumbered estate with a covenant against encumbrances, he cannot claim contribution from the purchaser because he is himself liable for the whole debt. [p. 54, Col. 2]

Per Venkatasubba Rao, J. The general rule enacted in section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act as to contribution between properties subject to a common mortgage is subject to the exception in section 56 of the same Act that a mortgagor who sells a part of an encumbered estate with a covenant against encumbrances cannot claim contribution from the purchaser [p. 56, Col. 1]

An admission by a benamidar that some third person is the beneficial owner cannot have the effect of conveying to such person either the beneficial or the legal interest in the properties and an alienation by the benamidar of the legal interest is invalid and cannot affect the title of the real owner more especially if the alienee is aware of the benami title of the vendor. JUDGMENT.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The plaintiff alleges that in pursuance of a mortgage-decree his properties were sold; that a certain amount was realised and credited towards the decree; that the first defendant was the owner of some of the other properties also included in the mortgage, and that the amount paid towards the mortgage by the 1st defendant was less than what he would be made liable to pay having regard to the value of those items. The plaintiff, therefore, claims in the present suit contribution from the 1st defendant, being the difference between the amount rateably due in respect of the latter properties and the amount actually paid by him.

The plaintiff's right to maintain the suit is questioned, and to deal with this objection it is necessary to set forth a few facts.

One Krishnaswamy Aiyar had two sons, Seshasayi and Lakshmikantham, and they formed members of a joint Hindu family. On the 11th of September 1890, they mortgaged the properties described in Schedules A to F of the plaint to certain persons for a sum of Rs. 17,000 (Ex. K). On 15th December 1891 the amount due on the mortgage was Rs. 21,000 and Krishnasamy having died, his sons sold F Schedule properties to one Sundarachari for a sum of Rs. 12,500 (Ex. I.) and mortgaged the properties in Schedules A to E to the same person for Rs. 8,500 (Ex. II). Sundara charlu was directed to pay the two sums of Rs. 12,500 and Rs. 8,500, which made a total of Rs. 21,000, in discharge of the original mortgage (Ex. K). On the 8th May 1899, there was a partition between Seshasayi and Lakshmikantham. The properties described in Schedules A and E fell to the share of Seshasayi and those in Schedules B, C and D to the share of Lakshmikantham. On 6th November 1899, Seshasayi sold to the 1st defendant the properties in Schedules A and E (Ex. B). On the 15th September 1902, Sundaracharlu executed a reconveyance in respect of the properties in Schedule F in favour of Seshasayi (Ex. IV). On the 11th October 1902 Seshasayi sold the properties in Sch. F to the plaintiff (Ex. A). On the 1st July 1905, the properties in Schedule E were conveyed by the 1st defendant in favour of the 12th defendant. On the 2nd September, 1909, the plaintiff sold back the properties in F Schedule to Seshasayi (Ex. A, 2). On the 13th September 1909 a suit was instituted on the footing of the original mortgage, Ex. K., which will be referred to as 49 of 1909. On the 20th September Seshasayi sold the F Schedule properties to one Pichandi who is said to be a servant of the plaintiff, and on the 27th September 1909, Pichandi in turn sold the said properties to one Venkatachalapathy Naidu. In 1913 the final decree was passed in the mortgage suit 49 of 1909 and on the 9th February 1917 the properties described in B, C and D Schedules were sold by the representatives in interest of Lakshmikantham to the 1st defendant.

From the facts stated above it will be seen that the owners of the various properties with which we are concerned were as follows :

A to D properties were owned by the 1st defendant.

E properties were owned by the 12th defendant.

F properties were owned by Venkatachalapathy Naidu. But in this connection it is necessary to notice certain facts having a bearing upon the ownership of the properties in F Schedule. Subsequent to the passing of the final decree in 49 of 1909, the present plaintiff filed a suit for a declaration that, although the properties in F Schedule ostensibly belonged to Venkatachalapathy, he was in truth the owner thereof; and on the 4th November 1915 a razinama was entered into between the widows of Venkatachalapathy and the plaintiff which contains an admission of the plaintiff's title to the said properties. The material portion of the razinama is this :

" In respect of the suit which the plaintiff instituted against us for a declaration that the sale-deed executed in the name of our husband was executed only nominally on behalf of the plaintiff and that we have no right whatever therein * * * * as it is learnt that the sale deed was, as alleged by the plaintiff, executed nominally on behalf of the plaintiff, it is settled that the plaintiff shall get a declaration that he himself is entitled to the said properties * * *." In virtue of this razinama the plaintiff asserts that he is the owner of the F. Schedule properties and that he is entitled as such owner to contribution.

In paragraph 7 of the 1st defendant's written statement in the present suit, the following plea was raised :—

"The plaintiff further, in the dealings relating to the F. Schedule properties, was a mere name-lender and alias of Seshasayi whose friend he was throughout."

The learned Subordinate Judge on this plea raised the issue : " was the plaintiff the real owner ?" and recorded a finding adverse to the plaintiff. With this finding of fact I entirely agree. On behalf of the plaintiff (appellant) no motive was suggested for the numerous dealings with the properties described in the F Schedule. As already observed, they were sold on the 15th December 1894 to Sundaracharlu and Sundaracharlu reconveyed them to Seshasayi on the 15th September 1902, and on the 11th October 1902, Seshasayi sold them to the plaintiff. This sale in favour of the plaintiff is admitted to be merely nominal. In fact, in a deposition given by the plaintiff he said that the properties were not his and that he was supervising them on behalf of Seshasayi. It is also not disputed that Seshasayi and the plaintiff were on very intimate terms. We have not been referred to the circumstances in which the sale was made in favour of the plaintiff in 1902 or to the motive for the transaction. Whatever be the reason, the sale was fictitious and the plaintiff himself had to admit that it was so. Presumably, to get over the effect of this admission, another sale-deed was executed by Seshasayi in favour of the plaintiff (Ex. A-1) on 17th April 1906. If the plaintiff was already the owner, there was no need to have a second sale-deed in his favour. It seems me, therefore, that the second sale-deed was got up merely with a view to keep up the pretence that the plaintiff was the real owner of the property although in fact he was not. This view receives support from Ex. XIX, dated 7th August 1909, a letter addressed by the plaintiff to Seshasayi. He says :—

"As you ask me to execute a sale-deed for the resale of the properties for which you have executed a sale-deed to me, I have no objection to so execute the sale-deed for the resale." It is in pursuance of this letter that the plaintiff reconveyed the properties to Seshasayi on 2nd September 1909 (Ex. A-2). The appellant's learned Vakil has not been able to tell us why the properties were reconveyed to Seshasayi. But it is clear from Ex. XIX that the plaintiff was never the owner of them and that the properties were ultimately conveyed to the man to whom they belonged, namely, to Seshasayi. The fact that the plaintiff remained in possession of them is of little importance because, as the plaintiff admitted in a previous deposition, he was supervising the properties on behalf of the true owner, Seshasayi. If, so far, therefore, Seshasayi continued to remain the true owner of the properties notwithstanding the fact that they stood sometimes in the name of the plaintiff, did anything that happened subsequently have the effect of transferring the ownership to the plaintiff? The reconveyance in favour of Seshasayi was on the 2nd September 1909; eleven days later, the suit 49 of 1909 was filed. A week subsequent to the filing of the suit Seshasayi sold the properties to Pichandi, and a week later again Pichandi sold the properties to Vencatachalapathy Naidu. In the course of less than a month, the properties were thus transferred thrice. The plaintiff asserts that the sales in favour of Pichandi and in favour of Vencatachalapathy were benami for himself. The plaintiff was made a party to 49 of 1909. He did not set up in the written statement filed in that suit that he was the owner of the properties. Although there was an interval of about five years between the institution of the suit and the final decree passed in it, during that period the plaintiff never asserted that he owned the properties. It is now argued on his behalf that in 1915 Vencatachalapathy's widows having admitted his ownership, his title to the properties cannot be questioned. This argument is clearly untenable. The parties who made the admission may be estopped from denying the plaintiff's title but the 1st defendant is not bound by the proceedings which culminated in the razinama.

The compromise between the widows of Vencatachalapathy and the plaintiff is clear evidence of the fact that the former were not the owners of the properties. On the evidence in the case, I am clearly of the opinion that, on the date of the compromise, Seshasayi or his representative was the beneficial owner. What then is the position of affairs? Seshasayi, on our finding, was the beneficial owner. Vencatachalapathy's widows were benamidars and the plaintiff got them to admit that he was the real owner. Does any interest in these circumstances pass to the plaintiff? I am clearly of the opinion that the plaintiff has acquired no interest in the properties. It has been strenuously argued by Mr. Alladi Krishnaswami Aiyar for the appellant that, on our finding, Vencatachalapathy's widows being benamidars for Seshasayi were in the position of trustees and that the legal ownership was by the razinama transferred from the widows of Vencatachalapathy to the plaintiff. In the first place, there was no conveyance at all. There was merely an admission by benamidars that a person who was not the true owner was the true owner. I fail to see how such an admission can give a stranger to the properties any right over them. The widows did not profess to deal with the legal (as distinguished from the beneficial) ownership which they possessed and there was no attempt to convey this legal ownership. The mere fact that the widows admitted the plaintiff to be the beneficial owner, which he was not, cannot have the effect of conveying to the plaintiff the interest of Vencatachalapathy's widows in the properties.

In the second place, granting that the transaction amounted to a conveyance, what is the legal effect of the transaction? Vencatachalapathy's widows being benamidars were merely possessed of the legal ownership in the properties. They were the trustees in respect of the properties accountable to Seshasayi. There could not be an effectual transfer of the trust. The office of trustee is incapable of transfer. See Rajah Varmah Valia v. Ravi Varma Kunhikuti (1) and Ganasumbanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (2). It was impossible to dissociate the office of trustee from the possession of the properties. The widows of Venkatachalapathy were bound to preserve the properties and to render an account in respect of them to Seshasayi. The parting with the properties virtually amounted to parting with the office and such an alienation cannot be recognised. Moreover, the plaintiff knew that Seshasayi was the owner. The essence of the transaction was the recognition of the plaintiff as the owner while, as a matter of fact, he was not owner. The clear object of the transaction was to make out that party who was not entitled to the properties was the real owner thereof. It is fraudulent and the Courts will refuse to give recognition to the transaction. If Seshasayi or his representative was not a party to the transaction, it was clearly a fraudulent attempt by Venkatachalapathy's widows and the plaintiff to create a title in the plaintiff to the detriment of Seshasayi. If, on the other hand, Seshasayi or his representative was also a party to the transaction, it should undoubtedly have been brought about with the fraudulent object of making it appear that the plaintiff was the owner, while he was not, in order to enable him to file this suit. In my view, therefore, the plaintiff is not a benamidar for Seshasayi. I have found that Seshasayi is the owner of the properties in the F. Schedule and I am also clear that the plaintiff has no interest whatsoever in the properties. He is neither the beneficial nor the legal owner.

.It has been argued on behalf of the appellant, on the strength of Gur Narain v. Sheolal Singh (3), that a benamidar can successfully maintain a suit. But this argument is of little avail in view of the finding that the plaintiff is not even the benamidar for Seshasayi in respect of the suit properties. Granting for a moment that the plaintiff is the benamidar for Seshasayi, the further question arises, is the suit for contribution at the instance of Seshasayi maintainable? If Seshasayi cannot bring the suit, his benamidar cannot equally maintain it. The appellant's learned Vakil relies upon section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act. The material portion of the section is as follows :—

"Where several properties whether of one or several owners, are mortgaged to secure one debt, such properties are, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, liable to contribute rateably to the debt secured by the mortgage, after deducting from the value of each property the amount of any other incumbrance to which it is subject at the date of the mortgage." So far as contribution is claimed against the A Schedule properties, it must be remembered that the 1st defendant became the owner of them in virtue of a sale in his favour by Seshasayi himself. In regard to those properties the position is this: The mortgagor Seshasayi who was the owner of the properties in A and F Schedules sold the properties in A Schedule to the 1st defendant. Can he, then, as owner of the properties in F. Schedule, claim that A Schedule properties are liable to contribute to the mortgage debt? The answer is furnished by In re Darling's Estate : Rendell v. Darby (4). It was held in it that an assignee of a part of the mortgage security was not liable to contribute as against the mortgagor to the payment of the mortgage debt. An assignor, having executed a deed of charge to his bankers in respect of various items of property, assigned by a voluntary deed one of those items to his wife. The latter deed contained no reference to the charge. The assignor died and his executors paid off the debt due to the Bank. The question arose whether the widow as assignee of one of the items was liable to contribute to the payment of the debt. It was held that the widow was under no liability to contribute. Warrington, J., says :—

"The assignor owed a sum of money charged on certain property. What equity would he have had in his lifetime to call upon an assignee from him to pay any part of that debt? I can see none, unless he assigned the property subject to the debt. If, then, the assignor would have had no such equity, I fail to see what greater right his executors can have to call upon the assignee to contribute."

(4) (1907) 2 Ch. 465J. ; 76 L. Ch. 689; 97 L. T. 900.

To entitle one to contribution from another, their equities must be equal. If, for instance, there was any obligation on the person who paid the encumbrance to discharge it as a debt of his own, he cannot claim anything from that another; and, similarly, if a mortgagor sells a part of an encumbered estate with a covenant against encumbrances he cannot claim contribution from the purchaser because he is himself liable for the whole debt. See Halsbury, Vol. 21, p. 305, and Ghose on Mortgages, 4th Edition, Vol. 1, p. 374.

In the sale-deed by Seshasayi conveying the A Schedule properties to the 1st defendant, the former makes a distinct allegation that the debt under Ex. K was discharged and that the sale was not subject to the encumbrance evidenced by the said document. In the face of this, it is impossible to hold that Seshasayi is entitled to contribution from the 1st defendant so far as the A Schedule properties are concerned. The principle underlying the decision in In re Darling's estate : Rendall v Darby (4) is recognised in section 56 of the Transfer of Property Act. It runs thus:—

"Where two properties are subject to a common charge and one of the properties is sold, the buyer is, as against the seller, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, entitled to have the charge satisfied out of the other property so far as such property will extend."

It has been contended by the appellant's learned Vakil, that as, on the date of the conveyance in favour of the 1st defendant of A Schedule properties, Seshasayi was not the owner of the properties described in F Schedule, the section has no application. Whether the terms of section 56 are literally applicable or not, there can be no doubt that the general rule enacted in section 82 is subject to the exception that a mortgagor is not entitled to contribution when he has assigned the property with an express covenant against encumbrances. In Kerr v. Kerr, (5) Christian, L. J., says:

"The conclusions which I gather from (5) (1869) Ir. R. 4 Eq. 15.

Herbert's case (6) are the following: First, that the original principle of the common law was equality, that is to say, contribution in the ratio of value, wholly irrespective of priority of dates of purchase; second, that the case of the debtor himself and his heir-at-law, in respect of retained lands was an exception to that principle by reason solely of his personal liability and that to such exception it mattered not whether the purchasers were such with consideration or without it." The Transfer of Property Act enacts the rule in section 82 and the exception in section 56. I am of the opinion that Seshasayi could not have successfully maintained a suit for contribution against the 1st defendant. It follows that, even if the plaintiff was the benamidar of Seshasayi, his suit would fail.

There is only one further matter to consider. If the 1st defendant, as the owner of the properties in Schedule A, is not liable to contribute, the question still remains, is he bound to contribute by reason of his being the owner of the properties in B, C and D Schedules? It is agreed on both sides that if the valuation adopted by the Subordinate Judge is accepted, no liability to contribution can arise; in other words, that the properties in B, C and D Schedules have paid their share of the mortgage-debt. But it is said that valuation is not correct, that the Subordinate Judge did not decide the issue relating to valuation in the judgment under appeal and that he postponed the consideration of it to be disposed of in C. S. No. 17 of 1919. It is then argued that the learned Subordinate Judge did not try the issue in the second suit, but the valuation was fixed by the consent of certain parties and that the plaintiff is not bound by it. There is no force in this contention as the plaintiff did not offer to give evidence in the second suit on the point and as he was not prevented from placing such materials as he could before the Court. There is no reliable affirmative evidence upon which we can act and disturb the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge. It is not seriously contended that there is material on the record which would justify a different finding.

In the result, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

SDEO RAM v. INDRAJ

One set to be divided among the respondents that have appeared in the proportion of their interests in the properties in A to D Schedules.

Phillips, J.—I agree and am of opinion that the decision may also be based on the short ground that all the dealings with the F. Schedule properties by Seshasayi from 1902 onwards were purely nominal and that the conveyance to plaintiff—Pichandi and Venkatachalapathy Naidu, (Ex. A series) were never intended to take effect—the property remaining all along in the ownership of Seshasayi. As plaintiff has no interest in the mortgage property he cannot claim contribution from defendant since the payment on account of Schedule F, if really made by plaintiff, must have been made by him as a volunteer, for he had no interest in Schedule F.

Where a vendee of land is, on the date of the sale, in physical possession of the land as lessee, he cannot take physical possession of the land under the sale, within the meaning of section 80 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, and limitation for a suit for pre-emption in respect of the sale would commence to run from the date of the mutation. Miscellaneous second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hissar, dated the 3rd April 1922, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st class, Hissar, dated the 11th May 1921, and dismissing the plaintiff's claim with costs.

Mr. N. C. Pandit, for the Appellant.

Lada Hargopal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against a decision of the District Judge of Hissar, dated the 3rd of April 1922, reversing a decision of the Munsif, dated the 11th of May 1921, granting plaintiff a decree for possession by pre-emption. The learned District Judge, holding that the claim was barred by limitation, has dismissed the suit. It appears that on the 21st of June 1918 one Shah Muhammad sold the land in suit with some other land to defendants 1 to 11 and father of defendants 12 and 13 for a sum of Rs. 5,800 by means of a sale-deed which, however, has not been placed upon the record. On the 8th of July 1919 defendants 1 to 13 are alleged to have sold this land to defendants 14, 15 and 16 for a sum of Rs. 381 and to have got mutation sanctioned in their favour on the 18th of July 1919. The plaintiff thereupon brought this suit for possession by pre-emption on the ground that he was a bisweddar in the village and that, therefore, he was entitled to pre-empt in preference to the defendants vendees who were not biswedders. The suit was resisted mainly on the ground that it was barred by limitation. Certain other pleas were also raised which, however, have not been decided by any of the Courts below, and it is, therefore, unnecessary to mention them in this judgment. It was alleged that the sale, as a matter of fact, had taken place on the 21st of June 1918; that the sale was in favour of all the defendants; that the names of defendants 1 to 13 had been mentioned in the sale-deed only for the sake of convenience, and that possession had been delivered to all the vendees including defendants 14 to 16 on the same date. It was consequently contended that the suit having been brought more than one year after possession was delivered it was barred by time. The trial Court rejected this plea and held that possession under the sale, as a matter of fact, passed on the 18th of July 1919 when mutation was sanctioned. The learned District Judge did not agree with this finding and held that the sale having taken place on the 21st of June 1918 as urged by the defendants the suit was barred by limitation. In my opinion the view of the learned District Judge is clearly wrong, and this appeal must succeed.

It appears that the defendants-vendees were already in possession of the land in suit before the sale as lessees, and it is impossible to hold that they took possession of the land under the sale when the sale was effected. In

BAKARAM v NARAYAN

Dhanna v. Lekh Ram (1) it has been held by Mr. Justice Martineau that it is impossible for a person to take physical possession of property of which he has already got the physical possession, and that time must run from the date of mutation under section 30 of the Pre-emption Act. Tala Ram v. Lorinda Ram (2) is also a case in point where under similar circumstances it was held that time began to run from the date of the mutation under the provisions of the Pre-emption Act and not before. In the present case it appears from an entry in the Revenue Records that the sale in favour of the defendants was orally effected on the 8th of July 1918, and not on the 21st of June 1918 as alleged by the defendants. The defendants being already in physical possession of the land sold, possession under the sale could not have passed before the mutation was sanctioned. The suit in the present case is, therefore, within time having been instituted within one year from the date of the mutation. As the other issues in the case have not been decided, a remand is necessary.

I accept the appeal and, setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, remand the case to that Court under O. XII, r. 23 of the Civil Procedure Code, for disposal of the appeal on the other issues. Court-fee will be refunded, and other costs will be costs in the case.

Case Law discussed.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, in Civil Appeal No. 34 of 1922, decided on the 29th March 1922.

Messrs. P. C. Dutt and M. R. Bodde, for the Appellants.

Messrs M Gupta and R. P. Awashy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are as follows.—One Dayaram was the owner of the property consisting of two villages. He died without issue in 1895 and the plaintiff, who was a distant relation, took possession. Thereupon Dayaram's sister's sons, Ramu, Renglal and others, brought a suit for possession, in which they succeeded in getting an 8-annas share of the property. Out of this Ramu and Renglal gave Umrao, who is also a son of one of Dayaram's sisters, a 1-anna share in each village by way of a family arrangement. They gave a similar share to Moji, another nephew of Dayaram.

Subsequently, the plaintiff purchased a 3-annas share in the villages from Renglal and Moji, and obtained possession of 2-annas share but was unable to obtain possession of the remaining 1-anna share, which was in possession of Umrao. He, therefore, sued for the possession of it from the defendants 1—4 to whom Umrao had transferred it. The Subordinate Judge, Betul, dismissed the plaintiff's suit and on appeal the District Judge, Hoshangabad, confirmed the decree.

The only points arising in appeal are as to the execution and validity of Exhibit 5 D-1, the document by which Umrao got a 1-anna share in a family arrangement. Both the Courts below have held this proved on the evidence of Renglal (D. W. 3) who is one of the executants. This is a finding of fact which will not be disturbed in second appeal. It is contended that the compromise was not referred to by Umrao in Suit No. 261 of 1913 brought by him against the plaintiff. That suit, however, was based on Umrao's own title as one of the nephews of Dayaram, and the question of a compromise between him and his cousins, the other nephews, had nothing to do with the suit. The suit was dismissed on the ground that Umrao was not born at the date of Dayaram's death in 1895, and was, therefore, not one of his heirs.

That the compromise was acted on is shown by the fact that Umrao's name was entered in the Revenue Records. It is to be observed that by a similar arrangement a 1-anna share was given to Moji, who is one of the plaintiff's vendors. It is contended that the document required registration, that the lower Courts found that the plaintiff had no notice of it, and that, therefore, the plaintiff's registered sale-deed is entitled to priority over it under section 50 of the Registration Act, and reference is made to Seth Ramlal v. Bhuria (1), Lalbeg v. Vishnusa (2), and Dundya v. Chembasapa (3), all of which are cases relating to registered and unregistered sale-deeds or mortgage-deeds, and as to the necessity of registration reference is made to Pranal Anni v. Lakshmi Anni (4), Muthayya v. Venkataratnam (5), and Kali Charan Ghosal v. Ram Chandra Mandal (6).

It is to be noted that in this case we are dealing with the case of a family arrangement which has been acted upon. It has been frequently held by the Privy Council and the High Courts that a Court of Equity will uphold such a family arrangement provided that it has been acted upon, even where legal forms have not been strictly complied with. In this connection I may refer to Baldeo Singh v. Udai Singh (7), where a number of cases on the point are cited, and refer in particular to the passage on page 12 where it is said: "Even if the petition of compromise required registration, it would still be admissible in evidence as collateral evidence of the agreement which the plaintiffs seek to impeach, though it might not operate to effectuate a valid transfer of rights; and inasmuch as it has been acted upon and the parties have enjoyed benefits thereunder irrespective of what might have been or might not have been their respective rights in the property from which they received those benefits, neither party can be allowed to resile from the arrangement then made." In Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (8), it was held that the acts and conduct of the parties founded upon the performance or part performance of such an agreement were sufficient to make it operative, for "equity will support a transaction clothed imperfectly in these legal forms to which finality attaches after the bargain has been acted upon."

In this case the arrangement by which Umrao got a 1-anna share in the villages has undoubtedly been acted upon. The executants of Exhibit 5 D 1 are bound by it and cannot go behind it, and the plaintiff who derives his rights from one of them, Renglal, will also be bound by it. The title of Moji depends on the same family arrangement and is evidenced by the same document. If the plaintiff seeks to set aside the arrangement as regards Umrao, it must be held invalid as against Moji also, and, therefore, the plaintiff can derive no title by his purchase from him, and as the plaintiff is admittedly to possession of a 2-annas share, he would not be entitled to claim a 1-anna share of Moji. The plaintiff cannot base his claim on the rights of Moji and deny those of Umrao, when both rights arise out of the same transaction.

I agree, therefore, with the lower Courts and hold that the family arrangement which was acted upon is valid and the plaintiff by his purchase from Renglal and Moji did not acquire any right to the share of Umrao. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Madgowkar, A. J. C.—During the pendency of the suit, the Nazir who was a Commissioner was, on the application to the Court of the parties, appointed an arbitrator, and he made an award under which he held Rs. 12,162-13-6 due to the plaintiff-appellant. The defendants-respondents objected to the award. The learned Judge below reduced the amount to Rs. 5,431. The plaintiff-appellant appeals here.

The main ground on which the learned Judge reduced the amount was apparently that the accounts had been taken by the arbitrator on a wrong basis. He further appears to have been of the opinion that the arbitrator in this instance being an officer of the Court, the award could be scrutinized to a greater extent than the award of an independent person.

The award, however, falls under the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure and the only power to modify or correct it is under para. 12 of that Schedule. The fact that the arbitrator was an officer of the Court does not affect the power or its exercise. It is now well settled that where, as in this instance, no misconduct is proved, except for a patent error apparent on the very face of the award as made, the award is final and the Courts cannot set it aside. Cf. Champsey Bhara & Co. v. Jivraj Balloo Spinning and Weaving Co. (1) In the present instance it should be observed that the plaintiff has in his plaint estimated his claim at Rs. 8,000 solely for the purpose of Court-fees and in para 9 he expressly stated that he was prepared to pay additional Court-fees if a larger sum is found due. The award, therefore, is not outside the plaint or the reference. Whatever, therefore, the merits of the accounts between the parties and whether the Court would or would not have arrived at the same finding of fact on these accounts, it is not, in our opinion, open to the Courts to modify the award on that ground, as the learned Judge below has in effect done. The parties with open eyes of their own accord deliberately chose to alter the legal position of the Nazir from that of a Commissioner into that of an arbitrator. If so, they must accept the legal consequences of their own action and accept the finality of the award on the fact at issue, namely, the amount due from the defendants-respondents to the plaintiff-appellant.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913) s. 22 (4)—Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908) s. 149—Pre-emption suit—Failure to deposit one-fifth of purchase-money—Extension of time—Procedure.

Section 149 of the Civil Procedure Code, which gives the Court a general power to enlarge the period fixed or granted for the doing of any act, is applicable to a case where the plaintiff in a pre-emption suit has failed to make the deposit required by section 22 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act within the time fixed by the Court. [p. 62, col. 2]

The words "his plaint shall be rejected" in clause (4) of section 22 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, read with the provision as to an extension of time contained in the same clause, means that the plaint shall be rejected if the Court should not deem it proper to allow further time, or, if the deposit is not made within such further time as the Court may allow. [p. 62, col. 2]

Where a plaintiff in a pre-emption suit fails to make the deposit required by section 22 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act within the time fixed by the Court, his plaint should not be rejected without affording him an opportunity to furnish an explanation of his failure to make the deposit and considering the question whether time should or should not be extended. JUDGMENT.—The question in this second appeal stated briefly is, whether the order of a Court of first instance rejecting a plaint under clause (4) of section 22 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913) on the ground that the plaintiff pre-emptor had failed to deposit 1/5th of the purchase-money within the time allowed to him for that purpose, can be reversed on appeal if the first Court did not take into consideration the advisability of allowing further time.

The order rejecting the plaint was made under the following circumstances:—

The plaint was filed not by the plaintiff himself but by his Pleader Lala Duni Chand, and in his presence an order was endorsed thereon on the 19th May 1919 directing issue of summonses to the defendants for settlement of issues on June the 13th and requiring the plaintiff to deposit 1/5th of the purchase-money on or before that date. The issues were eventually framed on the 16th July and then followed a few adjournments for evidence. It was on the 11th November that Counsel for the defendants drew the attention of the Court to the fact that the plaintiff had not complied with the order as to payment of 1/5th of the purchase-money, and the Court on discovering this rejected the plaint straight away. The plaintiff appealed from this order, and his main grounds of appeal were, (1) that the order of the 19th May was not complied with because it had not been pronounced, and (2) that the Court ought to have granted further time to deposit the money.

As to (1), the learned District Judge expressed the opinion that the plaintiff's Pleader Lala Duni Chand must be assumed to have been made aware of the order, but that he did not probably communicate it to his client. In respect of (2) he made the following remarks: "I think that when the matter was brought to the notice of the Court on November the 11th, it should have called on the plaintiff's mukhtar for some explanation as to why the amount had not been deposited, but the order does not show that this was done. There is, it is true, also nothing to show that any application was made by the plaintiff's mukhtar for an extension of time beyond his own affidavit in which he states that he offered to deposit the money if half an hour were allowed him for this purpose, but if this affidavit be not relied on, the order itself shows that it was passed summarily. In accordance with Narsingh Das v. Ghulan Nahi (1) the time could have been extended even after the period for depositing the money had passed, and I think that, in the circumstances of the case, there was sufficient reason for allowing the plaintiff a further opportunity."

As against the above conclusion, the argument of the learned Counsel on behalf of the defendant-appellant is to the following effect: "The order of the first Court rejecting the plaint was perfectly legal and was one that it was bound to pass because the law is that if the plaintiff fails within the time fixed by the Court to make the deposit his plaint shall be rejected. The plaint goes automatically if the deposit is not made. As the plaintiff failed to make the deposit the Court had no other alternative than to reject his plaint. This being so, the order was not liable to be interfered with by the lower Appellate Court. As regards the extension of time, it was not the duty of the first Court to call upon the plaintiff to explain why the money was not deposited within the time fixed. It was the plaintiff's own concern to give explanation and ask for an extension of time. If the first Court had refused to allow it in spite of the plaintiff's application for it the lower Appellate Court could in that case interfere with the order of the first Court on the ground that there was sufficient cause for enlargement of time."

The learned Counsel concedes that the Appellate Court possesses the same power as the first Court in respect of extension of time, and could reverse the order of the first Court if it were illegal or unjust. But he contends that before reversing it the lower Appellate Court ought to have recorded the finding that the order was wrong in law or unjust.

In our opinion it is clear that the phrase "his plaint shall be rejected," read with the provision as to an extension of time, means that the plaint shall be rejected if the Court should not deem it proper to allow further time. Therefore, the contention that the plaint goes automatically if the plaintiff fails to make the deposit possesses no force. According to section 22, clause (4), the plaint shall be rejected if the plaintiff fails to make the deposit (1) within the time fixed by the Court, or (2) within such further time as the Court may allow to make the deposit. In the event of his failing to comply within the time originally fixed and also within the one or more extensions of time that the Court may grant, the plaint shall be rejected. The mandatory phrase "the plaint shall be rejected" occurs in O VII, r 11, Civil Procedure Code, also, and is interpreted in the same way with reference to clauses (b) and (c) of that rule where the Court fixes time to correct the valuation of a claim or to make good the deficiency in Court-fee. Section 148 of the Civil Procedure Code (which is new) gives the Court a general power to enlarge the period fixed or granted for the doing of any act, and this principle applies in all such cases. Thus, the argument that the first Court was bound to reject the plaint forthwith is untenable. But that Court appears to have taken this erroneous view of the law, for no sooner was it brought to its notice that the deposit had not been made than it rejected the plaint before the plaintiff could come to know what action it was going to take or before he could give any explanation or apply for an extension of time. Though the Court of the first instance may not extend time suo motu it should not all the same act with such celerity as not to allow the plaintiff a moment for reflection or action. The language of the order shows that the plaintiff must have been taken by surprise because the order runs thus:—"Zar panjam was to be deposited by the 13th June 1919 but nothing has been paid to this day. Defence Counsel draws my attention to this fact to-day. I reject the plaint accordingly under section 22 of the Pre-emption Act."

The word 'accordingly' bears out the inference that the Court thought that the phrase 'the plaint shall be rejected' meant that the plaint must be rejected and accordingly rejected it at once. We are of opinion that, under those circumstances, the lower Appellate Court was competent to reverse the order of the first Court on the ground that it was passed summarily under the impression that no other order could be passed and that the first Court acted without applying its mind to the consideration of the circumstances which might have led it to extend time. Therefore, we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Central Provinces Tenancy Act (I of 1920), ss. 5, 11—Tenancy—Hindu Law—Succession by survivorship, whether applicable—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100—Second Appeal—Grounds.

The Hindu Law of succession by survivorship and as to the vesting of a son's interest by birth is not applicable to a tenancy governed by the Central Provinces Tenancy Act of 1920. [p. 63 Col. 2]

The general rule as to the grounds of Second Appeal is that a party is not entitled to a relief upon facts or documents not referred to or stated in the pleadings, nor on any ground which has never been considered, taken or tried in the Courts below, unless it is a pure point of law going to the question of jurisdiction of the lower Court and capable of being determined without a consideration of any other evidence than that on the record. [p. 64, Col. 1]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Betul, dated the 31st March 1922, in Civil Appeal No. 55 of 1921.

Mr. J. Sen, for the Respondent 1.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession of suit land on the ground that she was a tenant along with Sobharam, defendant No. 2, father of the defendant No. 1, and that she was dispossessed by the defendant No. 1. Both the Courts below dismissed her suit on the ground that her tenancy was not proved.

The finding as to the tenancy is a finding of fact, and it is not a suit between landlord and tenant but between a person claiming to be a tenant and a trespasser. It is contended that, so long as the defendant No. 2 is alive, his son, defendant No. 1, has no interest in the tenancy. A reference is made to Chanya v. Ukund Rao (1) in which it is held that the Hindu Law of succession by survivorship, and as to the vesting of a son's interest by birth, is not applicable to a tenancy governed by the Central Provinces Tenancy Act. This is the law in these Provinces, and, therefore, the defendant No. 1 has no interest in the tenancy during his father's lifetime. The same principle may be deduced from section 11 of the present Tenancy Act: of. also section 5. Defendant No. 2 supports the claim of the plaintiff. He had passed to her a document, which has been referred to by the lower Courts, and the defendant No. 1, regarding this as a transfer, proceeded under section 46 of the Tenancy Act of 1898, but his application was rejected as time-barred. It is argued, therefore, that the plaintiff entered into possession of the land in suit by virtue of the arrangement between herself and the defendant No. 2, which defendant No. 2 admits, and that defendant No. 2 is a mere trespasser and has no title to the land, and that this attempt to establish his title has been rejected by the Revenue Court. Hence the plaintiff is entitled to possession.

It is contended on behalf of the respondents that this plea is a new case set up for the first time in second appeal and that the plaintiff cannot be allowed to take this position. The suit in the lower Courts was based on title and title alone and not on possession, and reference is made to Kanhayalal Kunni v. Satiya (2) which lays down that an objection of mixed law and fact, where such fact is outside the findings arrived at by the Courts below, cannot be entertained for the first time in second appeal. The general rule as to grounds of appeal is that a party is not entitled to relief upon facts or documents not referred to or stated in the pleadings: cf. Muhammad Zahoor Ali Khan v. Thikoorani Rutha Koer (3), nor on any ground which has never been considered, taken or tried in the Courts below, cf. Sreemutty Dossee v. Rane Lalunmonee (4) unless it is a pure point of law going to the question of jurisdiction of the lower Courts and capable of being determined without the consideration of any other evidence than that on the record: see Fakir Chand v. Anunda Chand Bhuttacharji (5).

On reference to the pleadings I find that the plaintiff sued in ejectment as owner in possession, but on defendant denying her possession she applied for amendment of the plaint on 18th July 1921. In her rejoinder of that date, while asserting that the land in question was acquired by her husband and defendant 1's father, she specifically referred to defendant having no interest in his father's fields during the life time of his father. She referred to the agreement between herself and defendant 2 and to the rejection of defendant 1's application to the Revenue Court for setting aside the alleged transfer by his father. It will thus appear that the plaintiff did state the facts as to the agreement between her and defendant 2 and as to defendant 1 having no interest in the land during his father's life time and his unsuccessful attempt to get the transfer set aside. No alternative claim for possession was based on this, but, in the circumstances, I do not think that plaintiff is precluded from setting up this case in second appeal. There is no question of any new fact, and the facts relied on have been stated in the pleadings. It is a pure point of law capable of being determined without the consideration of any other evidence than that on the record.

I am, therefore, of opinion that plaintiff is entitled to possession, as defendant 2 admits her right and defendant 1 is a trespasser whose right has been negatived by the Revenue Courts.

I set aside the decrees of the lower Courts and direct that plaintiff be awarded possession. The case must go back to the first Court for determination of the issue regarding mesne profits, which has not been decided. Parties to bear their own costs in the Courts below. Costs in appeal on respondent.

Subsequent application to pass final decree.*

Where after the passing of a preliminary decree, the plaintiff dies and his legal representative does not bring himself on the record within the time prescribed, the suit abates and after such abatement, an application to pass a final decree if not made within the time provided by law is time-barred.

A suit in which a preliminary decree is passed continues till the stage of final decree is reached.

Messrs. S. Ramaswami Iyer and T. V. Ramanaatha Iyer, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant claims to be the legal representative of the plaintiff, who obtained a preliminary decree in a mortgage suit in O. S. No. 97 of 1912.

The plaintiff admittedly had died before this appellant applied on November 19th, 1915 to be recognised as the heir of the plaintiff and to get a final decree passed.

His application was dismissed on February 9th, 1916 on account of his absence.

As he did not get himself brought on the record at that time, the suit abated under O. XXII, r. 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure upon six months expiring after the plaintiff's death; and as he did not apply subsequently to have the abatement set aside, the present application, presented on October 10th, 1918, is out of time and incompetent.

It is true that the District Munsif erroneously held that the suit had not abated because the plaintiff's death occurred between the passing of the preliminary and the final decrees. But this Court has held in Lakshmi Achi v. Subbarama Aiyar (1), that the suit is continued till the stage of final decree is reached: See also Dokoju Subbarayadu v. Musti Ramasasu (2), which is a direct authority for holding that after the abatement of the suit an application to pass a final decree, which is not made within the time provided by law, should be dismissed as time-barred.

This Civil miscellaneous second appeal is, therefore dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal. Her claim for possession and partition of certain properties has partly failed and partly succeeded in the Court below. This appeal relates to that part of the claim which has failed.

A short pedigree may be given here,—

Chandra Lal=Mt. Lakshpati Dei, widow, died
| on 20th April 1909.

Chandesar Dei, Deft. 1 Raj Dulari, Plaintiff.

Rameshar Prasad, deceased.

The suit relates to the property of Chandra Lal. The details of that property are given in lists A, B, and C. attached to the plaint. Chandra Lal died in the year 1876. His widow,

RAJ DULARI v. CHANDESHUR DEI

Mt. Lakhpati Dei, died on the 20th April 1904. This is a claim by Mt. Raj Dulari, one of the two daughters of Chandra Lal, for a half share in the estate of her father. The chief defendant, Mt. Chandrasar Dei, is the other daughter of Chandra Lal. The defendants 2 and 3 are transferees in respect of certain properties from Mt. Lakhpati Dei. The defendant 4 is a transferee in respect of one item from defendant No. 1. The lower Court has given a decree to the plaintiff in respect of items 4 to 6 of list A. and of item 1 of list C. Item 1 of list A. is now abandoned by the plaintiff, so is item 2 of list C. The present appeal, therefore, relates to items 2, 3, 7 and 8 of list A. and to all the items of list B. We have also before us cross-objections in respect of such of the items as have been decreed in favour of the plaintiff by the lower Court. These cross-objections were, however, withdrawn at the hearing of the appeal and, therefore, no further notice need be taken of them.

So much of the defence as is now material for the purpose of this appeal was, that items 6 and 7 of list A. are wagf property, that the plaintiff's claim in respect of items 1, 2, 7 and 8 of list A. was barred by the rule of estoppel, the claim in respect of items 3 and 8 (list A.) was barred by time, and that the properties mentioned in list B. being chaukis are not divisible. The findings of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge are as follows:—Items 2, 3, 7 and 8 of list A. belonged to Chandra Lal but he made a wagf of item 7, which was consequently not partible; that the plaintiff is estopped from claiming a share in items 2, 7 and 8 of list A. on the allegation that they belonged to her father; that the claim in respect of items 3 and 8 of the same list was barred by limitation; that items 2, 3 and 7 of list B. were not the properties of Chandra Lal, and that out of 57 pieces of items 8 and 9 of the same list 52 belonged to Chandra Lal but that no decree could be granted in respect of them for the reason that they were not sufficiently specified in the plaint. As regards items 1, 4, 5 and 6 of the same list he held that they were not divisible.

We will first take up list B. Items 2, 3 and 7 have been held by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge as not shown to have belonged to Chandra Lal. We think that he is right in that opinion. Reliance was placed in this Court upon Exhibits 9, A-1, 2, 3, 34 and 35 in support of the contention that these items belonged to Chandra Lal. We have examined these documents carefully. None of them has even a remote bearing on the question under consideration. Exhibit 9 is a register of chaukis prepared in the year 1887. In this register the widows's name is entered in respect of certain chaukis. Exhibit A1 is the Will which the widow made in favour of Rameshar Prasad, son of Mt. Chandesar Dei. There is no description of any property in this Will. Exhibit 2 is a plaint by one Raghunath in a suit brought against the widow Mt. Lakhpati Dei and Rameshar Prasad claiming that the properties mentioned therein belonged to Chandra Lal and that the widow had no power to make a disposition in respect of them. No properties were specified in this plaint. Exhibit 3 is the written statement filed on behalf of Rameshar Prasad, minor, under the guardianship of his mother, Mt. Chandesar Dei, and also on behalf of Mt. Lakhpati Dei in answer to the plaint mentioned above. This written statement also does not specify any properties. The suit was dismissed (Ex. A-8). After the death of the widow, Raghunath brought a second suit for possession on the same title as against the two daughters of Chandra Lal. In the lists attached to the plaint of this suit (Ex. 34) he mentioned the items now under consideration as belonging to Chandra Lal. In answer to this claim Mt. Raj Dulari, the present plaintiff, filed a written statement (Ex. 35) in which she admitted the plaint allegations in respect of these properties but the plaintiff cannot prove her own admission in her favour. We were also referred to a portion of the evidence of Ganpat Prasad (D. W 4) in this connection. He stated that after the death of Chandra Lal, Mt. Lakhpati Dei became the proprietor. In the earlier portion of his evidence he had stated that he had seen the properties in suit. We think that this evidence is too vague and insufficient to support the plaintiff's claim in respect of these items.

Items 8 and 9 of list B. These items comprise 16 chaukis at Nayaghat and 41 at Ramghat. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge has found that some 16 chaukis at Nayaghat and some 36 at Ramghat belonged to Chandra Lal, but he has dismissed the plaintiff's claim in respect of them on the ground that there was no sufficient specification of them in the plaint. An application has now been presented to us asking for leave to amend the plaint so as to introduce the numbers of the 16 and the 36 chaukis found to have been the property of Chandra Lal. We do not think that we should accept this application because there is nothing to show that the numbers of the chaukis stated in this application are the numbers borne by the chaukis now in dispute but we think that the learned Additional Subordinate Judge should not have thrown out the plaintiff's claim on the ground on which he has done. The defendants did not complain of the want of specification. Both parties, we think, knew very well what and which the chaukis were that belonged to Chandra Lal. Considering the nature of the chaukis we think that the description given in respect of them as situate at Nayaghat and at Ramghat was quite enough in the circumstances of this case. We are, therefore of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree in respect of the 16 chaukis at Nayaghat and 41 chaukis at Ramghat out of the 57 chaukis comprising items 8 and 9 of List B.

Items 1, 4, 5 and 6 of list B. The claim in respect of these items has been thrown out on the ground that they are not divisible. The nature of the chaukis and of a claim for partition in respect of them has been considered by us in our judgment in First Civil Appeal No. 22 of 1921 just now decided. For the reasons stated therein, we are of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to a half share in these items.

Now we come to List A. Items 2, 7 and 8 are houses. The claim in respect of them has been dismissed on the ground of estoppel. The only estoppel now relied upon before us is one of res judicata. This matter is discussed by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge in his finding on issue No. 8. It appears that Anand Bahadur, and Rameshar Prasad, members of a joint Hindu Family, brought a claim against the present plaintiff, who is the widow of Lal Bahadur, brother of Anand Bahadur, for the recovery of certain properties including those now under consideration. In answer to that claim the plaintiff pleaded that these items were the exclusive property of her husband Lal Bahadur and were not joint family property. The plaintiffs to that suit succeeded, the Court having held that these items were the joint family property. Exhibit A2 is the plaint, Exhibit A3 is the written statement and Exhibits A4 to A6 are the judgment and decree in that suit. We are of opinion that there is no bar of res judicata. The title to the properties is claimed through Chandra Lal. The plaintiff and the defendant No. 1 are both claiming through him. It is a well-settled rule of law that when both parties in the subsequent litigation claim through the same person there is no bar of res judicata. See the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Asghar Reza Khan v. Muhammad Mehdi Husain Khan (1). On the merits, the learned Additional Subordinate Judge has found that these items belonged to Chandra Lal. We, therefore, hold that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree in respect of items 2, 7 and 8 of list A.

Items 3 and 8 of list A. The claim in respect of these two items is thrown out by the Court below on the ground that it is barred by limitation. As regards item 8 it applies Article 134, and with regard to item 3 it applies Article 144 of the Indian Limitation Act. As to item 8, it appears that the widow made a mortgage by way of conditional sale to one Ram Narain (Exhibit A 42). Afterwards, the mortgagee obtained a decree for foreclosure on the basis of that mortgage against the widow on the 17th May 1888 (Exhibit A 44). On the 8th March 1889 he sold it to one Bisheshur (Exhibit 25.) As to item No. 3, it appears that the widow made a mortgage to Anand Bahadur on the 12th August 1884 (Exhibit C4). Subsequently, on the 4th February 1917, the mortgagee mortgaged it to one Pahlad Dass professing to be the owner of that property (Exhibit C5). Pahlad Das brought a suit on the foot of his mortgage and put the property to sale. The defendant No. 3 purchased it. We are opinion that the proper Article applicable to the claim in respect of both these items is Article 141 of the Indian Limitation Act. That Article specifically relates to a case for possession of immoveable property by a Hindu or Muhammadan entitled to the possession of that property on the death of a Hindu or Muhammadan female. The limitation under that Article is 12 years and begins to run from the date of the death of the female. The widow of Chandra Lal died within 12 years of the date of this suit and the plaintiff's title to the possession of her father's property arose only on the death of Chandra Lal's widow. Any dealings with this property by the widow or her transferees during the lifetime of the widow could not affect the daughter's title which did not come into existence a moment earlier than the death of the widow. The leading case on the subject is the decision of the Privy Council in Ranchordas Vandravandas v. Parvartibai (2). The other case to which we may refer is that of Amrit Dhar v. Bindesri Prasad (3). We, therefore, hold that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for a half share in these items.

Item 7 of list A. As regards this item we think that the decision of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge is right. He has held that it is wagf property. The matter is discussed by him under issue No 6. For the reasons given in his judgment, which need not be repeated here, we agree with him that the property is wagf in its true sense of the word and cannot be made the subject of partition. The plaintiff's claim in respect thereof must fail.

We, therefore, allow this appeal and modify the decree of the Court below by giving a decree to the plaintiff in terms of her plaint in respect of the properties which we have held in this judgment the plaintiff is entitled to in addition to the properties decreed to her by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge. The plaintiff will get her costs in proportion to her success in both the Courts. The cross-objections are dismissed but without costs.

A suit for a declaration that certain lands are shamilat and should be partitioned on that basis is not a suit contesting the mode of partition and does not fall within the purview of clauses (17) and (18) of section 158 (2) of the Punjab Land Revenue Act. JUDGMENT.—The parties in this litigation are the male lineal descendants of one Sobha Ram, who had four sons. The plaintiffs are the offspring of one of them and the defendants of the remaining three. These plaintiffs and defendants were among the members of the proprietary body of the village Nika Daultana, and as such were co-sharers in the shamilat of that village. In the Settlement of 1902, proceedings for partition of the entire shamilat were set on foot. In the course of those proceedings two questions arose for decision, i.e., (1) what was the share of Sobha Ram's descendants, and (2) how that share was to be divided among them. The plaintiff's claim was that it should be divided in proportion to proprietary lands or revenue paid thereon (hasab rasad khewat) while the defendants demanded partition on ancestral shares. The present defendants instituted a civil suit to have the matter decided, but while that suit was pending the parties executed an agreement to the effect that partition of the shamilat might be completed as far as the other co-sharers were concerned, but that a separate shamilat patti to be called Sobha Ram's patti should be constituted of the area that should fall to the share of the descendants of Sobha Ram to be partitioned after the decision of the civil suit. The revenue authorities accepted this agreement, but, instead of allotting to the descendants of Sobha Ram one plot of land and naming it patti shamilat Sobha Ram, they allotted to them three separate holdings Nos. 38, 39 and 41 and included the same among proprietary holdings, showing all the descendants of Sobha Ram as co-owners of each holding. The civil suit was finally decided in 1908 by a Division Bench of the Chief Court which upheld the contention of the present defendants that the shamilat was to be divided on ancestral shares. On the 12th June 1916 the present defendants applied for partition of khata No. 38 only, but the plaintiffs objected that this was not khewat land, but a portion of the shamilat of the descendants of Sobha Ram, that shamilat could not be partitioned piecemeal, and that the mode of partition to be followed was that laid down in paragraph (1) (a) of the Wajib-ul-arz, according to which every co-sharer in the shamilat was entitled to retain at partition the land already in his possession. Paragraph 1 (b) of the Wajib-ul-arz is to the effect that in partition of khewat land possession is to be disregarded. Thus, there were two separate rules for partition of shamilat and khewat lands. The revenue authorities, however, disallowed the plaintiff's objection on the ground that as, according to the revenue records, the land comprised in the holdings was khewat and not shamilat, it could not be partitioned but as khewat land. Feeling aggrieved at this decision the plaintiffs appeared in the Civil Court to obtain a declaration to the effect that the lands comprised in the holdings in question were shamilat and were to be partitioned according to the agreement of the parties to the partitioned as such. The defendants raised the preliminary objection that the suit was one to contest the mode of partition and was, therefore, not cognizable by a Civil Court. The Courts below upheld this contention and came to the conclusion that the suit was barred by clauses 17 and 18 of section 158 of the Land Revenue Act (XVI of 1887) as its object was to contest the mode of partition. The suit was accordingly dismissed. The plaintiffs have come to this Court in second appeal and it is contended on their behalf that the question involved in the suit is one of title and that the mode of partition will depend upon the decision of that question. We are of opinion that this contention must prevail.

Though the plaintiffs seek declaration to the effect (1) that the lands in suit are shamilat and are liable to partition according to clause 1 (a) of the Wajib-ul-arz, and (2) that the defendants are not entitled to claim partition piecemeal, what they really require is a declaration that the lands are shamilat, because if they are shamilat the clause of the Wajib-ul-arz relating to partition of shamilat must necessarily apply to partition thereof, and they must all be brought in the hotch-pot for equality of division. Now, the question whether certain lands are shamilat or not can by no stretch of language be called one as to the mode of partition, though in the present case the mode of partition will depend on the answer to this question. The learned Counsel for the defendants-respondents maintains that the suit was one to contest the mode of partition and cites ruling Singha Ram v. Data Ram (1); Ahmed Khan v. Bahadur (2); Devi Dyal v. Ahmed Khan (3); Khuda Baksh v. Kaim Din (4); Munnagir v. Hazari (5); Taja v. Tara Chand (6); Dewa Singh v. Musammam Jawali (7), in support of his contention. But none of these rulings is in point. He further contends that the suit for a declaration was not competent under Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) s. 88—Civil Procedure Code Act (V of 1908) O. XXXIV, rr. 5, 12—Mortgage decree under s. 88, subsequent to passing of Civil Procedure Code of 1908—Order absolute—Final decree—Execution proceedings.

Where a mortgage decree was passed in 1908 under the old procedure of section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, the proceedings thus started must be continued under that Act, though the new Code of Civil Procedure had come into operation.

Ramasami Reddi v. Sakkappa Reddi (1) 48 Ind. Cas. 732 ; 85 M. L. J. 194 followed.

The mere fact that an order absolute for sale instead of a final decree for sale is passed does not render the execution proceedings invalid.

Appeal against the appellate order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Anantapur, dated the 31st January 1921, in A.S. No. 255 of 1920, preferred against the order, dated the 19th October 1920 of the Court of the District Munsif of Anantapur in E. P. No. 493 of 1920 in O.S. No. 168 of 1904 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Penukonda.

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Appellant.
Respondents unrepresented.

JUDGMENT.

The Chief Justice.—In this case a mortgage decree was obtained in November 1908 under section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act which then applied. By the terms of that decree, if the amount of the mortgage was not paid by a certain date, the mortgaged property could be brought to sale. In 1911 an application was made to make the order absolute, which was the procedure prescribed under the Transfer of Property Act, and an order was passed. In 1914, 1915 and 1917 unsuccessful attempts were made to bring the interest of the mortgagor in the mortgaged property to sale, and the application which resulted in this appeal was launched in August 1920. An order was made for sale by the District Munsif in October 1920. The mortgagee having got his order after all those years was met by an appeal to the Subordinate Judge in which it was alleged—and it had been alleged before the District Munsif also—that the execution proceedings were all void ab initio because he had not obtained a proper final decree in his mortgage suit. That was based on the fact that, between the date of the original decree in 1908 and the date of his application to make that decree absolute, the sections of the Transfer of Property Act dealing with the matter had been repealed and their place taken by the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, O. XXXIV, which by r. 5 (2) requires, first of all, a preliminary decree to be obtained and if the money is not paid by the date named in the preliminary decree then an application shall be made to the Court, and, instead of the decree for sale being made absolute, as used to be the practice, a final decree passed. The learned Subordinate Judge found that that point was a good one and, therefore, these execution proceedings have got to be taken all over again. In my judgment he was wrong. It is quite clear that where proceedings of this kind were started under the old procedure of the Transfer of Property Act they are to be continued under that Act although, meanwhile, the new Code of Civil Procedure has come into operation. There is a clear authority for the proposition in Ramasami Reddi v. Sakkappa Reddi (1) Further, it seems to me, even apart from that somewhat obvious ruling, it will be quite impossible at this stage to hold that an order which ex hypothesi was made accidentally in the form of making a decree absolute instead of in the form of making a decree final could be disregarded or set aside.

This appeal must be allowed with costs here and in the Court below, the District Munsif's order being restored.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908) s. 2 (7)—Conditional agreement to execute lease, if compulsorily registrable.

A conditional agreement to execute a lease is not an agreement within the meaning of s. 2 (7) of the Registration Act, which contemplates a present demise and is not, therefore, compulsorily registrable. [p. 27 col. 1.]

Appeal from the judgment and decree of the District Judge, Larkana, dated the 12th November 1920.

Mr. Lunidaram Tikamdas, for the Appellant.

Mr. Suganlal H. Jeswami, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Janjimal was holding certain land belonging to the defendant Amirbux under a lease for five years executed in January 1915. On the 6th of March 1917 Janjimal and Amirbux are said to have entered into an arrangement whereby under certain circumstances Janjimal would be entitled to extend his holding for a further period of five years from the expiration of the current lease. The defendant failed to execute the lease as required and the plaintiff thereon brought an action for specific relief, directing that the defendant should execute the lease as called for by the agreement of the 6th of March. The Court of the first instance found that the document in question of the 6th March 1917 was an agreement to lease and was, therefore, compulsorily registrable under the Registration Act. Not being so registered, it could not be admitted in evidence. Inasmuch as the agreement was reduced to writing, no other evidence to prove it was admissible, therefore, it found that the allegation as to this agreement to lease was not proved and it, therefore, dismissed the suit. The matter went up on appeal to the District Judge of Larkana and he held that this document is not an agreement to lease within the meaning of section 2 of the Registration Act and he held, therefore, that it was not compulsorily registrable and it was, therefore, improperly excluded from the evidence. And he, therefore, set aside the decision of the lower Court on the preliminary point and ordered the lower Court to dispose of the matter on the merits. The defendant comes here on appeal.

It is, perhaps, rather singular when the whole case turns exclusively on the interpretation of the document of the 6th of March, that no copy of it has been laid before us. We are not sure we ought not to dismiss this appeal purely on the ground that the appellant had furnished to us no material on which we could decide the interpretation of the document of the lower Court is incorrect. But, apart from that, and going solely on the account given of it in the papers before us, it would appear that the finding of the lower Appellate Court is correct. The earliest ruling in this matter is that of Purmananddas Jiwandas v. Dharsey Virji (1) and that ruling, except in Madras, has been generally followed. The effect is that it is only when a present demise is contemplated that an agreement to execute a lease is an agreement to lease under section 2 (7) of the Registration Act. And this seems a natural interpretation because it would appear that it is only in such cases that registration would be necessary to protect the interests of the intending purchaser of the land. In the present case, there was no agreement to make a present demise. It is not the case that it was intended that the current lease should be surrendered and the new lease should be immediately entered into. The intention was that two and half years later, if certain conditions were fulfilled, the lessor should grant a fresh lease to the actual tenant. It was possible that those conditions might not have been complied with and the lessee might have failed to qualify for this lease. It was also not possible to definitely fix the conditions of the lease because part of the terms contemplated necessitated the taking of the accounts and the ascertaining what was due on either side under the old lease. It does not appear that the parties intended to frustrate the Registration or Stamp Laws in any way. There is nothing, therefore, to cause us to suppose that the fresh transaction was intended to supersede the old lease and to create a fresh tenancy. And, therefore, the defendant was not in a position to transfer any property to the appellant at the moment because he was not seized of it. The agreement was merely a conditional agreement to execute a lease and not an agreement to lease. It appears to us, therefore, that this document was not compulsorily registrable under the Registration Act and should not, therefore, have been excluded by the first Court and that, therefore, the order of the lower Appellate Court is correct.

(1) 10 B. 101, 5 Ind. Dec. (N.S.) 458.

MULIA v. PARTAB

We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 151, 152, O. XXIII r. 3—Limitation—Inherent jurisdiction—Compromise of appeal out of Court—Appeal dismissed—Help of Court.

There is no limitation for an application under section 152 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 75 col. 1.]

A Court cannot invoke its inherent jurisdiction where there is a provision in the Code which would meet the necessity of the case. [p. 75 col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, dated the 26th April 1922, in Civil Appeal No 8 of 1921.

Mr. C. B. Parakh, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. R. Purnaik, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are simple. The appellant Mt. Mulia brought a suit for possession of certain land against the non-applicant and obtained a decree, Suit No. 272 of 1920. The defendant appealed and the appeal was registered as No. 8 of 1921 in the Court of the District Judge, Hoshangabad and notice issued to respondent. On 24th February 1921 the appellant's pleader withdrew the appeal, saying the case was compromised. The appeal was consequently dismissed. Respondent is not shown to have been present. On the same day the compromise was filed, but was not incorporated in the decree, as the appeal had already been dismissed and no enquiry was made as to respondent's admitting the compromise, as the appeal had been withdrawn. The plaintiff then applied for execution of the original decree, which of course stood untouched and notice being issued to the judgment-debtor he set up the compromise (by which he was to remain in possession) as a bar to execution. The executing Court enquired into the compromise and for various reasons decided the case adversely to the judgment-debtor on 21st November 1921. Thereupon the judgment-debtor appealed to the District Judge, Hoshangabad, the appeal being No. 2 of 1922 filed on 3rd January 1922. On 20th February 1922 the judgment-debtor (defendant) also filed an application to amend the decree in appeal No. 8 of 1921 on the ground that he got the appeal dismissed through fraud on the part of the plaintiff's Mukhtyar. Notice was issued to the respondent in both these appeals and they were decided on 26th April 1922. In appeal No. 8 of 1921 the District Judge held that the compromise was really made and that the decree of the lower Court should be modified in terms of it. In appeal No. 2 of 1922 it was held that in view of the order in appeal No. 8 of 1921 execution be stayed.

The present appeal is by plaintiff against the decree in appeal No. 8 of 1921, and it is to be noted that there is no appeal or application for revision against the order in appeal No. 2 of 1922. Nor can any order passed in the present appeal affect the order in that appeal, even though that appeal was decided on the reasons given in the order in appeal No. 8 of 1921, between the same parties.

The next question is whether the District Judge had power to reopen appeal No. 8 of 1921 and what was the nature of his proceedings. Originally, the present appeal was filed as a Revision application, but my learned predecessor held that it should be treated as an appeal under O. XLIII, r. 1 (m), Civil Procedure Code, that is, an appeal against an order under r. 3 of O. XXIII, recording an agreement, compromise or satisfaction. It is not contended that any application would lie under O. XXIII, r. 3, in a suit which had long been decided at the date of the application. It is also clear that no such application was made. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the District Judge had no power to alter or review the order dismissing the appeal.

The appeal was withdrawn by the appellant. No application was made that a decree should be passed in terms of the compromise. No such decree could have been made without enquiry and the evidence of the respondent. Consequently, the Court passed an order in terms of the appellant's request, which cannot be altered.

The application was for amendment of the decree. The order sheet of 20th February 1922 shows that this was so and the notice issued to the respondent was to show cause why the decrees should not be amended. It cannot be considered as one for review. It is only stamped with an 8-annas stamp. The application itself does not state under what provision of law it is made, but from the order sheet it appears to have been treated as an application for amendment of the decree.

Under section 152 of the Code, clerical or arithmetical mistakes in judgments, decrees or orders, or errors arising therein from any accidental slip or omission may be corrected at any time.

There is no clerical or arithmetical mistake in the order dismissing the decree, and no error arising from any accidental slip or omission. It is quite clear that the appellant withdrew the appeal without asking that the decree of the lower Court should be modified in accordance with the compromise. The compromise was put in the same day and the endorsement of the District Judge on it is: "Admitted. Presented to-day by Mr. Bohari-lal. The case has been dismissed as appellant has withdrawn, but he desires this to be put on record to show that the case was settled out of Court."

The Court was not, therefore, asked to incorporate this compromise in the decree, which, as I have said, could not have been done without enquiry or the consent of the other party, who does not appear to have been present to admit the compromise. Section 152, Civil Procedure Code, therefore, does not seem to apply.

The learned pleader for the appellant relies on section 151, Civil Procedure Code, referring to the inherent power of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice to prevent abuse of the process of the Court.

No question of preventing abuse of the process of the Court arises here, and the question is whether the Court had power to make such an order for the ends of justice.

It has been held in Abdul Karim Abu Ahmed Khan Ghaznavi v. Allahabad Bank, Limited (1) that a Court cannot invoke its inherent jurisdiction where there is a provision in the Code which would meet the necessity of the case.

Now, in the present case it was open to the defendant-appellant to have asked the Appellate Court to modify the decree in the terms of the compromise and if the Court was satisfied that the compromise was lawful and had been entered into by respondent, the decree would have been modified accordingly, otherwise the appeal would have been disposed of on the merits. The appellant, however, as has been shown, did not do this but withdrew his appeal unconditionally. The Court had, therefore, no option but to dismiss the appeal, leaving the decree of the lower Court standing as it was, and I am of opinion that the appellant had no right to have this order modified and the Court had no power either to review its order or to alter it under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code.

(1) 41 Ind. Cas. 598 ; 44 C. 929 ; 21 C. W. N. 877 ; 26 C. L. J. 49 (F. B.).

KIRPA v. RABI DATT

The present case is not an unusual one. Lately several parties to appeals in this Court have intimated through their pleaders that the appeal is compromised, but fail to appear to put in the compromise or to ask for a decree in terms of the compromise. It should be widely known that unless they do that and if they allow the appeal to be dismissed for want of prosecution, they can get no help from the Court, if one of the parties resiles from the compromise, and must seek other remedies.

In the present case the defendant in his application states that his withdrawal of the appeal was obtained by fraud. But this does not bring the case within section 151, as there was no fraud on the Court. He was represented by a pleader throughout. In these circumstances, whatever remedies may have been open to the defendant by way of suit or otherwise, I am of opinion that having unconditionally withdrawn his appeal he had no right to get the matter reopened and the Court had no power to reopen it.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court modifying the decree of the first Court will, therefore, be set aside and the original decree restored. The respondent will bear the costs of this appeal and the costs in the lower Appellate Court.

A valid custom exists among Bhitwaria Brahmins of the Beri village of the Rohtak District allowing the adoption of a daughter's son. [p. 75, col 2]

In that part of the Punjab which adjoins the United Provinces the nomination of an heir on lines resembling the Krittima Hindu adoption is unknown, that is to say, even amongst people governed by agricultural custom the adoption that takes place is the full Hindu adoption by which a man is transplanted from his natural family, to his new family, and is entirely cut off from his past. Lala Jagan Nath, and Mr. Shamair Chand, for R. B. Lala Moti Sagar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties in this case are admittedly governed by Hindu Law. The plaintiffs, being some of the collaterals of two men Ram Sarup and Jawahra, who both died childless, bring this suit against Rabi Datt, son of Sheo Sahai, and various pro forma defendants claiming the whole of the property left by Ram Sarup and Jawahra, of which mutation has been effected in the name of Rabi Datt. Rabi Datt's father Sheo Sahai was admittedly the daughter's son Mangat Rai, and Mangat Rai and the two ancestors of Ram Sarup and Jawahra formed one branch of the family being all three sons of Naina. It is alleged by the defendant that his father Sheo Sahai was duly adopted by Mangat Rai, that the adoption was valid because of a custom varying the strict Hindu Law on the subject and that, any how, the plaintiffs and their predecessors-in-title have all acquiesced in the adoption and have treated it as valid. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, deny the factum of the adoption, as also its validity and urge that they are in no way estopped from questioning it.

Mangat Rai died in 1833 and on his death his widow was shown as in possession of his land until 1846. She then executed a registered deed by which she made a gift of the whole of Mangat Rai's property in favour of Sheo Sahai, her daughter's son, whom she described as the adopted son of Mangat Rai. In the Revenue Records of 1879 Sheo Sahai is shown as the adopted son of Mangat Rai. The adoption is said to have taken place in 1827. Sheo Sahai has throughout been treated by the whole family as the adopted son; the entry in the Revenue Records has not been questioned and, taking everything into account, we find that it is fully established that as a matter of fact he was adopted.

As to the validity of the adoption, there is no doubt, as laid down in Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh (1), that, in accordance with strict Hindu Law, a man cannot adopt his daughter's son, although in ancient times such adoptions were recognised. The position is fully discussed in Mayne's Hindu Law and it is there explained how the present view, more especially in the Punjab, is veering round to the acceptance of an adoption of the daughter's son, although the theory no doubt exists that to qualify for adoption a man must be the son of a woman, whom the adoptive father could have married. It is true, as pointed out by Counsel for the appellants, that no special custom was pleaded in so many words, but it was pleaded that there had been a valid adoption, an issue was framed on the point and the whole case has been fought out on the clear understanding that the validity of the adoption depended on the custom varying the strict Hindu Law being established. Now, no fewer than 11 instances including, a contested case, have been proved amongst the Bhitwaria Brahmans of this village. It is stated that there are one hundred families of such Brahmans in this village, and this very large number of adoptions of daughter's sons establishes in our opinion the existence of a custom varying the Hindu Law in this direction. Counsel for the appellants urges that even if a custom be held to be established it only proves that a Krittima adoption of a daughter's son is allowed. In the first place, the Krittima form of adoption is confined for practical purposes to Behar and the West Coast of India, and both in the Customary Law edited by Mr. Joseph and in Baij Nath v. Shamboo Nath (2), it is explained that in this part of the Punjab, which adjoins the United Provinces the nomination of an heir on lines resembling the Krittima Hindu adoption is unknown; that is to say, even amongst people governed by agricultural custom the adoption that takes place is the full Hindu adoption by which a man is transplanted from his natural family to his new family, and is entirely cut off from his past. How much more so must this be the position among people governed by Hindu Law. Another most significant fact is that Sheo Sahai's got by birth was Vat; that Mangat Rai was a Kanshik, and that Sheo Sahai's grandson, the present defendant's son, has been married to a Vat girl, which would have been impossible unless Sheo Sahai had been adopted into some other got than Vat. We find that it is fully established, that a valid custom does exist amongst these Bhitwaria Brahmans of the Beri village of the Rohtak District allowing the adoption of a daughter's son.

Upon the third point also the plaintiffs fail. The registered deed of 1846 was signed by four ancestors of the present plaintiffs, including the real brother of Mangat Rai, Hem Raj, and it is also signed by Ramjas, the Lambardar of the Patti. The plaintiffs have allowed Rabi Datt to treat the property as his own during the past 11 years; two of them, Jawahara and Mutsaddi, have actually cultivated a part of the land under him and from the time of the adoption onwards the whole family has recognised Sheo Sahai and treated him as the full adopted son of Mangat Rai. We find, therefore, on all three points in favour of the defendant-respondent and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) s. 151—Minor not properly represented—Decree against minor nullity—Decree declared not binding—Power of Court to revive original suit against minor—Inherent powers of Court.

A decree which declares that a prior decree obtained against minors was not binding upon them on the ground that they were not validly represented therein has merely the effect of remitting the parties to their original rights and does not involve the retrial afresh of the earlier suit. Therefore, the Court which originally disposed of that suit has no jurisdiction to restore the suit to its file and re-try it.

Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Udumalpet, dated the 2nd October 1922, in I. A. No. 1334 of 1922 in O. S. No. 559 of 1919.

Mr. C. S. Swaminadhan, for the Petitioners.

Mr. T. G. Ramaswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In O. S. 476 of 1921 it was decided that the decree in O. S. 559 of 1919 was not binding on the minors because they were not validly represented in the earlier suit, the guardian appointed by the Court not having consented to act as guardian and not having appeared for them at the trial.

The decree in O. S. 479 simply declared that the decree in O. S. 559 was not binding on the minors, and in this respect it was in accordance with what, in the view of the Privy Council in Monohar Lal v. Jadunath Singh (1), was a proper decree, viz., that it would be sufficient in such a case to remit the parties to their original rights without declaring that the earlier suit would have to be tried afresh.

In the judgment in O. S. 479 there is an observation that O. S. 559 will have to be revived as against these minor plaintiffs, and the District Munsif has now, in the exercise of his supposed powers under section 151 Civil Procedure Code, taken the case back on his file and proceeded to try it. I do not think that the Court possessed inherent power to restore a suit once disposed of and to add parties to it who were not represented at the original trial. Bhagwan Dayal v. Param Sukh Das (2), is quoted as an authority for so doing, but that case has been dissented from by a Bench of this Court in Edu Punmayya v. Jangalu Kamakottayya (3). As pointed out by Oldfield and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ., if a minor is not properly represented before the Court, a decree passed against him is in effect a nullity and the Court cannot set aside the ex parte order and reopen the suit under O. IX, r. 13.

If the minors were not legally made parties to the suit, the action of the Court in making them parties now is tantamount to restoring to file a suit already disposed of and adding parties who were not represented at the original trial. The case in Venkata Row v. Tuljaram Row (4) is not an authority for such a proceeding.

I set aside the order of the District Munsif with costs in this Court and remit the parties to their rights as they stood at the disposal of O. S. 479 of 1921.

RESPONDENT.*Berar Inam Rules, rule V—Succession to Inam

A person succeeds to the Inam property in Berar not as an heir under the Hindu Law but as an heir to the last holder under the Berar Inam Rules which regulate the devolution and incidents of an Inam Estate in Berar subject entirely to the Sanad, or certificate or other documents evidencing the special terms of the grant in each particular case. Madatmash inam is a grant for maintenance or subsistence under rule V of the Inam Rules and any permanent alienation or a transaction likely to result in a permanent alienation can only be acted upon during the life time of the then certificate holder and at his death by the order sanctioning the appointment of another Inamdār, the Inam land passes on to him free of any encumbrance imposed on the land by the last holder. Appeal against the decree of the Additional Sub-Judge, West Berar, Akola, dated the 6th May 1921, in Civil Suit No. 126 of 1919.

Mr. G. V. Kukade, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. W. Joshi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This suit has been brought on a registered mortgage-deed for Rs. 5,000, dated 11th June 1906, by conditional foreclosure of the mortgaged property. Both the mortgagor and the mortgagee are dead. The latter's legal representatives sue the defendant as the adopted son of the mortgagor.

It seems to us that after the execution of the mortgage-deed there was a partition between the defendant and his father, the mortgaged property falling to the defendant's share at that partition, while the property described in Schedule A came to the share of the executant of the mortgage. That property has now by reason of the mortgagor's death come to the defendant and the plaintiff stated that in case it was found that the mortgaged property could not be made liable under the mortgage, the property mentioned in the Schedule above referred to be substituted for it as the property of the mortgagor. Various defences were raised and the points in dispute are covered by the following issues :—

1. Did the defendant's deceased father Ganpatrao execute the deed sued for and for consideration ?
2. Was the debt incurred for payment of antecedent debt and legal necessity as alleged ?
3. Is the defendant liable to pay the debt apart from the question of legal necessity on the ground of pious obligation to pay the debt of his father ?
4. Whether the mortgage transaction is void and inoperative as it was effected during the pendency of the partition suit No. 14 of 1906 between the defendant and his father ?
5. How much area out of 118 was Inam ?
6. Had defendant's father no right to mortgage the fields shown in the plaint ?
- 7 (a) Whether the Government granted the Inam fields to the defendant on the death of the latter's father ?
- (b) Does the plaintiffs' mortgage lien extend to the Inam field in the hands of the defendant whether he (defendant) claims them because of the partition or because of his being the Inam holder after the death of his father ?
- 8 (a) Is the plaintiff not entitled to claim a decree against the mortgaged property because it has fallen to the share of the defendant in the said partition suit ?
- (b) Whether the defendant took the mortgaged property to his share in the partition fraudulently, what is the effect of the deliberate fraud on the claim ?
9. In case it is held that the mortgaged property is not liable for the claim of the plaintiff, can they get a mortgage-decree on the property which fell to the share of the defendant's father in the partition ?
10. Are the fields 122 of Patur and 41, 47 and 48 of Pipalgaon and the house of Nagpur in defendant's possession ? Has the defendant recovered the amounts from his father's asamis? If so, how much?

11. Has the defendant's father sold one of the fields No. 122 to Hassain Bhai?
12. To what reliefs are the plaintiffs entitled?

The conclusions of the trial Court are as follows :—On the first issue the Judge writes :—

"According to section 69 of the Transfer of Property Act, the deed must be proved by showing that the attestation of one attesting witness at least was in his handwriting and that the signature of the executant was in his handwriting. P. W. 1 and P. W. 2 have proved the attestation to be in the handwriting of the attesting witnesses but the other requirement of section is not complied with. It is not shown that the signature of the executant is in his handwriting. I, therefore, find that the mortgage deed is not duly proved to be genuine and valid."

The second issue was found against the plaintiffs as was issue No. 3. On the 4th issue the Judge finds the mortgage inoperative on the ground that the document was executed during the pendency of the partition suit then pending between the defendant and his father. Sixteen acres and 21 gunthas of field No. 118 was found to be Inam and the rest Khalsa. No decision was come to on the 6th issue and on the first half of the 7th issue it was found that the Inam land was granted to the defendant after the death of his father by Government. No finding was given on (b) of this issue. As regards issue No. 8 the Judge states that the case of Amolak Ram v. Chandan Singh (1) governs the suit. No fraud in the present case had been established and the mortgagee could proceed against the substituted security. Issue No. 9 was found in the plaintiff's favour, while issue 10 was found against him as was issue 11. On the last issue the Judge comes to the following conclusion : that the mortgage-deed was not duly proved; that the mortgage taken during the pendency of the partition suit was inoperative against the defendant as no fraud in partition was established. The mortgage of the Inam fields was not invalid as it was not permanent. The property under the mortgage having fallen to the share of defendant plaintiffs could only seek the substituted security. The suit was dismissed.

It is here pressed that the decision as regards the execution of the mortgage by Ganpatrao not being duly established is erroneous and we think that there is some force in the contention. The first witness for the plaintiffs proves that the attestation by his brother Balkrishna is in his brother's handwriting and P. W. 2 is a son of the writer of the document and proves that the document is in his father's handwriting. But in the partition suit the present defendant, then plaintiff, had pressed for the issue of an injunction to restrain his father from disposing of the property of the family on the ground that he had by the mortgage in the present suit dealt with some of it to the detriment of the then plaintiff and in the appeal from that suit decided by a Judge of this Court the fact of this mortgage was found a ground for allowing the minor to claim partition. We do not think that the respondent can be allowed to blow hot and blow cold. He has in the former litigation relied on this mortgage and in that litigation admitted its execution by his father. We think that that fact with the evidence on record is sufficient to warrant a finding that Ganpatrao did in fact execute the mortgage-deed sued on and we find accordingly.

For the appellants on the second ground of the memorandum of appeal it is admitted that the doctrine of lis pendens applies and that the document sued on cannot be operative on the property that came to defendant's own share in the partition suit; while it is conceded by the learned Counsel for the respondent that a decree may be passed against the property mentioned in the plaintiffs' written statement, Schedule A, i. e., against the substituted security, property that fell to the father's share in the partition, but such a decree cannot be passed against the Inam fields for the defendant succeeded to these fields not as heir to his father under the Hindu Law but as the next male heir under the Inam Rules. We think that there is force in this contention under the authority of

GULAM MOHIUDDIN v. SHANKAR

Krishnaji v. Mamwar Ali (2). And it was held in Krishnaji v. Nilkant (3) that the devolution and incidents of an Inam estate in Berar are regulated by the Berar Inam Rules subject entirely to the Sanad, or certificate or other documents, evidencing the special terms of the grant in the particular case. In the present case the Inam fields are madatmash, that is, a grant for maintenance or subsistence under rule V of the Inam Rules, and we are of opinion that any permanent alienation or a transaction likely to result in a permanent alienation can only be acted on during the lifetime of the then certificate-holder and that at his death by the order sanctioning the appointment of another Inamdār, the Inam land passes to him free of any encumbrances imposed on the land by the last holder. We, therefore, think that in the present case the mortgage by Ganpatrao cannot in any case affect the Inam land which is now held by the present defendant as Inamdār.

The learned pleader for the respondent states that a decree may be passed against field No. 122 of Patur and fields Nos. 41, 47 and 48 of Pipalgaon and the house at Nagpur and against the right of Ganpatrao to recover debts amounting to Rs. 3,000 and this contention has been accepted by the plaintiffs. The immoveable property above-mentioned, has been found not to be in the possession of the present defendant and the question arises whether we should, under these circumstances, pass such a decree.

In spite of the finding that the defendant is not at present in actual possession of the fields and house at Nagpur, we do not see why plaintiffs should not get a decree directing that in case of non-payment of the decretal amount on or before the expiry of six months from this date the defendant's right to redeem the property mentioned in Schedule A excepting the Inam fields shall be extinguished. Whether after the preliminary decree is made final the plaintiffs shall be entitled to get possession of the property from the persons in actual possession or not it is premature for us to decide.

The result is that a preliminary decree under O. XXXIV, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, CIVIL REVISION No. 95 OF 1923.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. III r. 4—Vakalatnama—Person able to sign—Mark made with his consent—Presentation of plaint by pleader, whether valid.

A person who, though able to write his name, intending to give a vakalatnama to a pleader, touches the pen of a scribe who makes his mark, satisfies the provisions of O. III, r. 4 of the Civil Procedure Code in executing a valid vakalatnama in favour of a pleader and the presentation of a plaint by the latter is not invalid.

Revision of the order of the Sub-Judge, Khandwa, dated the 22nd February 1923, in Civil Suit No. 114 of 1922.

Mr. M. Y. Shareef, for the Applicant.

Mr. Fida Hussain, for the Non-applicant.

ORDER.—This is a very peculiar case. The non-applicant plaintiff, who is a Korku by caste and is able to write, sued the defendants for possession of occupancy fields in the Court of the Munsif, Burhanpur, but the suit not being cognizable by the Munsif the plaint was returned, and then it was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Khandwa, through another pleader. A vakalatnama was written, but as the pleader's clerk either did not know or had forgotten that the plaintiff could write, the plaintiff did not sign it but only made his mark. It was contended by the defendants that, inasmuch as the wakalatnama was not properly executed, there was no proper presentation of the plaint by the pleader and, therefore, the suit must fail.

KESHO RAM v. FHAKUR DAS

The Subordinate, Judge, holding that the plaintiff had executed the vakalatnama, decided that the plaint was presented by a duly appointed pleader of the plaintiff. Against this order the present application for revision is made.

It is contended that under O. III, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code, the appointment of a pleader to make or do any appearance, application or act for any person shall be in writing, and shall be signed by such person or by his recognized agent or by some other person duly authorised by power-of-attorney to act in his behalf. There is no question of the pleader's clerk, who made the plaintiff's signature, being his authorized agent. Under section 3, clause (52) of the General Clauses Act (X of 1896), "sign," with reference to a person who is unable to write his name, includes "mark." As the plaintiff admittedly can write his names his mark cannot under the law be held to be his signature. Consequently, the vakalatnama is not signed by the plaintiff and there is no appointment of the pleader under O. III, r. 4, and, therefore, the plaint was not presented by an authorized person.

In this case there is evidence to show that the plaintiff was actually present at the time the vakalatnama was written and that he touched the pen. There was no necessity to forge his signature in his absence, and although it has been argued that there was some ground for haste, as the suit is prima facie time-barred, it will appear at first sight that it must have been time-barred several days before. Consequently, there was no necessity for any haste and as the plaintiff was personally present the making of his signature would only occupy a few seconds. As the Subordinate Judge remarks, the plaintiff appears to be a youth belonging to an ignorant class who is not expected to be able to sign, and it is very likely that it did not occur to the clerk that the plaintiff could sign and the plaintiff probably was not aware that his signature was necessary and contented himself with touching the pen.

The question then is whether the plaint should be rejected for this technical defect. If there were any doubt about the plaintiff's intention of giving a vakalatnama to this particular pleader and about his presence on the day on which it was executed, it would have been a different matter. In the circumstances, I think I should not interfere on this technical point.

A reference has been made to Dhannoolal v. Baji (1), in which it was held that the provisions of O. III, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code, are clear and imperative, and the Courts have no power to relax them. In that case the appeal was presented by a pleader who had no power to present it. In the present case the plaintiff intended to execute and believed that he had executed a power-of-attorney, but instead of signing it made his mark. In this connection, I may refer to the case of Maharashtra Jnan Kosh Mandal, Ltd, v. Bijjural (2), in which it was held that the Court must not only refrain from being astute to defeat a just claim on some technical point of procedure; it is bound to make every effort to prevent such a result when it amounts to injustice and abuse of its process.

I do not think there is any necessity for interference and the application is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Construction of document—Award—Oral evidence, when admissible—Decree passed on award—Executing Court, whether can modify terms of award.

Where the words used in an award are perfectly clear oral evidence cannot be admitted as to their meaning. Such evidence can only be given where the words are ambiguous or are capable of more interpretations than one.

KESHO RAM v. THAKUR DAS

An award is not a compromise or a contract, and a court executing a decree passed on an award has no power to modify the terms of the award.

Balambhat v. Vinayak, 10 Ind. Cas. 746, 85 B. 289; 18 Bom. L. R. 154; Surendra Nath Banerjee v. Secretary of State for India, 57 Ind. Cas. 648; 24 C. W. N., 545, distinguished.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge, 1st class, Amritsar, dated the 8th of January 1923.

Lala Jagan Nath, for Dr. Narang, for the Appellant.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 15th of July 1922 an award was given by two arbitrators in a dispute between Lala Thakur Das and Lala Kesho Ram. This directed Lala Kesho Ram to pay Rs. 5,289-6 to Lala Thakur Das within 60 days of the date of the award, or in default to pay Rs. 5,789-6; a decree was given in accordance with the terms of this award. Lala Thakur Das applied to execute the decree for the larger sum urging that the money, not having been paid within the sixty days, he was entitled to do so.

Various objections were taken before the Senior Subordinate Judge, who decided that there had been a default and that Lala Thakur Das was entitled to recover the larger sum. From this decision an appeal has been preferred in which eleven grounds are entered and Counsel wished to take a twelfth that there was no proper application for execution but I have not allowed him to add this additional ground of appeal.

Admitting that no money was actually paid within sixty days, Counsel contends that according to Amritsar usage sixty days mean the same thing as two months or, in this case, sixty two days, and that he should have been allowed to produce evidence in support of this contention. I find that the Senior Subordinate Judge rightly disallowed the production of such evidence. The words used in the award are perfectly clear and it would only be in case those words were ambiguous or were capable of more than one interpretation that oral evidence could be given as to their meaning. It is, moreover, not even stated that within sixty days any money was actually paid or tendered in the true sense. Counsel next urges that further time was allowed as shown by two telegrams, unnumbered as exhibits. These show that Lala Thakur Das was apparently prepared to allow a further period of twenty-four hours, and it is contended that within those twenty-four hours money was deposited with a third party and that this deposit amounted to a full tender. The telegrams are as follows:—

"Asonand Thakardas, Katra Ahluwalia, Amritsar. You refused receiving balance money tendered. Money deposited with Kanhaiyalal Lohgarh. Receive money against delivery receipts.

Radharam Vaishnodas."

15th September, 1922.

"X Tf. 30'30 Amritsar 17—73. Radharam Vaishnodas Darshani Deori Amritsar. You have not paid Rs. 5,289-6-0 within sixty days from 15th July hence you are liable to pay my clients Asanand Thakurdas Rs. 5,789-6-0 which please pay and get receipts otherwise legal action holding you responsible' for all costs in case you pay direct within 24 hours Rs. 5,289-6-0 my clients may accept and give you receipt. Kanhaiyalal has made no payment notwithstanding repeated requests.

Mallesh Das, Vakil."

It is quite true that Lala Thakur Das was prepared to allow twenty-four hours' grace but it is not correct to say that there was any proper tender during those twenty four hours. The second telegram shows clearly that Kanhaiyalal paid nothing. It is not even urged that Lala Thakur Das agreed to accept payment to Kanhaiyalal as equivalent to payment to himself and there was no sort of proper tender as defined in Chetan Das v. Gobind Saran (1), Muhammad Mushtaq Ali Khan v. Bankey Lal (2).

The chief point on which the appellant relies is that the provision increasing the amount recoverable is a penal clause and should not have been enforced in its entirety. Counsel quotes various rulings such as Balambhat v. Vinayak (3); and Surendra Nath Banerjee v. Secretary of State for India (4) which are not at all in point, for the fact that an executing Court can modify a penalty which has been fixed in a compromise or contract even if that compromise or contract is subsequently embodied in a decree, is quite immaterial when we have to deal with an award which is in no sense of the word a compromise or a contract. The executing Court has no power to modify the terms of that award and, as the money was not paid by due date, the full amount is now recoverable. I have dealt with all the grounds of appeal argued before me and finding that there is no force in any of the contentions of the appellant, I dismiss the appeal with costs.

(2) 55 Ind. Cas. 991; 42 A. 420; 18 A. L. J. 440.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 18 4)—Property subject to mortgage—Payment of compensation money to mortgagor without notice to mortgagee—Suit against Government for recovery of money due on mortgage—Mortgagee's remedies.

Where property subject to a mortgage is acquired by Government under the Land Acquisition Act and the whole compensation amount is paid to the mortgagor without notice to the mortgagee, the mortgagees may claim a reference under section 18 to the Civil Court and after the expiration of 6 months he is confined by the Act to a suit under section 31 against the persons to whom the money was wrongly paid. There is no other remedy at all either against the Secretary of State or the Land Acquisition Collector. [p. 83, Col. 1]

Per Chief Justice :—Where a new right is brought into existence by a Statute and a remedy in respect of that right is also given by the same Statute, that remedy is exclusive of any ordinary rights. [p. 83, Col. 1]

The compensation money payable under the Land Acquisition Act is payable under that Act and that Act only. Any rights in respect of it are creatures of the Statute and nothing else. The statute in creating the rights has given the remedies to be exercised in respect of those rights. [p. 83, Col. 1]

The principles of the Land Acquisition Act are that the Crown should in the first instance be allowed to recognise the person in possession as ostensible owner. A mortgagee as such need not be recognised at all though he can, within a certain time and within certain limits, come in and institute proceedings provided under the Act. [p. 83, Cols. 1 & 2]

Appeal against the order, dated 20th September 1921, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Salem in A. S. No. 300 of 1920, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Namakkal in O. S. No. 628 of 1918.

Petition under Section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order, dated 20th September 1921, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Salem, in A. S. No. 300 of 1920, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Namakkal in O. S. No. 628 of 1918.

Messrs. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer and Sankara Sastriar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

The Chief Justice.—In this case certain land was taken many years ago under the Land Acquisition Act and ultimately the value was fixed and compensation allowed at Rs. 270. In the course of the proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, a mortgage by the owner of the land in favour of the present respondent came to light. The Revenue authorities who were enquiring into the matter came to the conclusion that the mortgage was a sham and not an effective transaction. When the award was made, the mortgagee who had not come in and claimed and was not taking any part in the proceedings, was disregarded and a part of the money was paid over to the mortgagor, the owner of the land. Before the whole of the money had been paid over, or rather while the Crown was in a position to get back some of the money that had been paid over, the mortgagee made his claim and, ultimately, when his claim was found to be a good one, he received the balance of the compensation money which had not been irrevocably paid over to the mortgagor. He then proceeded to sue on his mortgage and after many vicissitudes, he ultimately got a decree having established his mortgage to be good one against the mortgagor. Apparently he has been unable to execute that decree, although he has got the whole of the principal sum and interest except Rs. 8 from the balance of compensation money referred to above, and he has been out of pocket in respect of his costs in the mortgage suit, which costs no doubt he would be able as between himself and his mortgagor to add to his security. He now sues the Secretary of State and the present Land Acquisition Collector of Salem, treating the present Collector apparently as responsible for the act of his predecessors, and he frames his plaint in general terms by stating the facts, namely, that he was a mortgagee, that the then Collector had notice of his mortgage and that, notwithstanding that he had notice of his mortgage, he paid the money over to the mortgagor. The Crown (in which expression I include the Secretary of State and the Collector) replies "you have no cause of action against the Crown at all, and, secondly, if you had a cause of action it has long since been barred by limitation." In my judgment, the Crown is right on its first contention, and it is, therefore, unnecessary to consider the second contention, though, as at present advised, I think that the Crown is also right on that.

The compensation money payable under the Land Acquisition Act is payable under that Act and that Act only. Any rights in respect of it are creatures of the Statute and nothing else. The Statute in creating the rights has given the remedies to be exercised in respect of those rights, and the law is quite clear that, where a new right is brought into existence and a remedy in respect of that right is given at the same time by the same Statute, that remedy is exclusive of any ordinary rights. The leading authority on the point is the decision of Willes, J., in the Wolverhampton New Water Works Co. v. Hawkesford (1). The principles of the Land Acquisition Act seem to be that the Crown should, in the first instance, be allowed to recognise the person in possession as ostensible owner. There is nothing in the Act to show that it is to recognise mortgagees as such at all. It can make its award to the mortgagor, the ostensible owner of the property. The mortgagee can come in and, within a certain time and within certain limits, can apply to have the matter referred for the decision of the District Court. The Collector himself, if he has any doubt as to who is entitled to the money, can also refer it. Within a certain time, up to six months, the time varying according as the claimant has, or has not, had notice under the Land Acquisition Act, but with the outside limit of six months, the claimant may himself institute proceedings under the Act; so that the real owner of the property which has been acquired in this way is not left without a remedy. After the expiration of six months, it is provided by section 31 of the Act, that he can take proceedings against the person who has received the money. So that the whole scheme of the Act is that down to a certain date before the money is paid over, if persons intervene and make a claim, their rights shall be enquired into and their rights established; but that after the money is paid over by the Crown to somebody else, they must take proceedings against that somebody else. Those being the only remedies given by the Act, I can find no sort of cause of action against either of the present defendants.

It was suggested that some cause of action might be framed in part for a wrong, breach of duty, or something of that sort against the Collector, but the view was not pressed possibly in view of the fact that we have not the right Collector before the Court: and admittedly any action for tort would have long since been barred by limitation. Under these circumstances, in my judgment, the Crown is right and this appeal must be allowed, and allowed with costs throughout.

I ought to add that a great part of this claim, in fact all except Rs. 8 being in respect of costs incurred as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, I cannot ascertain any principle of law under which either of the defendants, even if otherwise liable, could be made liable for that.

In the result, C. M. A. No. 200 of 1922 is allowed with costs throughout.

Waller, J.—I agree to the order proposed.

It seems to be obvious that plaintiff was aware of the award. He should, therefore, have applied under section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act for a reference to the Civil Court. This course he did not adopt. Failing that, he was entitled, under section 31 of the Act, to sue the persons to whom the compensation money had been paid wrongly. This course he did adopt and obtained a decree. He now sues the Secretary of State and the present Land Acquisition Collector for the balance due on the decree plus the costs incurred in getting the decree. I am of the opinion that he has not been able to show that he has any cause of action against the defendants. The compensation money was properly paid to the ostensible owner of the property, as plaintiff did not appear and claim a reference to the Civil Court. After that, he was limited by the Act to a suit under section 31 and that against the persons to whom the money was wrongly paid. He had no other remedy at all.

I agree that the appeal should be allowed with costs throughout.

Receiver, appointment of, pending arbitration proceedings—Jurisdiction of Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), S. 161, Sch. II, para. 3, cl. (2).

A Court has jurisdiction to appoint a Receiver while an arbitrator is proceeding with a reference but this power of the Court should not be exercised except in exceptional circumstances, without the concurrence of the arbitrator.

A Court has also power to appoint a Receiver in the interim between the submission of the award and the final acceptance or rejection of it.

Application for appointment of a Receiver in a suit for partition in the interim between the submission of the award and the disposal of objections to the award filed by the defendants.

ORDER.—This is a suit by one Chetansing against one Gulibai and others, Gulibai being the widow of one Dewan Mushtaksing, in respect of certain property alleged by the plaintiff to be ancestral and joint, which, however, Gulibai says was separate property of Dewan Mushtaksing and in respect of which she sets up a Will. The suit was for partition and in the course of that suit, it was referred to arbitration and the arbitrator submitted his award under Second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code. Objections have been taken to this award. In the interim the plaintiff has applied that a Receiver should be appointed. An interim order for appointment of Receiver was issued but was not given effect to because certain parties in the suit asked that the matter should be disposed of without formal issue of notice. I have heard the parties and now proceed to consider whether an order for appointment of a Receiver should be passed.

It is urged that under clause (3) para 2 of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure the Court has no power to deal with the matters in suit and therefore has no power to appoint a Receiver. But I am not of the opinion that the powers of the Court in this matter are affected by that clause. The Court can no doubt, when the matter is before the arbitrator, issue an injunction under section 151 and the issue of injunction and the appointment of a Receiver are so intimately connected that it would seem the Court would, in proper cases, have the power to appoint a Receiver. It is clear that it might often be necessary in the interests of all the parties to appoint a Receiver while the arbitrator is proceeding with the matter. The Court, has therefore in my opinion jurisdiction to appoint a Receiver. The question is whether this is a fit case in which a Receiver should be appointed.

Now it would appear that this ancillary jurisdiction should not be applied to frustrate the object of the reference. I take it that where arbitration is actually proceeding the Court is not to appoint a Receiver except in exceptional circumstances without the concurrence of the arbitrator. In the present case, of course, the arbitrator is functus officio he having given his award in the suit, yet in a proper case, I think the Court has power to appoint a Receiver in the interim between the submission of the award and the final acceptance or rejection of it. In the present case there is nothing exceptional to justify the appointment of a Receiver. This very matter of the interim custody of the property was one of the subjects submitted to the decision of the arbitrator and it is one of the subjects dealt with by the arbitrator. It would appear, therefore, that the appointment of a Receiver at this stage would be to frustrate the object of the reference and it does not appear to me proper unless there were very strong grounds made out, so to do.

I, therefore, refuse this application and cancel the interim order.

Appeal against the decree of the Assistant Collector of the 1st class, Sitapur, dated 23rd
September, 1922.

Mr. L. S. Misra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hyder Husain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decree of an Assistant Collector of the first class of Sitapur, dated the 23rd September 1922, made in a suit brought by the plaintiffs-respondents against the defendant-appellant under section 108, clause (15), of the Oudh Rent Act in respect of the profits of the 9-annas share of the plaintiffs in village Kusela, pargana Maholi, district Sitapur.
The defendant is the lambardar of the village and holds a 5-annas 4-pies share in that village. There are other co-sharers with whom we are not concerned in this appeal.
The claim has been decreed for Rs. 12,957-5.
The present appeal by the defendant is limited to the sum of Rs. 2,636-14-7, being the amount of village expenses claimed by the defendant but disallowed by the Court below and interest allowed by that Court to the plaintiffs as against the defendant.

The first point argued in appeal relates to the question of the defendant's liability to pay interest on the arrears of profits due to the plaintiffs. It was contended that there is no such liability in law, the provisions of section 73 of the Indian Contract Act and also the provisions of the Indian Interest Act not being applicable. It was further urged that even on grounds of equity the defendant was not liable because his conduct has neither been contumacious nor arbitrary. I agree with the learned Counsel for the appellant that in this case the liability for interest as against his client cannot be founded either on section 73 of the Indian Contract Act or on the provisions of the Indian Interest Act.

The question therefore is—Is the defendant otherwise liable for such interest? In the present case I have come to the conclusion that he is. The grounds of liability of a lambardar to pay interest in respect of the profits of the shares of the other co-sharers in the village were, if I may say so, discussed in a learned judgment of Mr. Spankie, A. J. C., in the case of Mirza Sadiok Husain v. Havirul Rahman (1). I have no hesitation in following the principle laid down in that case. Mr. Spankie referred to the rule in the English Courts of Equity that an accounting party may under certain circumstances be charged with interest. He pointed out with reference to the rules relating to lambardars that a lambardar is in a fiduciary position with regard to his co-sharers and has to account to them. Now if the present defendant has refused to fulfil the trust reposed in him in virtue of his position as a lambardar I have no doubt in my mind that he is liable to pay interest under the rule of equity mentioned by Mr. Spankie in his judgment. The question, therefore, narrows itself down to this, has the defendant without any reasonable cause refused to render the accounts? That he has not rendered them is admitted. That he has refused to do so in the present case is equally clear. His learned Counsel, however, argues that his client's attitude in this behalf was not unreasonable by reason of the facts that these plaintiffs had obtained the share for profits claimed under a sale deed from other co-sharers in the village; that the sale was made subject of a suit for pre-emption by the defendant; that the defendant succeeded in his claim for pre-emption: that he satisfied the decree for pre-emption; payment of the money due to the vendees in Court; that subsequently on an appeal by the vendees, that is the plaintiffs, the decree of the first Court was reversed by this Court, and that there is still pending an appeal to his Majesty in Privy Council from the decree of this Court.

ADITYA PRASAA v. OHHOTTE LAL

The first observation which falls to be made with regard to this argument is that these are mere allegations of the learned Counsel and some of them are contained in his client's written statement but there is no proof whatsoever in support of any of these facts on which the argument that the plaintiffs cannot in equity be permitted to retain the pre-emption money as well as claim the profits with interest thereon in respect of the share in suit is founded. It would certainly seem highly unjust that the plaintiffs should have the benefit both of the pre-emption money and also of the profits of the share, but here again there is no evidence that the pre-emptor ever paid a single pie in pursuance of the decree for pre-emption and that anything went into the pockets of the plaintiffs. It was urged, however, that this Court might remit an issue for the trial of these questions. I am not prepared to accede to this contention. It is true that no specific issue was framed with respect to these allegations of the defendant as they were set out in the written statement an issue cannot be framed with reference to evidence which a party may choose to produce in support of his allegations at the trial of the case. If the defendant intended to rely on those facts it was open to him to produce evidence in support of them. He seems to have made no grievance in that behalf at all to the Court below nor did the issue as framed exclude the admission of any evidence that the defendant might have chosen to produce in this respect. From what I have heard at the hearing of this appeal from Counsel on both sides, I have formed the opinion that it will be a waste of time to delay the final decision of this appeal any longer. I, therefore, agree with the Court below that the defendant is liable for interest in this case.

The next point argued by the learned Counsel for the appellant was with reference to the rejection of the claim of the defendant in respect of village expenses. On this matter the lower Court says that there is no evidence in support of any expenditure under that head and it is admitted before me by the learned Counsel for the appellant that the Court below is right. I am, however, asked to allow something for village expenses because, it is argued, I must presume that some expenditure must have been incurred in that behalf. I am unable to make any such presumption. The appellant is a co-sharer in the village in his own right. There is nothing to indicate that he has incurred any extra expenditure in fulfilling his duties of a lambardar in relation to the share of which the profits are claimed. On these grounds I uphold the decree of the Court below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

A transfer of all the rights of the vendee under a contract to sell land, even after the vendor has refused to perform the contract, is not a transfer of a mere right to sue, although a right to sue is involved in it. The vendee or his transferee has still the right to enforce specific performance of the contract, in spite of the breach by the vendor. The Law of India in respect of breaches of contract for sale of immoveable property differs from that of England, and the ordinary rule as to the measure of damages laid down in section 78 of the Contract Act applies to such breaches, the measure of damages being the difference between the contract price and the market value of the land on the date of breach. First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore, dated the 21st February 1917.

Mr. M. C. Michael, for the Appellants.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, and Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On 2nd February 1913 Mirza Asad Beg agreed to sell to the late Mr. Justice Shah Din of Lahore certain landed property at Azamabad in the Lahore District for Rs. 1,72,000 and was handed a cheque for Rs. 5,000 as earnest-money, for which he gave Mr. Justice Shah Din a receipt. On the same date Mirza Asad Beg wrote to Mr. Shah Din saying that he would not be able to come to his house on either of the following two days as he would be busy with a case but that "the rest will be complied with." On 17th February 1913 Mirza Asad Beg again wrote to Mr. Justice Shah Din returning him the cheque and saying that the agreement to sell had been dependent on the consent of his sons, that this consent had not been given and that he had decided not to sell the land. Mr. Haq Nawaz, Barrister, nephew of Mr. Justice Shah Din replied on the latter's behalf that Mirza Asad Beg could not withdraw from the agreement, and sent back the cheque. On the 1st March Mirza Asad Beg repeated his inability to conclude the sale and returned the cheque once more. The correspondence closed with a letter by Mr. Haq Nawaz, dated 25th March, in which Mirza Asad Beg's obligation was again asserted. These facts are not disputed.

On 10th February 1916 Mr. Justice Shah Din transferred to Mr. Haq Nawaz by registered deed of gift all his rights under the contract with Mirza Asad Beg of the 2nd February 1913. Mr. Haq Nawaz gave notice the same day to Mirza Asad Beg to complete the sale and a week later, on 17th February 1916, instituted a suit against him with Mr. Justice Shah Din as the second defendant and claimed Rs. 15,000 damages for breach of contract, stating the cause of action to be failure to reply to the notice of 10th February 1916.

The suit was resisted by Mirza Asad Beg but unsuccessfully.

The first three issues, which were as follows, were found against him :—

(1) Whether the assignment of Mr. Justice Shah Din in favour of the plaintiff is invalid?

(2) Whether the suit is within limitation? and

(3) Whether there was a condition in the contract that it will be performed, if the sons of defendant No. 1 (Mirza Asad Beg) agree?

On the fourth issue regarding the damages to which the plaintiff was entitled, the trial Court awarded him the full sum claimed. Mirza Asad Beg's sons have appealed, he having died.

AKHTAR BEG v. HAQ NAWAZ

The principal points which have been argued on their behalf are in regard to the first and last issues. The contention that the suit is time-barred, because the breach took place on 17th February 1913 and the suit was instituted one day over 3 years later, i.e., on 17th February 1916, is effectively answered by reference to the provisions of section 12 (i) of the Limitation Act. Regarding the third issue we agree with the Court below that there is no proof of the contract having been subject to the reservation that Mirza Asad Beg's sons should consent. The terms of Mirza Asad Beg's letter to Mr. Justice Shah Din dated 2nd February 1913 are inconsistent with any such arrangement.

On the first issue it is asserted that the transfer to the plaintiff by Mr. Justice Shah Din was invalid and could not be the basis of an action, (1) because what was transferred was a mere right to sue (section 6 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act), (2) because the transaction offended against the provisions of section 136 of the Transfer of Property Act, and (3) because it was contrary to public policy, in that Mr. Justice Shah Din could not under the rules governing the conduct of public servants purchase land without the previous sanction of competent authority. The short answer to (2) and (3) is that section 136 of the Transfer of Property Act is not in force in the Punjab, that, although Mr. Justice Shah Din was a Judge and Mr. Haq Nawaz, his nephew is a legal practitioner, there was no buying of, trafficking in, or stipulation for any share of or interest in an actionable claim and that it was neither pleaded in the Court below nor proved that Mr. Justice Shah Din acted in contravention of any of the Government Servants Conduct Rules.

Nor was it a mere right to sue that was transferred to Mr. Haq Nawaz. The deed of gift (Exhibit P 3 printed on page 12 of the record) conveyed to him all Mr. Justice Shah Din's rights under what was an executory contract for the future sale of immoveable property. Such a contract, as pointed out by the Madras High Court in Venkateswara Aiyar v. Raman Nambudri (1), is not a mere right to sue, although a right to sue is involved in it on breach of its conditions. In the present instance Mirza Asad Beg had refused before the transfer to complete the sale, but the contract for sale had not thereby become incapable of specific performance and one of the rights transferred undoubtedly was a right to demand or enforce such performance.

There remains the question of the amount of damages. The plaintiff was clearly entitled to sue at his option either for specific performance or for compensation for breach of contract or for both. He has chosen to sue for compensation. It has been pointed out in Adikesavalu Naidu v. Gurunatha Chetty (2), Nabin Chandra Saha Pramanik v. Krishna Baroni Dasse (3), and Ranchod Bhawan v. Manmohandas Ramji (4), that the law of India in respect of breaches of contract for the sale of immoveable property differs from that of England and that the ordinary rule laid down in section 73 of the Contract Act applies to such breaches. The Calcutta and Bombay cases also lay it down that the measure of damages ordinarily should be the difference between the contract price and the market-value at the date of breach, though it is remarked in Ranchhod Bhawan v. Manmohandas Ramji (4) that each case has to be considered on its own merits.

In the present case Mirza Asad Beg deliberately and unmistakably repudiated the contract and has failed to prove that he had any good reason for doing so. We are clear that loss was caused and that damages are due, but the difficulty in the case lies in the assessment of the damages since there is no direct evidence of the market-value of the estate at the dates when the cheque was returned to Mr. Justice Shah Din, viz., the 17th February and the 1st. March 1913. One witness, it is true, has estimated that the land was worth Rs. 2,00,000 on 2nd February 1913, but he is Mian Amin Din, Mr. Justice Shah Din's father-in-law, a person who could not fairly be asked for an unbiassed opinion, and there is no satisfactory explanation forthcoming of why

Mirza Asad Beg should be prepared to sell an estate worth Rs. 2,00,000 for Rs. 28,000 less. The outside price which he attempted to obtain at that time, according to the plaintiff (see letter Exhibit A page 6 of the printed record), was Rs. 1,75,000.

Mr. Tek Chand for the defendant has attempted to argue that the lower Court was wrong in fixing the 17th February 1913 as the date of breach, but in the light of the authorities above quoted the lower Court was right. There was a definite and positive refusal to sell the land on the part of defendant No. 1 on the 17th February 1913, and when the cheque was returned for the second time on the 1st of March 1913 Mr. Justice Shah Din could have been left in no doubt that the contract had been repudiated. Mr. Justice Shah Din no doubt had the period allowed to him by law to sue for specific performance, but the measure of damages cannot be the highest value within that period. In Nabin Chandra Saha Pramanik v. Krishna Barani Dassee (3); it was held that the plaintiff had no power to postpone the date of the breach of contract to that on which he demanded a conveyance for the last time.

The trial Court came to the definite conclusion that the land in question was worth not less than Rs. 2,00,000 in February 1913 but the evidence on which it relied related to conditions in 1915 and 1916. The evidence of Jamal Din, P. W. 3., a broker, referred to what happened in 1916. Mr. Justice Shah Din said that the same Jamal Din asked him to pay a higher price than that fixed in February 1913, but this was in November or December 1915. A letter was produced (Exhibit P. W. 2), dated the 15th April 1916, in which Akhtar Beg, son of Mirza Asad Beg, asserted that offers had been received of Rs. 2,30,000 and Rs. 2,35,000. The learned Subordinate Judge reviewed all this evidence, attached much importance to the opinion of Jamal Din that the land in 1916 was worth more than Rs. 2,00,000 (which is not precisely what Jamal Din said), and, remarking that there was no evidence on either side of any sudden rise in land values, concluded that the value must have been not less than Rs. 2,00,000 in 1913.

Against this conclusion, however, there are two important facts. The first is that Mirza

Asad Beg is not shown to have even asked for more than Rs. 1,75,000 in 1913 and another is that Mr. Justice Shah Din after 1st March 1913 did not press the matter. He did not sue for specific performance and three years later he gave away for nothing his rights under the contract of sale to Mian Haq Nawaz, a relative it is true, but not his nearest heir, who was his own son. The words of section 93 of the Contract Act are—"Compensation for any loss or damage caused to him thereby, which naturally arose in the usual course of things from such breach, or which the parties knew, when they made the contract, was likely to result from the breach of contract." Then follows an express reservation that such compensation is not to be given for any remote and indirect loss sustained by reason of the breach. What we have to try to determine in the present instance is the value of the bargain to Mr. Justice Shah Din, when it was repudiated in February 1913. We find that he was asked to pay Rs. 1,75,000 but refused to pay more than Rs. 1,72,000. He tells us, and there is no reason to disbelieve him, that he wanted to purchase the lands in order to improve the estate which he already owned in Azamabad. He received back his cheque for the earnest-money promptly and thus was not deprived of the use of the Rs. 5,000. He evidently considered that he had made a good bargain, for the correspondence shows that he turned a deaf ear to the somewhat pathetic entreaties of Mirza Asad Beg made in the name of old friendship that he should cancel the agreement. At the same time, the loss to which he was put was not sufficient to inspire him to any definite action with a view to escaping from it or minimising it.

We think, on the whole, that the value of the estate may be taken, for purposes of calculating damages, as Rs. 1,75,000 the amount demanded by Mirza Asad Beg in his negotiations with Mr. Justice Shah Din. The land may have been worth Rs. 2,00,000 or more in 1916, but it is impossible to reconcile any idea that it was worth Rs. 15,000 more than the contract price in 1913 with the conduct of Mr. Justice Shah Din and Mirza Asad Beg. The latter made no attempt, so far as we know, to sell the land elsewhere until 1916.

JELADI BURRAYYA v. PONDURI RAMAYYA

We, therefore, accept the appeal to the extent of reducing the decree of the plaintiff to one for Rs. 3,000 with proportionate costs in the trial Court. In this Court the appellant will have his costs on the amount by which he succeeds.

The guardian of a minor has no right to involve the ward's estate in debt for the purpose of purchasing lands to be added to his estate and a debt incurred for such a purchase is not binding on the minor's estate or the heirs of the minor. All that the creditor is entitled to is to have a decree against the lands actually purchased with the money advanced by him.

Messrs V. Ramadas, U. Keshav Menon, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case defendants 2 to 5 are the appellants. They are the heirs-at-law of one minor Thirupatayya who died some time ago. The plaintiff brings this suit for recovering from the 1st defendant personally and from the minor's estate in the hands of defendants 2 to 5 the amount due under the Promissory-note, Ex. A, which is a renewal of

Exs. A-1 and A-2. It is found by the learned District Judge that the money due under the promissory-note was borrowed for the purpose of paying the purchase-money for certain lands which the guardian of the minor purchased for him. The question we have to decide is whether the money so borrowed for purchasing lands—we will assume that the purchase was for the benefit of the minor—constitutes a debt really binding on the estate of the minor. There can be no doubt that there was no necessity to borrow this money at all, nor to buy the lands. The District Judge has found that there was no necessity so to borrow; but he seems to have thought that, as it might be for the benefit of the minor, the minor's estate would be liable. We are unable to agree with this proposition. The guardian had no right whatever to involve the ward's estate in debt for the purpose of purchasing lands to be added to his estate. It has been so decided in this Court in several cases vide Subramania v. Samaswami Nadan (1) Subramania Chetty v. Chidambaram Mudaly (2). We must, therefore, hold that the debt in this case due under the promissory-note sued upon is not binding on the minor's estate or the heirs of the minor, and the decree passed against the minor's estate in the hands of his heirs must be set aside. All that the plaintiff is justly entitled to is to have a decree against the lands actually purchased with the money advanced by him. There will, therefore, be a decree in favour of the plaintiff only against the lands governed by Ex. I, the purchase deed, to pay the purchase-money under which the promissory-note amount was borrowed. The lower Court has refused a personal decree against the 1st defendant. There is no appeal against that portion of the decree and, therefore, we cannot pass any orders against the 1st defendant in this appeal.

As regards costs, the right order to pass in this case is to give defendants 2 to 5 their full costs throughout, the plaintiff paying such costs. As between the plaintiff and the 1st defendant, there will be no order as to costs in the second appeal.

the purpose of working the Act, it is open to the Government to create a forum for the purpose of

is not a ground for holding that the rules are ultra vires. [p. 98, col. 1.]

Mr. T. Richmond, for the Appellant.

The Government Pleader, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit filed by the plaintiff against the Secretary of State for India in Council for a declaration that the Government order cancelling his election to the Gooty Taluk Board is ultra vires and illegal and does not effect the validity of his election; for a mandatory injunction directing his name to be published in the Port St. George Gazette as duly elected; for an injunction prohibiting the Government from publishing the name of his rival candidate Subba Rao and for the recovery of Rs. 100 as damages. No evidence has been adduced in the suit. The election in question was held on the 13th of November 1915. It is not disputed that the plaintiff obtained the majority of votes; that the defeated candidate Subba Rao put in an objection petition, and that the Government set aside the election of the plaintiff and ordered a fresh election on the ground that the plaintiff's presence on the Taluk Board as a member would bring the Local Fund Administration into contempt.
The order of the Government is questioned by the plaintiff on two grounds. The first is that the rules under which the Government purported to act are ultra vires and that consequently, he is not affected by the order and, secondly, that even if the rules are intra vires
there was no enquiry by the Government into the matter; that he was not given an opportunity of showing cause against the allegations made by the rival candidate, and that on the merits it could not be said that his presence on the Taluk Board would have the undesirable consequences referred to by the Government as a ground for invalidating his election. He sets out his qualifications in the plaint.

The defence by the Secretary of State for India in Council was that the rules framed by the Government are valid, that under the rules the Government was not bound to give any notice to the plaintiff; that the discretion vested in the Government is absolute and unquestionable by a Civil Court, and that the

KONA THIMMA REDDI v. SECRETARY OF STATE

Government having made such enquiry as it thought fit and having come to the conclusion that it came, it was not open to the plaintiff to question the validity of its act. The Government denies that the plaintiff is entitled to any damages.

Two points were urged by Mr. Richmond before us in Second Appeal. The first was that the rules were ultra vires, and the second was that the whole proceedings were vitiated by the fact that no notice was given to the plaintiff who consequently had no opportunity to show cause against the objection raised by his rival candidate, a violation of the elementary principles of natural justice which, without more, would invalidate the proceedings.

As regards the first point, section 16 of the Local Boards Act runs as follow :—"The other members of the Taluk Board may be (a) either wholly appointed by the Governor-in-Council, or (b) partly so appointed and partly appointed by election by the members of the panchayats in the Taluk from among their own number or by the tax payers and inhabitants of the Taluk, subject to such rules and conditions as may from time to time be prescribed by the Governor-in-Council. Section 144 of the Act provides that the Governor-in-Council may, from time to time, frame forms for any proceedings for which he considers that a form should be provided, and make rules consistent with the Act—(1—a) as to the qualifications of electors and of candidates for appointment as members of a panchayat by election and the method and time of appointment of members of a panchayat by election in regard to the following matters. Then follow a number of matters specified in sub-clauses (a) to (f), (f) being "any other matters regarding the system of representation and of election." The Government have framed rules which purport to have been made under sub-section (1) of section 144 of the Local Boards Act and directed that the rules should come into operation on the 1st of January 1916. Rule 33 provides that the validity of any election may be questioned by a petition put in before the Collector of the District or the Divisional Officer within fifteen days after the result of the election has been declared, by any candidate who has not withdrawn or by not less than ten persons who have voted at the election on any of the grounds mentioned therein. Ground (e), which is the only material ground necessary to be considered for purposes of this appeal, runs as follows:—"That the person whose election is questioned is likely to bring the Local Fund Administration into contempt or that his being a member of the Taluk Board is dangerous to the public peace or order." It provides that the Governor-in-Council or the Collector may act suo motu and take action on any facts affecting the validity of an election which may be brought to his notice whether by a petition by a rival candidate or otherwise. Rule 35, which is material for the consideration of the objection raised by Mr. Richmond, runs as follows:—"Objection to the validity of an election on the ground specified in rule 33 (c) i.e., that the person whose election is questioned is likely to bring the Local Fund Administration into contempt or that his being a member of the Taluk Board is dangerous to public peace or order, and objections on the ground of disqualification under r. 9 (d) and all cases which involve an interpretation of the rules shall be referred by the Collector for the decision of the Government. In all other cases of objection under r. 33 an enquiry shall be held by the Collector or at his discretion by the Divisional Officer, at which the contending parties shall have an opportunity, of appearing in person or by representative, and orders shall be passed on the result of the enquiry by the Collector, who may, at his discretion, dismiss the petition or if he finds the election invalid, either order a new election or declare that the candidate who obtained the next highest number of votes to the candidate or candidates disqualified or found to have been validly elected has been duly elected, provided that before declaring such next candidate to have been duly elected, the Collector shall notify his intention to do so to the other candidates and the petitioners who have impugned the election and shall consider any objections which may be lodged by them in writing within ten days from the date of such notice. No appeal shall lie against the orders of the Collector passed under this rule."

It is, therefore, clear from the rules that, so far as the objection that the person elected is likely to bring the Local Fund Administration into contempt is concerned, no notice to the person affected and no enquiry are contemplated by the rules, the reason very probably being that an enquiry into the nature of the ground referred to in cl. (e) is not desirable in public interests. It is contended by Mr. Richmond that the right of a person who is duly elected to a public office is a right which he is entitled to vindicate in a Civil Court and that it is not open to the Government by rules framed under the Act to create a forum and thus deprive the person elected of his ordinary legal remedies. It is also contended that as the rule purports to be framed under sub-section (1) of section 144 of the Local Boards Act, they could only embrace the subject specified in that clause as the matters to be dealt with by the rules and as none of those matters relate to enquiries into disputed elections, they cannot be relied on by the Government for the purpose now in question. We are unable to agree with either of these contentions. The Local Boards being creations of Statute and that Statute having given power to the Government to frame rules for the purpose of the working of the Act, we think it is perfectly open to the Government to create a forum for the purpose of deciding disputes as to elections directed to be carried out under the provisions of the Act. The Government in passing the Local Boards Act has not taken away any rights which had previously vested in the public and it is difficult to see how it can be said that restrictions could not be imposed by the Government acting on the rule making power conferred by an enactment which creates new rights, so long as the rules are not repugnant to any of the provisions of the Act. Nor do we think that, if power is given to make rules by the Act, the fact that the Government purports to make rules under one section rather than another would be a ground for holding that the rules are ultra vires.

In Lakshminarasimha Somayajier v. Ramalingam Pillai (1), the question arose as to whether, under the Local Boards Act, the Governor-in-Council has power to make rules ousting the jurisdiction of Civil Courts as to objections to the validity of elections. Sadasiva Aiyar, J., was inclined to the view that the Governor-in-Council has no power to make rules and that the rules framed by the Government are invalid. The learned Judge was of opinion that section 16 was too vague and that, as the rules were not made under section 16, but only under section 144 (1), which merely deals with the power to make rules as to the qualifications of the electors and of candidates for appointments by election and as to the method and time of election and of elective Presidents, Vice-Presidents and Members of Local Boards, the power constituting a special tribunal to enquire into the validity of elections was not conferred by section 144 (1) under which the present rules purport to be framed. Spencer, J., was of opinion that the rules are valid and that sections 16 and 144 gave the Government power to frame rules relating to the adjudication of disputes as regards the validity of elections. After referring to sections 16 and 141 the learned Judge observes as follows :—"But in any case I think that the words any other matters regarding the system of representation and of election, illustrate what is meant in cl. (1) by the words 'method of election' of members of Local Boards. I think these words are wide enough to cover the power of making rules to provide for the whole scheme of election and for the conduct of enquiries into complaints and objections to elections held or about to be held as well as to objections to the list of voters." We agree with the view taken by Spencer, J.

The question as to the validity of the rules framed under the District Municipalities Act arose for determination in more than one case. The District Municipalities Act contains provisions analogous to those in the Local Boards Act with regard to the matter in question. Sub-clauses 1 to 6 of section 250 (1) (a) of the District Municipalities Act correspond to sub-clauses (a) to (f) of section 144 (1-a) of the Local Boards Act and give power to the Government to make rules with reference to the matters specified in that section. Section 10 of the District Municipalities Act also contemplates the power of the Government to make rules. Rules were framed under the powers conferred by the District Municipalities Act. Rules 34 and 35 provide for cases of disputes as regards the validity of elections and rule 35 (d) which is one of the grounds for setting aside an election is that the person is likely to bring the Municipal administration into contempt or that his being a Municipal Councillor is dangerous to the public peace or order. Rule 36 provides that in cases falling under rule 35 (d) orders should be passed by the Government and not by the Collector. In Secretary of State for India v. Appa Rao (2) the question arose as to the power of Government to frame rules under the District Municipalities Act. Krishnan, J., was of opinion that the fact that the Government purported to frame rules under one sub-clause, which did not refer to the matter rather than another which did so refer would not make rules ultra vires and observed as follows :—"Before a rule framed by a rule-making authority is declared ultra vires, the Court must be satisfied not only that it had no power to act under the power under which it purported to act, but also that it had no power at all under any law to so act. If power can be found elsewhere from the section quoted, the rules will be referred to that power and held not to be ultra vires." The learned Judge referred to Rajan Chetti v. Seshayya (3); Queen-Empress v. Ganga Ram (4); and Halsbury, Vol. 27, p. 146. In Secretary of State for India v. Venkatesalu Naidu (5), the question arose as to the validity of the rules framed under section 250 (1) of the District Municipalities Act, IV of 1884, as amended by Act III of 1897. Rules were framed under section 250 as regards the power of the Government to veto the election of a person if, before his election, he is convicted of an offence which in the opinion of the Governor-in-Council, disqualifies him from being a Councillor. The plaintiff who was the respondent in the appeal was elected as a Municipal Councillor but the Government set aside the election on the ground that he was guilty of such an offence as unfits him to be a Municipal Councillor. The District Judge found that some of the rules framed under the Act were ultra vires. Referring to the contention that section 250 (1) (a) does not provide for a rule of the nature of rule 35 (a) (b) framed under it, Miller, J., observed as follows :—"I am not prepared to decide that that is so, for it is not clear to me that section 250, clauses (1) (a), (i) (vi) or (vii) would not cover the case. But even if it be so, the rule may be attributed to the power given by section 10 to prescribe conditions; and if the power is there, the rule is good though it purports to have been made under a different section." The learned Judge held that the rule was not ultra vires and illegal. Wallis J., was also of the same opinion. We think that sections 16 and 144 of the Madras Local Boards Act read together give power to the Government to make rules when an election is contested and also to frame rules declaring the qualifications required of a person before he is validly elected and that the rules framed by the Government are not ultra vires.

Turning to the next question that the appellant was not given an opportunity to be heard before the Government passed orders; it is clear from the rules we have already referred to that no enquiry is contemplated. Rule 35 states that objections to the validity of an election on the ground specified in rule 33 (e) and objections on the ground of disqualification under rule 9 (d) and all cases which involve an interpretation of the rules shall be referred by the Collector for the decision of the Government which shall be final and that in all other cases of objection under rule 33 an enquiry shall be held by the Collector, etc. It is clear, therefore, that no enquiry is necessary. If the rule is valid, it seems to us that the Government has power to declare what shall be the nature and scope of the enquiry. Reference was made to the Secretary of State for India v. Venkatesalu Naidu (5), already referred to, where it was held that an enquiry was necessary before an election can be invalidated under rule 35 and 36 framed under the District Municipalities Act. But rule 35 requires an enquiry and the decision, therefore, cannot have any application to cases where no enquiry is required. We may point out that the Local Boards Act provides for enquiries whenever the Government thinks it necessary that the person affected ought to have notice, for example, section 24, cl. (iii) provides for the removal of a President, Vice-President or member of a Taluk Board whose continuance in office is, in the opinion of the Government, dangerous to public peace or order likely to bring the administration of the Local Board into contempt. But cl. (ii) states that when action is proposed to be taken in that matter no orders shall be passed without giving an opportunity of explanation to the President, Vice-President or member concerned.

We are therefore of opinion that both the objections taken fail. It is not necessary to consider the further question whether the action for damages would lie against the Secretary of State for India assuming that the rules framed by the Government were ultra vires. In the result, the Second Appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

If during the pendency of a suit by an adopted son the plaintiff dies and his adoptive mother is substituted as his legal representative and she adopts another boy the latter has a right to step in as the representative of the estate which has vested in him after his adoption and the Court should take notice of the adoption before finally adjudicating the rights of the parties.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Amraoti, in Civil appeal No 23 of 1919, dated the 20th March 1922.

JUDGMENT.—The facts have been sufficiently stated in the remanding judgment of this Court and the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. It is first contended that the adoption of Panjabrao was invalid. It is said that by the adoption of Mahadeo Radha Bai's power for adoption was exhausted since all the spiritual purposes for which adoption is allowed were achieved. A widow has power to adopt several sons in succession: Suryamarayana v. Vankatarama (1). Radha Bai after succeeding Madhorao as heir was competent to adopt if Mahadeo left no issue or widow behind; Venkappa Bapu v. Jivaji Krishnan (2). Admittedly, Mahadeo left no issue or widow being a mere child of about 8 years when he died. He had presumably not attained ceremonial competency before he died and the spiritual purposes were not completely achieved before his death.

It is next said that Panjabrao's adoption was invalid as it was made from a corrupt motive, namely, to defeat the rights of the defendants. If the adoption was made, as may be presumed, for the spiritual benefit of Radhabai's deceased husband it cannot be said to have been made from a corrupt motive because it has the effect of divesting her estate and, in consequence, depriving the defendants of their rights under the mortgage executed by her.

The next point argued is that legal necessity has been proved at least by the recitals in the mortgage-bond. Banga Chandra Dhur Biswas v. Jagat Kishor Acharjya Chowdhuri (3), which is relied on in this connection, does not support the appellants, if anything goes against them; vide page 195. It is to be noted, moreover, that the mortgage in this case was executed only in 1907.

It is contended that Panjabrao had no right to come in as the legal representative of Mahadeo the original plaintiff as he does not claim through or under him, but claims Babuji's estate in his own rights as his adopted son. This Court had in its judgment remanding the case held that Radha Bai was appearing in this case after Mahadeo's death in two capacities, in her personal capacity and as the representative of the estate. As soon as she adopted Panjabrao she ceased to represent the estate which became vested in Panjabrao. No authority is cited in support of the plaintiff's contention and there is no reason why in such case Panjabrao should not be allowed to come in as representing the estate if he proved his adoption and why the adoption should not be taken notice of by the Court before finally adjudicating the rights of the parties. The decision of this Court that the defendants were entitled to remain in possession during Radha Bai's lifetime was under circumstances which did not then exist. If the circumstances have changed pendente lite by the adoption there is no reason why this Court at least should not, in the interests of justice, and to avoid a multiplicity of suits notice them and adjudicate accordingly. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Second Appeal No. 246-B of 1922 which was argued with this appeal is also governed by this judgment.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 151, 152
Misdescription of property in plaint—Error—Accidental slip or omission—Deliberate error—Fraud—Duty of Court—Inherent power of Court—Limitation.

In order to attract the application of the provisions of section 152 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the error must be a natural consequence of an accidental slip or omission. The mere misdescription of the property in the plaint and the repetition of the error in the decree will not suffice. [p. 97, col. 1.]

Where an error is deliberate, it is settled law that the provisions of section 152, Civil Procedure Code cannot be invoked for the purpose of correcting such errors [p. 97, col. 1.]

In the case of a deliberate error, the person committing it is guilty of fraud on the Court and when the fraud is brought to the notice of the Court the latter cannot let it stand and countenance its perpetration, lapse of time being immaterial. The action of the Court under such circumstances would clearly rest on the provisions of section 151, Civil Procedure Code and the aggrieved party cannot be left to seek his remedy by a regular suit. [p. 97, col. 2.]

Under section 151 the Court has the inherent power to act ex debito justitiae and to do that real and substantial justice for which it alone exists. [p. 97, col. 2.]

There are certain limitations on the powers of the Court acting either under section 151 or 152, Civil Procedure Code even an accidental error should not be amended if third parties have acquired rights under the erroneous judgment in the interval. [p. 98, col. 1.]

Application under section 152 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Mr. Hyder Husain, for the Applicant.Mr. Bisheshur Nath Srivastava, for the Opposite party.

Order.—This application purports to have been made under section 152 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The object of the application is to obtain an order for "correction of the judgment and decree" of this Court in Second Civil Appeal No. 196 of 1903 decided on the 10th May 1904.

The facts of the case are not complicated. The applicant, Sheo Darshan, executed on the 11th May 1901 a sale-deed in favour of one Sahaj Ram in respect of one half of 1 anna, 6 pies, 13 kirants, and 2 jau share in village Daraundha. Within this share lie certain plots measuring 8 bighas 2 biswas and 6 biswansis. These were expressly exempted from the transaction of sale. On the 26th August 1901 Matadin Singh, a co-sharer in the village, brought a suit for pre-emption in respect of the sale above-mentioned. In paragraph four of the plaint of that suit it was stated, that, within the property sold, there were certain plots of land which belonged to the plaintiff pre-emptor and consequently they should not have been made the subject-matter of the sale. At the end of the plaint the relief prayed for was a decree for proprietary possession of 9 pies 3 kirants 3 jau with the exception of the plots belonging to the plaintiff and specified in a list attached to the plaint. A decree was eventually passed in terms of the plaint and was confirmed by this Court except as to a certain variation made in the amount of the pre-emption money.

MATA DIN SINGH v. SHEO DARSHAN SINGH

The grounds of the present application are that the plots, which were not the subject-matter of the sale and were expressly excluded from the share, which was the subject-matter of the sale, were by mistake treated throughout the trial of the suit for pre-emption as if they also were sold under the sale-deed on the basis of which the suit for pre-emption was brought. It is said that the error committed in the pleadings was repeated in the decree. It is now alleged that under the colour of that decree the pre-emptor, Mata Din Singh, is making attempts to dispossess the applicant from those plots.

The first question, which I have to decide, is—Does the case as stated above fall within the terms of section 152 of the Code of Civil Procedure? The perusal of the plaint in the suit for pre-emption leaves no room for doubt that the claim related to the property sold under the sale-deed of the 11th May, 1901. Obviously, it could not relate to any property which was not sold. The sale-deed was by its date mentioned in paragraph 4 of the plaint. The property sold was, however, described in the paragraph relating to the relief as 9 pies 3 kirants 3 jau with the exception of the plots belonging to the plaintiff with which we are not concerned in the present matter. This description on the premises stated is clearly a wrong one but the mere fact that the description of the property was erroneous will not, in my opinion, attract the application of the provisions of section 152 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The error must be a natural consequence of an accidental slip or omission. An error may be committed deliberately, and if it has been so committed it is settled law that the provisions of that section cannot be invoked for the purpose of correcting such an error.

Now, the mistake in the present case might have either arisen from any accidental slip or omission, or the pre-emptor deliberately but erroneously included such property within his suit for pre-emption as was not the subject-matter of the sale to which the suit related. If the first alternative is correct, section 152 would apply. If the second alternative is the right one to adopt, a case of fraud would emerge against the pre-emptor. In the first event, there is a long catena of decisions both in India and in England which establish the proposition that pleadings as well as the judgments and decrees of Courts may be rectified to carry out the true intention of the parties and of the Court in such a suit. In the case of Lawrie v. Lees (1) Lord Penyanee said :—"I cannot doubt that, under the original powers of the Court, quite independent of any order that is made under the Judicature Act, every Court has the power to vary its own orders.....to vary them in such a way as to carry out its own meaning, and where language has been used which is doubtful, to make it plain. I think that the power is inherent in every Court." In the case of Hatton v. Harris (2), Lord Watson made the following observation :—"When an error of that kind has been committed, it is always within the competency of the Court, if nothing has intervened which would render it inexpedient or inequitable to do so, to correct the record in order to bring it into harmony with the order which the judge obviously meant to pronounce." As regards the cases decided in India I would content myself with mentioning two only, that is, Sheo Balak v. Sukhlei (3) and Ferozsha Pestonji Randerja v. The Sun Mills, Limited (4). It was urged on me repeatedly that the record now sought to be corrected was perfected and closed about 20 years ago, but, as observed by Lord Macnaghten in Hatton v. Harris (2) already mentioned, lapse of time has nothing to do with the question. In that case an error 39 years old was amended.

If, on the other hand, Matadin Singh, pre-emptor, deliberately suppressed the omission of the plots which were exempted from the sale in respect of which he brought his claim for pre-emption he was guilty of fraud on the Court, and when this fraud has now been brought to the notice of the Court, obviously, I cannot let it stand and countenance its perpetration. My action under such circumstances would clearly rest on the provisions of section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under that section the Court has the inherent power to act ex debito justitiæ and to do that real and substantial justice for the administration of which it alone exists. See the observations in the case of Hukum Chand v. Kamalanand Singh (5). It was suggested that the applicant may be left to seek his remedy by a regular suit. To my mind such a suggestion would amount to a prayer to the Court to shut its eyes to the facts of the case. Those facts either reveal a case of error due to an accidental slip or omission or a fraud. I cannot obviously stay my hands and defer the decision of the question, any longer.

There are certain limitations on the powers of the Court acting either under section 152 or under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Those limitations were stated by Lord Watson in the quotation already given from his judgment in the case of Hatton v. Harris (2). The observations of Lord Herschell in the same case were similar. The result is that even an accidental error should not be amended if third parties have acquired rights under the erroneous judgment in the interval. In the present case, however, no third parties are involved. The learned Advocate for the opposite party argued, however, that it would be inexpedient or inequitable to correct the error now because of certain events that have taken place since the decree was made in the suit for pre-emption.

It appears that in 1906 this applicant claimed ex-proprietary right in some of the plots which are the subject-matter of this application. His claim was not decided on merits and the application was rejected. It further appears that two or some of these plots were in the possession of mortgagees. The opposite party has obtained possession of them by redeeming the mortgages and is now in possession of the redeemed plots. Two of the plots, however, were left in the possession of the applicant by the order of the Board of Revenue. This happened in the year 1921. I am of opinion that these facts do not render it inexpedient or inequitable to correct the record so as to bring it into harmony with the real intention of the parties and of the Judge.

On the above grounds I allow the application and direct that the decree of this Court dated the 10th May 1904 be so amended as to declare that the decree for pre-emption in respect of the share of 9 pies 3 kirants 3 jau shall not cover the plots stated in the application before me and that those plots were not the subject-matter of the sale to which the suit for pre-emption related. The applicant will get his costs from the opposite party.

There is nothing either in the sections of, or in the rules under, the Madras Local Boards Act giving powers to a District or Subordinate Judge to question the validity of the appointment of a nominated member except under s. 57 and on the sole ground of disqualification specified in sections 55 and 56. JUDGMENT.

The Chief Justice.—This is an application for the revision of the decision of the District Judge acting under the powers conferred upon him by the rules framed under the Madras Local Boards Act of 1920. By rule 1 of the rules issued by the Local Government under the powers conferred on them by section 199 (2) (c),—

“No election of a member or of a President of a District, Taluk, or Union Board shall be called in question except by an election petition presented in accordance with these rules, to the District or Subordinate Judge having jurisdiction.”

A preliminary point is taken that this Court has no power of revision, under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure over the decision of a District or Subordinate Judge when acting under that rule. That depends on whether the Judges therein referred to are acting as Courts, or acting merely as persona designata; that is to say, persons selected to act in the matter in their private capacity and not in their capacity as Judges. There has been considerable conflict of opinion on this point since the coming into force of this Act, and I do not think that the decisions that have been given on the matter are of great assistance to us in arriving at the proper conclusion, and we have to look at the Act and the rules and the law as it stands. The law is, I think, quite definitely established by the decision in National Telephone Company Ltd. v. Post-Master General, in the words of Lord Parker at page 562 that,—

“Where by Statute matters are referred to the determination of a Court of Record with no further provision, the necessary implication is, I think, that the Court will determine the matters as a Court. Its jurisdiction is enlarged, but all the incidents of such jurisdiction, including the right of appeal from its decision, remain the same.”

If this matter had been referred to the District Court or Subordinate Judge's Court in terms, in my judgment, no question could arise, because, following the words of the judgment just quoted, the matter would be determined by the Court as a Court, it being given jurisdiction for this particular purpose, and all the incidents which include the incident of being liable to revision must follow, although no appeal would lie in this particular case, because an appeal has been expressly precluded, for by section 57 (2) of the Act, and by the rules, this “decision is to be final.” But as the word “Judge” is used and not the word “Court,” one has to look carefully to see whether the word “Judge” was used of him in his capacity as Judge or in his personal capacity, and I think great light is thrown upon this by two other rules. Rule 12 (2) of the rules for election refers to “an election or other competent Court” and it is quite clear that it is there referring to a Court of a District Judge or Subordinate Judge: and, by rule 4 (3) of the rules for the conduct of Inquiries, power is given to the District or Subordinate Judge in certain cases "to direct any Court subordinate to him to hold the inquiry." I find it impossible to hold that a reference to a Judge with power to refer to a Court subordinate to him can mean anything else than reference to a Judge sitting as a Judge in the exercise of his ordinary jurisdiction extended for that purpose. For these reasons, in my judgment, the power of revision lies.

It is further argued that the fact that the decision of this Judge is, by section 57 of the Act and by the rules, final, preclude any revision. There is really no authority adduced in support of that proposition and, in my judgment, it would be quite contrary to the whole object and intention of section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure so to hold. That section only applies where there is no appeal. I know of no better way of directing that there shall be no appeal than by the legislature stating that the decision of a particular Court shall be final. It is the ordinary mode of expression used for the purpose in much of the legislation in England on which this legislation is founded; and, where the whole object of revision is to prevent a Court, from which there is no appeal, acting contrary to its jurisdiction, a finding that it is the law that, because the words used are "the decision shall be final," a Court, ordinarily subject to the revisional powers of this Court, should be permitted to act wholly without jurisdiction without the aggrieved party being entitled to any remedy, would in my judgment be untenable, and that would be the effect of deciding this second point in favour of the contention put forward.

On these grounds, in my judgment, this Court has revisional power and the preliminary point fails.

The petitioner was duly elected President of Narasaraopet Taluq Board. A petition was subsequently filed before the District Judge of Guntur for a declaration that this election may be declared void and annulled and that the petitioner, one Chintalacheruvu Koteswara Rao, a defeated candidate in the election, should be declared to be duly elected. The District Judge found that the petitioner had not been properly appointed a member of the Taluq Board and was, therefore, not eligible for election to the Presidentship of that Board, and the matter comes before us on a petition for revision of that order.

It is contended, on the one side, that the decision of the District Judge was wrong and that this is a case for the exercise by the High Court of its revisional powers under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, and, on the other side, that the decision of the District Judge is right, and that, even if it was wrong, his order is not a proper subject-matter for revision.

The powers of a District Judge in the matter of Election Petitions are contained in section 57 of the Madras Local Boards Act of 1920, and in the "rules for the conduct of inquiries and the decision of disputes relating to elections," issued by the Local Government under their powers in that behalf under section 199 of the Act. By section 57, the Judge has power to determine whether an appointed member is disqualified under section 55 or section 56 by reason of the various grounds set out in those sections, such as, insanity, bankruptcy, being interested in contracts with a local board and the like, none of which are alleged in this case. The petitioner had been appointed by the President of the District Board purporting to act under section 9 of the Act. By the rules above referred to, save as provided in section 57, no election of a member or a president can be called in question except by an Election Petition presented to the District or Subordinate Judge. This rule is somewhat obscure. I understand it to mean that, apart from the powers under section 57, a petition to the District or Subordinate Judge is the only way of questioning the election. But I can find nothing either in the section or rules giving powers to a District or Subordinate Judge to question the appointment of a nominated member such as the petitioner, except on the specified ground, namely, disqualification under sections 56 and 57. At the time of his election as President, he, the petitioner, was de-facto a member of the Board and as such eligible for election to the Presidentship. It is not suggested that there was any irregularity in the election; but what is suggested is that he was not eligible for election because he was not properly appointed a member by the President of the District Board. Now the appointments of members other than elected members are in certain cases in the hands of the Local Government, in certain cases in the hands of the President of the District Board, and in certain cases in the hands of the President of the Taluq Board under section 9 of the Act, and I can find nothing in the Act to suggest that a District or Subordinate Judge is intended to have any jurisdiction to decide whether the Local Government or the President of the District or Taluk Board, as the case may be properly exercised their power of appointment. What he has jurisdiction to decide is whether a person so appointed is disqualified under section 55 or 56 and nothing else, and, in my judgment, on a petition dealing with an election to Presidentship, he cannot go into the question whether a particular candidate was duly appointed a member of the Board. Therefore, in my judgment, the District Judge in this case was acting wholly without jurisdiction in investigating that question and giving his decision upon it, and the matter, therefore, comes directly under section 115 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code. If it is desired to question the appointment of a member, it is probably open to question it in Court by proceedings in the nature of quo warranto.

Assuming that the District Judge had power to inquire into this matter, whether it can be said that the High Court has power to revise his order under section 115 (a) is a very different question and one upon which I do not think it necessary or advisable to express any opinion or to add one more to the many judgments dealing with what does come under that section and what does not: nor do I consider it necessary for the decision of this case to go into the question whether the District Judge was right or wrong in the decision to which he came. But as the matter has been fully argued before us and as it is of considerable importance, I think it desirable that we should express our opinion, obiter though it may be.

The facts are that the President of the District Board, while temporarily in Madras, prepared and signed a list of his appointments, including therein the petitioner, and sent a copy of that to the Fort St. George Gazette. The District Judge held that, by reason of section 23 (2) of the Madras Local Boards Act, all the appointments thus made were void.

That section enacts that, "during the temporary absence or incapacity of the President of a District or Taluq Board, the President's functions shall devolve on the Vice-President."

By section 25 "the exercise of these powers by the Vice-President shall be subject to such restrictions limitations and conditions as may be laid down by the President and shall also be subject to his control and revision."

I do not think that the mere absence for a few days of the President from his district on a visit to Madras necessarily vests in the Vice-President the power of appointing members of the Board. But even if it did, the fact is in this case the Vice-President did not make any appointment and the President returned to his district, and signed again in his district the list of appointments of these members and directed it to be posted on the board where, and not in the Fort St. George Gazette, it had by the Act to be posted. This was a perfectly proper exercise of the President's powers of appointment and, in my judgment, there was nothing wrong with the appointment of the petitioner at all.

It follows that this petition must be allowed, that the order of the District Judge must be set aside. The 1st respondent must pay costs throughout, including the costs of the 2nd Respondent.

Ramesam, J.—I agree with my Lord's conclusion in the judgment delivered that, in the light of the rules made under the Act, the District Judge must be considered to be a Court and that, notwithstanding the use of the word 'final' in section 57, a revision petition lies to this Court.

The next question is whether there is any question of jurisdiction or material irregularity within the meaning of section 115 Civil Procedure Code. It is not suggested that the District Judge acted with material irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction. As to jurisdiction, I think one must start with the principles laid down by the Privy Council in Balakrishna Odayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (2). "The section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise, or non-exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it. The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved."

It follows that an error of law leading to an erroneous order only, does not justify our interference. An error of law leading to the exercise of a jurisdiction which did not exist, justifies such interference (See Aichayya v. Sri Seetharamachandra Rao (3). It must be remembered that every error of law cannot be regarded as the exercise of a jurisdiction which does not exist merely because, but for such error, the order of the Court would have been different, otherwise, all erroneous decisions can be modified or revised in revision. I agree with the observations of my brother Wallace, J. in Ahmad Thambi Maracair v. Basava Maracair (4).

Applying these principles, it follows that, where a District Judge, who has jurisdiction to enquire into an election petition under the rules that made under the Local Board Act, 1920, passed as the result of his enquiry an erroneous order based on an erroneous construction of the sections of the Act or the rules, the order cannot be interfered with in revision; and it cannot be said in such a case, that on account of his error of law, the District Judge exercised a jurisdiction which did not exist or failed to exercise a jurisdiction which existed. For instance, when he held erroneously that the appointment of a member or President was void, it cannot be said merely by reason of such error that there was an erroneous assumption of jurisdiction. I do not think that the observations of Channell, J., in Re v. Manchester Justices (5) at page 574 help us in the application of section 115. It is true that these observations have been quoted and applied by my brother Krishnan, J., in (6) Ramaswami Goundan v. Muthu Velappa Gounder. I am unable to agree with all the observations in that case. I also observe that, in that case, the ground of material irregularity was also available.

In the present case before us, I agree with my Lord the Chief Justice, in holding that the District Judge acted without jurisdiction. Under section 57 he had jurisdiction to enquire into the validity of the appointment of a member only if it is questioned on the ground that he was disqualified under sections 55 and 56. No such ground was alleged or proved and the District Judge had no jurisdiction to enquire into the Election Petition. We have not here a case of his holding that he had jurisdiction to enquire by an erroneous construction of some section or rule of law. He merely enquired into a petition in which no ground, such as is mentioned in the section, was alleged.

I agree with the order proposed by my Lord.

Waller, J.—On the first point I agree that the Judge referred to in rule (1) is not a persona designata. Rule IV (3) is, I think, conclusive. A judge acting as persona designata has no Court subordinate to him. I agree also that the description of his decision as final means no more than that there is no appeal against it. It does not mean that a decision made without jurisdiction is not open to revision under section 115 Civil Procedure Code.

It seems to me clear that, in this case, the Judge had no jurisdiction to decide what he did decide. Petitioner was an appointed member of the Board and his appointment could be questioned before the Judge only with reference to sections 55 and 56 of the Act. It could certainly not be questioned in a proceeding of this kind. The Act, no doubt, provides that the President shall be elected from among the members of the Board, but that provision does not give the Judge jurisdiction on an Election Petition to consider whether the members have or have not been properly appointed. He cannot disqualify them save on grounds that are not applicable here. The result in the present instance was the petitioner remained an appointed member of the Board although the Judge had set aside his election as President on the ground that he had not been properly appointed a member. On the last point I agree that petitioner was properly appointed and concur in the order allowing the petition and as to costs.

*Punjab Redemption of Mortgages Act (II of 1913)
s. 12—Application for redemption—Ord'r directing redemption on payment of a certain sum—Suit for declaration by mortgagee that a larger sum is due on mortgage—Limitation.*

Defendant made an application under the Punjab Redemption of Mortgages Act for redemption of a mortgage. The Collector made an order directing redemption on payment of a certain sum. The mortgagee instituted the present suit for a declaration that the charge on the land was a sum higher than that determined by the Collector and that he was entitled to retain possession of the land until the sum claimed by him was paid to him :

Held, that the position of the mortgagee in the suit was not that of a plaintiff but was more analogous to that of a defendant, the suit being virtually a defence against an order divesting the mortgagee of possession before payment of the sum due, and no question of limitation for the suit could, therefore, arise.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 14th August 1920, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Delhi, dated the 28th January 1920, and dismissing the claim with costs in both Courts.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Davi Dayal and N. C. Mehra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 26th January 1897 one Bhola, a jat, mortgaged certain lands to the present appellant for Rs. 400.

According to the terms of the deed interest was to be paid for 6 years at the rate of Rs. 1-8-0 per cent per mensem. After the expiry of this period the land, if not redeemed, was to be considered sold to the mortgagee, the latter having the right during the subsistence of the mortgage to assume possession should the interest not be paid. On the 18th January 1905 the conditional sale clause was expunged by the Deputy Commissioner acting under section 9 (2) of Act XIII of 1900. On the 12th January 1910 the mortgagee brought a suit for possession and obtained a decree on the 16th February 1910. On the 21st August 1912 a deed of lease was executed under which the mortgagor became a tenant of the land on a yearly rent of Rs. 72. In that deed the mortgagor admitted that the charge on the land was Rs. 1,336, that sum representing the principal sum advanced on the basis of the mortgage plus 13 years' interest. After Bhola's death, his son, the present respondent, applied for redemption under Act II of 1913 and the Revenue Officer on the 19th January 1918 passed an order in his favour on payment of a sum of Rs. 400. On the 24th March 1919 the mortgagee brought a suit under Act II of 1913 for a declaration that the charge on the land was Rs. 1,336 and that he was entitled to retain possession until that sum was paid. The trial Court dismissed the suit holding that the claim was time-barred and that in any case Rs. 1,336 could not be due as there was no stipulation in the mortgage deed that any interest was payable after the expiry of the 6 years' term. On appeal the District Judge confirmed the decree of the trial Court, adding that the suit could not lie under the provisions of Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. Dissatisfied with both these decrees the mortgagee has come to this Court on second appeal.

It appears to us that both Courts have failed to appreciate the real position of a mortgagee in such suits. That position is not that of an ordinary plaintiff but is more analogous to that of a defendant. The mortgagee was in possession of the land and had the Revenue authorities not intervened, it would have been the business of the mortgagor to bring a suit for possession by redemption. The summary proceedings taken by the Revenue authorities cannot affect the rights of the parties and the present suit is thus virtually a defence against an order divesting the mortgagee of possession before payment of the full sum due. In such circumstances, the question of limitation does not arise and the provisions of Order II rule 2 are inapplicable.

It seems doubtful whether in any case these latter provisions would have barred the suit. Under the terms of the deed the mortgagee in 1910 had the option of suing for possession or claiming the money due. He could not have asked for both remedies and it was open to him to select the one he preferred. In this connection, the principles laid down in the Full Bench ruling of this Court Parmeshri Das v. Fakeria (1) are in point.

We are satisfied that the sum of Rs. 1,336 is a valid charge on the land. It is true that the mortgage-deed does not expressly provide for the payment of interest after the expiry of the six years' term. In the full Bench ruling published in Motan Mal v. Muhammad Bakhsh (2) the principles applicable in such cases were clearly set forth. In that authority Le Rossignol, J., expressed the opinion that in the case of mortgages comprising a stipulation of conditional sale, a covenant to pay post diem interest up to the date of redemption must be implied unless there are very strong reasons to the contrary. In the present case not only are there no reasons to the contrary apparent but there is the significant fact that when the registered deed of lease was executed in 1912, the mortgagor admitted that the burden on the land amounted to Rs. 1,336. This admission affords strong proof that there was an implied agreement to pay interest after the expiry of the six years' term should the mortgagor decide not to enforce his rights of foreclosure.

It follows from these findings that the appeal must be accepted and the plaintiff granted a decree to the effect that he is entitled to retain possession of the land until he is paid a sum of Rs. 1,336 less any payments already made in accordance with the order of the Collector. The plaintiff appellant is also entitled to mesne profits from the date of the Collector's order and these mesne profits will be fixed at Rs. 72 per annum the amount payable under the terms of the lease. The decree will carry costs throughout.

Admission of thumb impression on blank paper—Execution—Burden of proof.

An admission must be taken as a whole and not piecemeal. [p. 105, col. 1.]

A defendant's admission that he had put his thumb impression on a blank paper is not an admission of execution of any document and therefore does not shift the burden of proving the document. [p. 105, col. 2.]

Revision from the decree of the Small Cause Court, Chandur, District Amraoti, dated 10th August 1923, in Civil Suit No. 287 of 1923.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the applicant.

ORDER.—The defendant is sued by plaintiff on the basis of what is described as a promissory-note purporting to bear his thumb impression. The defendant, though admitting that he gave his thumb impression upon a blank paper by Bhaskar, denies the execution of the promissory-note sued upon. His contention is that Bhaskar who has quarrelled with him must have in collusion with plaintiff brought into existence the promissory-note in suit by forging the contents. The Small Cause Court upheld this contention and dismissed the suit.

2. This petition for revision raises one very important question of law, namely, whether the burden of proving the execution of the promissory-note lay on plaintiff or in view of the defendant's admission of the thumb impression, it became necessary for him to disprove the execution thereof. It is contended that when a party admits his subscription or thumb impression borne on any paper he ought to be presumed to have put it upon that paper with full knowledge of its contents and that, inasmuch as the defendant has in this case admitted that he gave his thumb impression, it was for him to show that it was blank at the time he gave the impression; that the lower Court not having looked at the case from this point of view has committed an error of law which vitiates its appreciation of the evidence and consequently the judgment of the case.

3. It is a general rule of law that an admission made by the opposite party in his pleadings of a fact necessary for the decision of a case dispenses with its proof. We must, at the same time, bear in mind another principle also that admission is to be taken as a whole and not piecemeal. The principle upon which the latter rule is grounded is that if a party makes a qualified statement that statement cannot be used as against him apart from that qualification; an unfair use is not to be made of a party's statement by trying to convert it into a particular admission by him, that which he never intended to be such an admission. It has been ruled by Batten, A. J. C. in Balkishan v. Narainsha, (1) that an admission by a defendant at the state of pleadings of the execution of a document required by law to be attested, does not dispense with the necessity of plaintiff's proving its due attestation if the same also has not been admitted. The principle underlying this rule is also the same. I have read the written statement filed in the case by the defendant and in it the defendant clearly denies genuineness of the promissory-note in suit. The admission made by defendant about the giving of the thumb impression upon a paper to Bhasker, his agent, is qualified by the use of the expression that the paper was blank, so that the admission is not an unqualified admission of execution of any document containing any recitals, much less of the promissory-note in suit evidencing a contractual liability to pay a certain sum of money to the plaintiff; on the contrary, in the last sentence of paragraph 2 of the written statement there is a clear insinuation of a forgery by plaintiff and Bhasker with the help of the blank paper bearing the thumb impression. The Court below was, therefore, right in not looking upon the so-called admission of the defendant as in itself importing an admission of execution of the promissory-note, so as to dispense with proof of such execution. In Pirbhu Dayal v. Tula Ram (2), a Bench of the Allahabad High Court held that an admission on the part of the defendant in his pleadings to the effect that the finger impression or signature was his, was not an admission of the execution of the document so as to shift the burden of proving the case on him. The following remarks of Lindsay, J., at page 673 are very pertinent to the point involved in the present revision and may be usefully quoted here:—

"It is obvious, in any case, that the burden of proving the case lay upon the plaintiff Prabhu Dayal. We cannot concede in favour of the appellant that any admission which was made by the defendant regarding the putting of a signature or a thumb-mark on the document in question, amounted to such an admission of execution as to thrust the burden of proving the case upon him. Obviously, there was no admission of execution of the document upon which the plaintiff relied when the defendant stated he had put his signature and his thumb-mark on a blank piece of paper."

"We have no doubt at all that, in view of the pleadings, it was for the plaintiff to prove the due execution of the document upon which he was suing.....It was for the plaintiff to make out his case and he could only do that by proving due execution."

4. In view of the pleadings in this case also, I cannot uphold the contention of the plaintiff that the burden was wrongly laid on him of proving the execution and the passing of consideration of the promissory-note on which he relied in support of his claim. The Court below had discarded the evidence of plaintiff's witnesses as unsatisfactory and has rightly dismissed the claim.

MUSAMMAT ZOHRA BIBI v. GANESH PRASAD

5. The next point that was argued was that the Judge of the Small Cause Court ignored the evidence of plaintiff's witnesses Nos. 2 and 3. It has, I think, considered it. The evidence was recorded by the Judge who gave the judgment and he had the best opportunity of watching the demeanour of the witnesses and to form his own estimate as to their credibility. The Judge does not seem to have disposed of the case after long delay. The mere circumstance that the trial Judge does not make express mention in his judgment of single item of evidence does not necessarily import that the Judge has not considered it or as ignored it altogether.

As a matter of fact, a Small Cause Court Judge is not bound to give any reasons for his decision on the points for determination. I find that the Judge has in this case given good reasons in support of his findings. In view of a recent ruling of this High Court in Padamsi v. Meshrao (3) although the point raised was included by a finding on a question of fact, still I have gone through the evidence, with a view to find out whether the finding that the note was not proved to have been executed by the defendant, is in any way perverse, or against the evidence on record or the probabilities of the case and I do not see any grounds to interfere with the lower Court's appreciation of evidence and of the probabilities of the case. It is remarkable that the record is silent as to the immediate use which the defendant was to make of this sum of Rs. 137-8-0. For these reasons, I dismiss the petition for revision with costs without notice on the other side.

A time-barred debt can form a valid consideration for a transfer of property. If a husband is willing to pay a certain amount of the dower-debt due to his wife and has as a matter of fact paid it by a transfer of property, a Court cannot interfere with the arrangement on the ground that if the husband had resisted the claim for dower under section 5 of the Oudh Laws Act, the amount decreed to the wife would have been less than the value of the property transferred by the husband in lieu of dower. MUSAMMAT ZOHRA BIBI v. GANESH PRASAD JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal. Her claim succeeded in the Court of first instance but on appeal by the defendant the decree of the first Court was set aside by the Additional District Judge of Sitapur and the plaintiff's suit dismissed.

The defendant holds four simple money decrees against Hidayat Ullah Khan, the husband of the plaintiff. The total amount of these decrees is Rs. 2,902-3-6. In execution of the decrees, the defendant has attached a $3\frac{1}{2}$ biswas share of Mauza Gola, mahal Barkatpur, pargana Hyderabad, district Sitapur. The plaintiff claims that the property attached is hers. She preferred an objection against the attachment under O. XXI r. 58, of the Code of Civil Procedure which was dismissed on the 30th July 1918. Hence the present claim for a declaration that the property attached by the defendant in execution of his decrees against Hidayat Ullah Khan is not liable to attachment and sale under those decrees. The plaintiff's case is that she was married to Hidayat Ullah Khan about 40 years ago and one lac of rupees was fixed as prompt dower at the marriage; that about 20 years ago Hidayat Ullah Khan paid Rs. 5,000 towards the dower debt mentioned above; that on the 22nd December 1905 he executed a sale-deed in respect of certain properties, including the property in question, in favour of the plaintiff in lieu of Rs. 45,000 in entire satisfaction of the dower debt due to her, and that the rest of that debt was abandoned by her. She further said that she had been in proprietary possession of the properties covered by the sale-deed since the date of its execution. The main defence to the suit was that the sale-deed, on which the plaintiff founded her claim, was a fraudulent transaction to defeat and delay the creditors of Hidayat Ullah Khan and that it was without any consideration.

Both Courts have found that the sale-deed of the 22nd December 1905 represented a genuine transaction, the intention of Hidayat Ullah Khan being to divest himself of the ownership of the property sold and to confer the same on his wife, the present plaintiff. They have also found that the lady has been in complete proprietary possession of the properties covered by the sale-deed since the date of its execution.

On the question of consideration the first Court found that it consisted of part of the dower debt Rs. 5,000/- or Rs. 10,000/- and also of the obligation which the vendee undertook in respect of the payment of the debts with which some of the properties stood charged. The lower Appellate Court has, however, held that there was no consideration for the sale-deed at all. As regards the dower-debt, that Court is of opinion that none was subsisting on the date of the sale-deed. The grounds of the opinion are two. First, that if a claim for the recovery of the dower-debt, which was admittedly a lac of rupees, had been brought by the plaintiff in a Court of law she would only have been allowed a sum of Rs. 5,000 under the provisions of section 5 of the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876) and this amount she had already recovered from her husband and, secondly, that her claim to the remaining portion of the dower-debt was barred by limitation at the date of the execution of the sale-deed.

In my opinion both the grounds are untenable. The sale-deed is clear evidence of the fact that the husband had no desire to resist his wife's claim for the dower-debt to the extent of one half. Indeed, he discharged the whole of that moiety by executing the deed in question. If the husband is willing to pay a certain amount of the dower debt and has as a matter of fact paid that amount it is inconceivable that any Court of Justice could or at least would interfere with such an arrangement between the creditor and the debtor; nor is there any data on the present record to determine the exact amount of debt which would be decreed in favour of the plaintiff if a suit had been brought by her for the recovery of her dower-debt and had been resisted by her husband under the provisions of section 5 of the Oudh Laws Act. Indeed, the first Court said "that the plaintiff, having regard to the status of Hidayat Ullah Khan and herself, might have been allowed Rs. 5,000 or at least Rs. 10,000 as dower." This ground of decision, therefore, rests entirely on mere conjecture.

The second ground is equally without any solid foundation. In the first place, a time-barred debt may well form a valid consideration for a contract. In the second place, limitation will not being to run unless there has been a demand on the part of the creditor and refusal on the part of the debtor. Assuming that the demand may be presumed from the fact that about 20 years after the marriage the husband paid Rs. 5,000 to his wife in part-satisfaction of the dower-debt, there is no evidence that there was any refusal qua the rest. Indeed, the execution of the deed of sale and its genuine nature, as is found by the Courts below, prove facts to the contrary. It was pointed out by the learned Judge of the Court below that Hidayat Ullah Khan owed to various people unsecured debts to the extent of about Rs. 4,500 and it was observed by the Court of first instance that Hidayat Ullah Khan in executing the sale-deed had also in mind the object of defeating his creditors other than his wife. On the basis of these findings, the argument of the learned Advocate for the respondent proceeded on the provisions of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. The argument may best be answered in the words of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Musahar Sahu v. Hakim Lal, "As a matter of law their Lordships take it to be clear that in a case in which no consideration of the law of bankruptcy or insolvency applies there is nothing to prevent a debtor paying one creditor in full and leaving others unpaid although the result may be that the rest of his assets will be insufficient to provide for payment of the rest of his debts."

I, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs through out.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. XXI, r. 90—Execution of decree—Sale—Collusive decree against judgment debtor notified in sale proclamation—Decree set aside after sale—Suit to set aside sale on ground of fraud and collusion, maintainability of—Remedy, proper.

During the pendency of an execution proceeding when certain property belonging to the judgment-debtor was about to be sold, the latter allowed a collusive decree to be passed against him ex parte declaring a prior charge on the property. This decree was notified in the sale proclamation drawn up in the earlier execution proceedings with a rider that the decree-holder objected to the later decree as fraudulent. The notification of the later decree in the sale proclamation deterred possible bidders from coming forward to purchase the property and it was finally knocked down to the judgment-debtor's brother at a low price. The judgment-debtor subsequently applied to have the later ex parte decree set aside, which was granted and the plaintiffs in that suit allowed the suit to be dismissed. The creditors of the judgment-debtor thereupon brought a suit to set aside the auction sale in favour of the judgment-debtor's brother on the ground of fraud and collusion ;

Held (1) that there was no fraud in conducting and publishing the sale and that, therefore, the plaintiffs' proper remedy was not by way of an application under O. XXI, r. 90 of the Civil Procedure Code ;

(2) that the decree in the second suit having been passed and set aside by fraud and collusion the present suit was maintainable and the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed ;

(3) that there must be a re-sale of the property after a proper proclamation.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of South Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 99 of 1919, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Chidambaram in Original Suit No. 103 of 1918.

VENKATARAMA AIYAR v. PARAMASIVA AIYAR

Mr. K. V. Krishnaswamy Aiyer, for the Appellant.

Messrs. B. Sitarama Rao, T. V. Ramanath Iyer and R. Sethurama Sastri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was brought for a declaration that the decree in O.S. No 734 of 1917 on the file of the District Munsif of Chidambaram was null and void and that the sale held in execution of the decree in the Small Cause Suit No. 658 of 1917, was also null and void. The grounds on which this declaration was asked for, were that those concerned in the sale, the judgment-debtor Alamelu and the purchaser, her brother, 3rd defendant, had combined in a fraud, the main element of which was the allowing O.S. No. 734 of 1917 to be brought and decreed collusively, that decree being in force at the time of the Court sale and deterring possible bidders, but being set aside again collusively later, the cloud on the title to the properties sold being thus removed from it in the interests of the 3rd defendant.

The first objection and the objection mainly considered by the lower Courts is that this fraud should have been brought before the Court by a petition under O. XXI r. 90, Sch. 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the setting aside of the Court sale on the ground of fraud in publishing or conducting it. We cannot follow this. The fraud alleged was constituted by the collusion which enabled the decree in O. S. No. 734 to be passed and set aside. The publication,—for no separate argument has been addressed to us as regards the conduct of the sale,—consisted for the present purpose in the settlement of the terms of the sale proclamation. In that settlement, we have not been shown that any term was included in the sale proclamation which was not literally in accordance with fact. The proclamation contains a reference to the charge imposed by the decree in O. S. No. 734. It further contains a reference to the objection of the decree-holder (now 1st defendant), at whose instance the proclamation was being issued, to the previous decree as fraudulent. It is difficult to say what more could have been included in the proclamation; and in any case we should be unable to hold that the judgment debtor, the 2nd defendant, has been shown to be responsible for that part of the proclamation. In these circumstances, we agree with the Lower Appellate Court that a petition under O. XXI, R. 90, was not the plaintiffs' proper remedy, and that a suit was open to them.

It is next urged that, even if the fraud alleged in the plaint is established, it will not be a ground on which the sale can be set aside. We postpone discussion of that contention, until we have before us the result of the remand, which we are about to direct in order to obtain a finding of fact as to the fraud, if any, which is proved.

There is, in our opinion, no doubt that there was evidence before the lower Courts on which fraud could be found. It was proved that O. S. No. 734 had been brought against the present 2nd defendant, that a decree had been passed against her property but that it had been set aside on her objection, and that, when the trial on the merits was resumed, the then plaintiffs, now represented by defendants 4 and 5 allowed the suit to be dismissed without adducing any evidence. There was next some evidence, which, if believed, would show that the 2nd defendant and also the plaintiffs in O.S. No. 734 had at one time or other admitted to the present plaintiffs the collusive nature of that litigation. It is not necessary to go further into the materials available to support the finding of fact since what has been mentioned affords evidence, on which, if it is believed, such a finding can be based.

There being then a case of fraud for the consideration of the lower Courts, it is urged next that the lower Appellate Court has not considered that case judicially. This argument is based on the insufficiency of the judgment under appeal on this point. That judgment in fact is occupied mainly with the question of the application of O. XXI, r. 90. That may be the case, because the appellant in the lower Appellate Court was the 1st plaintiff and he would primarily be concerned with the only point, on which the District Munsif has decided against him. At the same time, it is not suggested that an attempt was made by the 3rd defendant to support the District Munsif's decree on the facts and to obtain a decision that no fraud has been established. The lower Appellate Court dealt with the question of fraud in its paragraph 12 and 13 ; but, paragraph 12, except for a statement that there was fraud undoubtedly by the persons who colluded together for a sham decree, is occupied with the distinction between fraud in the publication of the sale and the other description of fraud for which there may be a remedy otherwise than by a petition. In paragraph 13 alone is there any discussion of the question with which we are now dealing. That discussion consists in a reference to the finding of the District Munsif that the 3rd defendant, the auction-purchaser, was a party to the fraud : and the statement of the lower Appellate Court that it is in agreement therewith. There is then a statement that the 3rd defendant was helping the decree-debtor in her litigation and he knew the decree was a fraudulent decree. The lower Appellate Court, however, does not seem to have considered whether his helping her would be necessarily conclusive as to his participation in the fraud she might have committed. Lastly, there is an inference drawn that the 3rd defendant was instrumental in getting the decree passed. Here, again, there is nothing referred to, to show that he was an instrument, and that he was conscious of the full implication of what he was doing. There the discussion of the evidence of fraud in fact ends. It is undesirable that we should attempt to carry it further. We will, therefore, observe only that neither the lower Appellate Court nor the District Munsif appears to have recognised the extent to which the absence of evidence of any connection between the plaintiffs in O. S. No. 734 and either the 2nd or the 3rd defendant was material to the argument that collusion, in which all were concerned, had been established.

We may point out further that the District Munsif's finding as to the value of the property sold and the insufficiency of the price realised is too general to be of any use and we can hardly believe that the District Judge, if he had really applied his mind to that portion of the case, would not have been able to reach a more definite conclusion founded on definite reasons.

That being so, we are unable to accept the lower Appellate Court's finding on the question of fraud. We must, therefore, call on it to submit a revised finding on the second issue framed by the District Munsif, "Is the Court-sale vitiated by fraud as alleged by the plaintiffs?" In dealing with that issue we think it advisable to authorise the lower Appellate Court to exercise the same power with reference to calling for evidence as it would have been able to exercise at the original hearing of the appeal.

Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar, on behalf of the appellant, has drawn our attention to the fact that the plaintiffs who represented themselves and defendants 6 to 17 and other creditors entitled to share in the rateable distribution were entitled to share in the proceeds of the sale, which the plaintiffs are now attempting to set aside. Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar tells us that they have in fact taken shares in such proceeds out of Court. On the other side, however, there is no information as to whether this is so. In the circumstances, we must ask the lower Appellate Court to report whether the proceeds of the sale have been taken out of the Court by all or any of the creditors entitled to share in the rateable distribution. If they have done so, the importance of the fact lies in the absence of any offer in the plaint or elsewhere on their part to refund what they have drawn in case they obtained the relief they claimed. It is clear to us that they cannot obtain that relief except on making such an offer : in other words, they cannot have equity, unless they do equity. We refer to the point now, because, if Mr. Sitarama Rao on behalf of the 1st respondent is to maintain the decree he has obtained, he will have to satisfy us regarding it and, unless he can do so, he will have to make some offer to return what has been received, either by amending the plaint or otherwise, which we can accept.

The finding is due in two months and seven days will be allowed for objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Judge of South Arcot submitted, along with a letter dated the 6th April 1923, the following.

FINDING :—A certain house belonging to one Alamelu was sold in Court auction on foot of a simple money decree against her obtained in Small Cause Suit No. 658 of 1917. Alamelu's husband had bought the house in 1914 from one Mangalathammal. On the 11th of October 1917 the terms of the sale proclamation in the Small Cause Suit execution proceedings were settled in open Court and the sale was fixed to take place on the 15th of November 1917. Meanwhile, on the 17th of October six days after the sale proclamation, Mangalathammal's sons filed a suit O. S. No. 734 for a declaration that some of the purchase money had never been paid to her and for an order that this should be a first charge on the house when it came to be sold in Court auction. Alamelu did not appear to defend this suit, and the claimants obtained a decree on the 10th of November five days before the Court sale, and at once applied to the Court that the charge established in their favour by the decree should be notified at the sale. The amount was Rs. 850. This was done, with a rider, however, that the decree-holder in S. C. No. 658 contended that the said charge was illusory. The house was knocked down on 15th November 1917 for Rs. 1,225 and the purchaser was no other than Alamelu's brother by name Venkatarama Ayyar. On the 8th of December Alamelu applied to have the ex-parte decree set aside, saying she had no notice of the suit and had a very good defence. The Court before passing orders on her application directed her to file her statement and her documents and this was done on the 21st of December. On 29th January 1918 the ex-parte decree was set aside after practically no opposition and on 19th February 1918 at the re-hearing of the suit the plaintiffs, Mangalathammal's sons, allowed it to be dismissed.

2. Then there was the suit out of which this appeal and second appeal arise. Alamelu had many creditors who had obtained decrees against her and were entitled to rateable distribution of the proceeds of the sale. Some of them are the plaintiffs. They sued Alamelu and her brother Venkatarama Ayyar and Mangalathammal's sons and the decree-holder in the Small Cause Suit, and they joined as party defendants those remaining creditors of Alamelu who did not join as plaintiffs. The grounds of the suit were that the whole of the proceedings in O. S. No 734 were collusive and fraudulent, merely directed towards the obtaining of a sham decree, and the creating of a sham charge which might be notified at the Court sale so as to cheapen the house, which, though worth Rs. 3,000, was knocked down for

Rs. 1,225 and bought by Alamelu's brother in the absence of bona fide competition. But relief was claimed on the special ground that the fraud lay in the sale at Court auction where the sham charge was notified. Both in the Court of first instance and in this, the first Appellate Court, it was held that there was no irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale. But while the lower Court dismissed the suit, this Court decreed it and set aside the Court sale holding that it was the means by which the fraud was consummated—a fraud designed to prevent real competition at the Court auction and so enable Alamelu Ammal's brother to buy in the house at a low price.

On Second Appeal the suit has been remanded for a finding on the issue.

"Is the Court sale vitiated by fraud as alleged by the plaintiffs?"

* * * *

I find, therefore, on the remanded issue that the whole proceedings in O. S. No. 734 were collusive and the Court sale was vitiated by fraud inasmuch as the charge then proclaimed to exist on the property was merely the creation of that fraud.

* * * *

In conclusion, therefore, I find that the proclamation of this charge at the time of sale was the result of fraud and collusion, to get the property sold below its value, and that this design succeeded.

This Second Appeal coming on for a final hearing after the return of the finding from the lower Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT:-- The finding that the sale is vitiated by fraud is not objected to and we accept it. It is then suggested that as only one creditor has made an offer to restore the money obtained by them, the offer should not be accepted. Inasmuch as the one creditor has undertaken the responsibility of all the creditors, we see no force in the contention.

MATHURABAI v. LALSINGH

The Second Appeal is accordingly dismissed and the lower Appellate Court's decree confirmed, and we further order that the re-sale be held subject to the conditions agreed to by the 1st respondent in his memo. dated 31st March 1923, the amount to be charged on the property being the sale price plus the amount paid in discharge of the mortgage. Appellant will pay 1st respondent's costs of this appeal.

Appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, dated 12th January 1923, in Civil Appeal No. 142 of 1922.

Mr. M. R. Bobde for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT:—This appeal seems to be concluded by the concurrent findings of fact arrived at by the Courts below. The plaintiff sues upon the basis of a sale-deed, dated 18th April 1901 for recovery of possession of certain property alleging possession and dispossession by defendant No. 1. The defendants' contention was that the sale deed was bogus and without consideration and that plaintiff and defendant No. 2 or their predecessors were never in possession of the field and that the suit was time barred. Reliance was placed upon the circumstance that at a partition made in 1909 in the family of plaintiff and defendant No. 2 the field in suit was not included in it because it never belonged to them. The first Court framed the following issues:—

1. Whether the sale-deed of 18th April 1901 was executed by defendant 1 and Damayanti under the circumstances alleged in para. 3 of defendant 1's written statement?
2. Is it not a genuine transaction?
3. Whether plaintiff and defendant 2 or their ancestors were in possession of the property in suit within 12 years of the suit?
4. Whether defendant 1 has been in continuous and exclusive and adverse possession of it for over 12 years?
5. Is plaintiff's claim barred by limitation?
6. Whether plaintiff and defendant 2 entered into a partition on 14th June 1921 and did plaintiff get half share in the field in suit by virtue of it?
7. What was the effect of the first partition deed of 1909 on plaintiff's claim?
8. Is defendant 2 estopped from denying title to the field and going back on the partition deed of 1921?
9. Is defendant 1 estopped from setting up a title to the field in suit by reason of having successfully carried out a fraud?

2. The Court of first instance held that the sale-deed was executed by defendant No. 1 but not under circumstances alleged by defendant No. 1; that the sale-deed was not proved to be bogus; that defendant No. 1 was estopped from setting up a title to the field; that in the Record of Rights of 1912 defendant No. 2 was recorded as owner and that plaintiff and defendant No. 2 were in possession of the field within 12 years of the suit; that the defendant No. 1 failed to prove that he was in continuous, exclusive and adverse possession for over 12 years. The plaintiff was given a decree for joint possession to the extent of half share of the field in suit. Before the Court of the District Judge defendant No. 1 alone appealed. Defendant No. 2 who supported the defence of defendant No. 1 in the first Court was made a co-respondent. The Appellate Court formulated the points for determination and proceeded to decide them and arrived at the following findings. It held that the sale-deed was not bogus and that the claim was not barred by limitation and dismissed the appeal.

In the appeal before me the learned pleader for the appellant contests the finding as to the reality of the sale on the ground that the Courts below did not give ample consideration to the presumption arising from the fact that the sale-deed on which the plaintiff's title is based was produced from the vendor's custody and that, consequently, the view as to the burden of proof taken by the lower Appellate Court was erroneous. A perusal of the judgment under appeal clearly shows that the Court below has not ignored this circumstance. It has been held to have been sufficiently explained by the respondent in view of the evident collusion between the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The fact that defendant No. 2 has adopted the defence of the defendant No. 1 in this case is, to my mind, the best indication of such collusion. I do not, therefore, see any reason to think that the lower Court's finding is in any way vitiated for the reasons alleged by the appellant. This disposes of grounds 1 to 3.

*The point raised in ground No. 4, namely, the omission to include the field in suit in the partition of 1909, is amply met by the remarks in paragraph 2 of the lower Appellate Court's judgment that it was possible that it was kept joint and not divided at the partition. I think this inference of the Court was correct. Even if the Court below had drawn the inference that it was omitted from the partition because it did not belong to the parties, that inference also was possible and I would have been precluded from interfering with it. The mere fact that a Court of appeal draws one of two possible inferences on a question of fact does not entitle the second appellate Court to interfere with the finding based upon such inference. It is only when only one legal inference is possible and that has not been drawn that the second appellate Court might interfere, but it is not the case here : Cf. Rajaram v. Ganesh Hari Karkhanis (1). This disposes of grounds 4 and 5.

As regards the questions raised in grounds 6 and 7, suffice it to say that even some of the documents filed by defendants do prove possession of vendee or his successors in title. I am not prepared to accede to the argument that the entry in the Record of Rights of the year 1912 was made without reference to the fact of possession as urged by the appellant. The continuity of possession of the vendor, if any, was broken by this entry which I presume was based upon previous possession of the vendee, and the defendant No. 1 could not be said to have acquired any title by adverse possession to the property in suit. There is a finding of fact that the property in suit was in the possession of vendee within 12 years of the date of institution of the suit. In view of this finding there is no force in the question of limitation raised in ground No. 8. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed without notice to the respondents. Costs will be borne by the appellant.

Adverse possession—Co-sharers—Overt act—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (1) (a)—Deed of surrender without consideration, nature of—Registration, whether necessary.

A document whereby rights in immoveable property are surrendered without any consideration is in effect a deed of gift which requires registration under section 17 (1) (a) of the Registration Act. [p. 114, col. 2]

The possession of one co-sharer is ordinarily the possession of all co-sharers; but the co-sharer in possession can convert his possession into adverse possession by an overt act showing unequivocally to the co-sharers that in future he intends to hold for himself alone. This adverse possession so begun cannot be stopped by the other co-sharers, merely by affirmations that they are co-sharers or by mere applications for partition. It is the business of those co-sharers, within limitation, actually and effectually to assert their rights and to break up the usurper's exclusive possession. [p. 115 col. 1]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 14th November 1922, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Ambala, dated the 11th March 1922, and dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs in his Court.

Mr. K. J. Rustonji, for the Appellants.

Mr. Devi Dyal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, Hira Singh and Mangal Singh, sued for possession of one-fourth share in a holding of 13 bighas, 6 biswas. Their suit was dismissed by the trial Court, and the decision was upheld in appeal by the District Judge.

The following pedigree-table illustrates the situation :—

The estate in question was recorded in 1852 as held by Jaswa and Ram Singh in equal shares. When Ram Singh died, his widow Musammat Kahno married Jaswa, but there was no issue of this second marriage. After Jaswa died the estate was recorded as owned half by the defendants and half by Musammat Kahno as widow of Jaswa. Musammat Kahno died on the 24th December 1895, and then apparently the plaintiffs claimed to succeed to half of Jaswa's estate, but on the 22nd May 1896 they executed a document by which they surrendered their rights in favour of the defendants on the ground that the latter were the sons of Musammat Kahno. On the 10th of July 1896 mutation of one-fourth share in the joint holding was sanctioned in favour of the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs have continued to be shown as owners of that share ever since. In 1897, however, the defendants got a mutation entered up for the removal of plaintiffs' names, and sanction was refused on the 25th of December 1897. In connection with this mutation it was held by the learned District Judge that the defendants formally asserted their ownership of the whole land before the Revenue Officer and in the presence of the plaintiffs.

The findings of the learned District Judge are as follows :—The plaintiffs held possession, or at least constructive possession, as share-holders from the death of Musammat Kahno up to the date of execution of the document of the 22nd May 1896. This document was a valid agreement admissible in evidence and extinguished the plaintiffs' claim to inherit a share in the estate in suit. Nevertheless, mutation was made in the plaintiffs' favour but they were never in actual cultivating possession of any portion of the holding. On several occasions they paid to Government the land revenue of the land, although the defendants never at any time paid them any rent. In 1897 the defendants made the formal assertion already referred to.

The plaintiffs have come to this Court on second appeal. It is urged, in the first place, that the document of the 22nd May 1896 was not admissible in evidence since it was not registered and registration was compulsory. I agree with this contention. I have seen the document and, according to its terms, there was no consideration received by the plaintiffs, and the deed was in effect a deed of gift which, under section 17 (1) (a) of the Indian Registration Act, required registration.

Secondly, it is urged that since there is a finding that the plaintiffs paid land revenue, the defendants cannot claim to have been in adverse possession. In regard to this, no dates are given by the learned District Judge on which payments of land revenue were made, but the sums were exceedingly small, Rs. 1-8-11 on each occasion, and even if pay ments were made, there appears to be no evidence of the circumstances in which they were made. It is not shown that the defendants were aware of the payments or that they acquiesced in their being made.

The suit was instituted on the 16th of April 1917. It has been laid down in Akbar v. Tabu (1) that "the possession of one co-sharer is ordinarily the possession of all the co-sharers; but the co-sharer in possession can convert his possession into adverse possession by an overt act showing unequivocally to the co-sharers that in future he intends to hold for himself alone. This adverse possession so begun cannot be stopped by the other co-sharers, merely by affirmations that they are co-sharers or by mere applications for partition. It is the business of those co-sharers, within limitation, actually and effectually to assert their rights and to break up the usurper's exclusive possession."

In the present case the defendants, according to the finding of the learned District Judge, by an overt act showed unequivocally to the plaintiffs in 1897 that they intended to hold for themselves alone. The Refusal of the revenue Officer to sanction mutation cannot affect that declaration, and there being no details available of how the payments of land revenue by the plaintiffs came to be made these cannot be construed to be more than mere affirmations by the plaintiffs that they were co-sharers. They did not, within limitation, take any effectual step to assert their rights, and in my opinion their suit is clearly barred by time and was rightly dismissed.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Shahjahanpur, dated the 7th April 1922.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Appellants.Mr. Durga Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is concerned with the title to a plot of land 1.38 acres in area bearing a rent of Rs. 25. It raises points of difficulty. This much appears to be clear. Bazmir Khan, the father of Fazal Muhammad Khan, defendant-respondent, sold at some time prior to 1895 a one-third share in the village of Udaiपुर Bhura, Shahjahanpur district, to Khub Chand, the father of Lalman, plaintiff-appellant. In this share was a field which was formerly numbered $\frac{558}{1}$. The number was changed to 613 at some time prior to 1895. This has been subsequently sub-divided into two numbers $\frac{613}{1}$ and $\frac{613}{2}$ and is the plot of 1 and area 1.38 acres which is now in dispute. In 1825 there was a partition in the village and on a finding of the learned District Judge this No. 613 was at the time of the partition allotted to Bazmir Khan. Although Bazmir Khan had sold a portion of his zemindary he had retained the remainder and his son Fazal Muhammad Khan is still a zemindar in the village and is also the lambardar. The real difficulty in this case is to decide whether this No. 613 passed from Bazmir Khan to Khub Chand. There can be no presumptions in the matter. It may have passed or it may not have passed. The entries in the papers although affording information are never likely to afford absolutely reliable information, in matters such as these. There is evidence which the learned District Judge has accepted as correct that in the partition of 1895 No. 613 was handed over to Bazmir Khan. This evidence is contained in a certified copy, Ex. B., of a portion of the partition proceedings but it would appear, though I am not quite clear on the point, that the whole partition record was before the Assistant Collector and before the learned District Judge. It is, however, to be noted that this entry which clearly declares that No. 613 was left with Bazmir Khan with the consent of Lalman, Khub Chand then being dead, states the area of No. 613 as '85 of an acre instead of as it is 1.34. There can, however, be no doubt as to the fact that this entry affords evidence on which a Judge could arrive at a finding of fact.

It appears that in the Settlement of 1897-98 No. 613 was recorded as Lalman's sir. Bazmir Khan applied in 1903 to the Assistant Collector to alter that entry and to enter the number as in his possession as sir. That application was made under section 40 of Local Act III of 1901. The Assistant Collector refused to alter the entry. He based his decision upon a Kanungo's report. He heard no evidence on the subject. It must be noted that under section 40 decision must be made on the point of possession if that point can be decided. The Kanungo found that Lalman was in possession. It is true he went into a point which was unnecessary for decision that Lalman was also entitled to the number. Reading section 40 it will, however appear that where the Revenue authorities can find, as they found here, that a certain person is in possession the entry must be made on the basis of possession and the question can be re-opened upon a basis of title in either a Civil or a Revenue Court. Bazmir Khan appealed to the Collector who upheld the Assistant Collector's order. The Collector's order was, however, no more than a decision as to possession.

Although the order was that Lalman was in possession and Bazmir Khan was not in possession the plaintiffs' allegation is that Bazmir Khan and after him his son Fazal Muhammad Khan has remained in possession, for the present suit is a suit under section 58 of Local Act II of 1901 for the ejectment of Fazal Muhammad Khan from this field on the finding that he is a tenant without occupancy rights. Now, it appears that the actual cultivator is a man called Munna. Fazal Muhammad Khan contested on the ground that he was actually the proprietor of the plot. Munna stated that he held the land from Fazal Muhammad Khan. The Assistant Collector decided upon the basis of the entries in the Settlement and the orders of 1903 that the plaintiff was the proprietor and that there was a tenancy between him and Fazal Muhammad Khan. So he ordered the ejectment of both defendants. The learned District Judge has found on the merits that Fazal Muhammad Khan is the proprietor of the plot. I have no doubt as to the point that, if the question was open to the learned District Judge for decision, his finding is a finding of fact which cannot be disturbed in second appeal. He further found that no relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the plaintiffs and Fazal Muhammad Khan. The latter finding is also a finding of fact. The point argued before me on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants is that it was not open to the District Judge to arrive at any such finding and section 44, Local Act III of 1901 is relied on in this connection. Section 44 lays down that certain decisions under sections 40, 41 and 42 shall be binding on all Revenue Courts in respect of the 'subject-matter of the dispute. But there has been no decision under sections 40, 41 and 42 in reference to the property in dispute. It is further argued that the decisions of 1903 operate as res judicata. Under the provisions of section 40 they cannot operate as res judicata to prevent the Judge arriving at the conclusion at which he did, for they clearly refer only to possession in 1903 a matter with which we are not concerned in the present case. I find that it was open to the learned District Judge to arrive at the finding at which he did, that he was not precluded either by the provisions of the Revenue or the Rent Acts or by the law of res judicata from arriving at that finding and the finding is one which cannot be disturbed in second appeal. It is really a question of fact as to who succeeded to the plot. The entry in the Settlement to the effect that the plot is Lalman's Sir is not binding in any way. I agree with the views taken by the Board of Revenue in Mahesh Prasad v. Lala Radhika Prasad (1) and Pem Raj v. Ram Kishen (2), that where land has been recorded as Sir at the last Settlement and has been continuously so recorded since, the correctness of the entry of the land as Sir at the Settlement is, under section 57, Act III of 1901, open to disproof.

I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) s. 109, O. XLI, r. 28—Suit dismissed on preliminary point—Remand for further hearing—Order, whether final—Leave to Appeal to Privy Council.

A suit for the removal of the defendant from the office of Shebait and for an account of his dealings with the trust funds was dismissed by the trial Court on the ground that the plaintiffs had no locus standi to sue. On appeal, the High Court, holding that the plaintiffs had a prima facie interest in the subject-matter of the suit, remanded the case for further hearing :

Held, (1) that the order of the High Court was of a merely interlocutory character, no final decision having been arrived at as to the relative position of the parties or as to the liability of the defendant to render accounts to the plaintiffs ;

(2) that the order was not, therefore, a final order within the meaning of section 109 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitra and Babu Debendra Nath Mandal, for the Opposite party.

JUDGMENT.

Richardson, J.—This is an application on behalf of the defendant in the suit for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the judgment and order of the High Court, dated the 20th June 1923, and the question is whether the order is or is not a final order within the meaning of section 109 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The plaintiffs and the principal defendant are brothers. The latter, the eldest brother, is the Shebait of certain debutter properties. The plaintiffs make certain charges against him and seek to remove him from his office and to force him to account for his dealings with the trust funds.

The learned Subordinate Judge in the trial Court dismissed the suit not on the merits, but on the preliminary point that the plaintiffs have no locus standi to sue. The High Court reversed the decree of dismissal and remanded the suit for further hearing.

The order of the High Court appears to be a mere order of remand made under Order XLI, rule XXIII of the Code of Civil Procedure, and, if, so, it is an order of an interlocutory and not of a final character. It is said that the learned Judges of this Court have finally decided that the plaintiffs have a locus standi to sue, but, as I understand the judgment, all that the learned Judges have decided is that the plaintiffs have prima facie sufficient interest to entitle them to an investigation or a fuller investigation of the case which they make, and that the facts have not been sufficiently ascertained to justify the dismissal of the suit on the preliminary point of locus standi, whatever may be the precise meaning of that expression.

So far as I can see, no final decision has as yet been arrived at as to the relative position of the principal parties or as to the liability of the defendant to render accounts to the plaintiffs. In my opinion the application should be refused with costs, 5 gold mohurs.

Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff's story is that field No. 7 of Mouza Nagalwadi belonged to Punjaji who had acquired the said field after a partition between himself and his brother Ramji had taken place. Punjaji is the father of plaintiff No. 1. Ramji's widow Mt. Bawalai mortgaged half the field to the defendant and the defendant took symbolical possession in 1917 of it through Court. Plaintiffs ask for a declaration that the field belongs to them and for an injunction preventing the defendants from interfering with their possession. Both the Courts below have decreed the plaintiff's claim.

It so happened that Bawalai who was sued by the plaintiff on her mortgage-deed died during the pendency of the suit, and the reversioners as her legal representatives were brought on record. Among them was the first plaintiff. It is contended that as the decree was passed against him in that suit, the question between him and the plaintiff as regards the ownership of the half field is res judicata. Now, it seems to me that there are two cases of this Court which conclude the matter, viz., Hanuman Singh v. Manulal (1) and Laxmi Narayan Ram Narayan v. Vithoba. (2) There it is enunciated that if a person joined as defendant in a mortgage suit has a title paramount to that of the mortgagor he is not bound to set up such a title by way of defence to the mortgage suit, and his omission to do so will not, therefore, render the question of his title res judicata against him.

For this reason I dismiss the appeal with costs. The appellant will bear the respondents' costs.

and accounts—Plaintiff not party to deed—Valuation—Suit for removal of several trustees—Removal of each trustee, whether separate relief.

A suit praying for the cancellation of a Samudayam deed to which the plaintiff is not a party is in substance a suit for a declaration that the deed is not binding on the Devaswom and if an injunction and accounts are also asked as reliefs consequential on such a declaration the suit comes under s. 7, cl. IV (c) of the Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), and the recently added proviso to the section does not affect the case, inasmuch as the Samudayam deed does not create any charge on immoveable property. In such a case the plaintiff is entitled to place his own valuation on the reliefs claimed but the valuation must be the same for purposes of Court-fee and jurisdiction.

A suit for the removal of several trustees on the ground of their having executed an illegal document on behalf of the Devaswom is governed by Art. 17 (B) of Schedule II of the Court-Fees Act, as amended by Madras Act X of 1922, but the removal of each trustee is not a separate relief and only one fee of Rs. 100 is leviable since the ground for removal, namely, the execution of the deed, is the same in the case of each and the removal of each is not a separate relief.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tellicherry, in O. S. No. 33 of 1922, dated the 5th January 1923.

The Advocate-General (Mr. C. Madhavan Nair) and Mr. T. S. Viswanathu Iyer, for the Appellant.

Messrs. C. V. Anantha Krishna Aiyar and V. P. Karunakaran Nambiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal relates to a question of Court-fees on the plaint. The Sub-Judge has found that the first relief prayed for is the cancellation of the plaint Samudayam deed, but in this he is clearly wrong, for plaintiff is not a party to the deed and merely wants a declaration that the deed is not binding on the Devaswom. For authority we may refer to Unni v. Kunchiamma (1), Ramaswamy Nadan v. Subramania Nadan (2) Chappan v. Paru (3) and respondents' Vakil does not seriously dispute this conclusion.

Plaintiff also asks for an injunction and accounts as reliefs consequential on this declaration.

His suit in respect of these reliefs comes under section 7, iv, (c), The Court-Fees Act, 1870, and the recently added proviso to the section does not affect the case, for we are satisfied that the Samudayam deed does not create any charge on immoveable property. Plaintiff is entitled to place his own valuation on these reliefs which he has done, but he has made the mistake of giving one value for purposes of jurisdiction and another value for Court fee valuation and this must be corrected. Further reliefs asked in the plaint are the removal of eight trustees and a declaration that 13th defendant is unfit to succeed his Karnavan as trustee. Art. 17 B. of Schedule II of the Court-Fees Act, as amended (Act V of 1922) is applicable to the former relief but we think that the Sub-judge was wrong in asking for a separate fee of Rs. 100 for each of the 8 trustees, for the ground for removal is the same in the case of each, i.e., the execution of the Samudayam deed, and we do not think that the removal of each trustee can be treated as a separate relief. The declaration in respect to 13th defendant and appointment of plaintiff comes under Art. 17-B. also and the fee is Rs. 100. Plaintiff is, therefore, liable to pay two separate fees of Rs. 100 each and an ad valorem fee on the declared value of the first declaration above-mentioned and the consequential reliefs. Plaintiff's valuation of Rs. 185 may be accepted.

As regards the valuation of the relief in regard to the trustees we think that plaintiff should retain the original value of his suit for purposes of jurisdiction and, therefore, the value of the two reliefs combined must be taken as Rs. 9,815.

The costs of this appeal will be the costs in the suit. Plaintiff will, therefore, be allowed to amend his valuation in the plaint as ordered above, and the suit will be remanded for disposal according to law. The stamp on this Memo. of Appeal will be refunded.

The balance of fee due on the plaint must be paid within one week of receipt of records in the lower Court.

Divorce Cases—Damages—Assessment—Principles.

The damages in divorce cases are not punitive. The means of the co-respondent are an irrelevant consideration except in so far as they were of assistance to him in seducing the wife. It is not the intention that a man should make a profit out of the dishonour of his wife. The only question is what the petitioner has lost in his wife—whether the co-respondent can pay that loss or not is immaterial. When damages have been assessed, in the absence of an order to the contrary, they must be brought into Court and dealt with in pursuance of the Judge's order. They may be ordered to be paid out to the petitioner, but this course is the exception and not the rule. They may be settled on the wife, or on her children, or otherwise dealt with in the discretion of the Court, on now well established principles. [p. 121, Cal. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

The Chief Justice.—In this Divorce case the petitioner and the co-respondent are both engine-drivers. The trial Judge has found the respondent guilty of adultery on the evidence of her having given birth to a child over a year after leaving the petitioner, and granted a decree of divorce. He has exonerated the co-respondent from the charges of adultery brought against him and dismissed him from the suit with costs. The petitioner asks that the decree be confirmed and appeals against the exoneration of the co-respondent and asks for damages and costs against him. There was a considerable body of evidence against the co-respondent on which the trial Judge refused to act, although he did in the course of his judgment say that in course of time the intimacy between the respondent and the co-respondent appeared to have overstepped the bounds of decency. There was fairly direct evidence of adultery given by the petitioner's mother and son, and this the Judge definitely disbelieved though, in my view, on inadequate grounds. There was also a considerable body of other evidence directed to show inclination to find opportunity for adultery,—acts of familiarity between the two, circumstances under which they were alone together when adultery may have taken place, constant association between the two, meetings arranged at out-of-the way places, and the like. To this must be added the admitted fact that the respondent gave birth to an illegitimate child, and no evidence or suggestion of any other person being the father was given, and the somewhat curious denials given on oath by the respondent and the co-respondent themselves. She gave no denial in examination-in-chief, but in answer to the co-respondent said :

"The co-respondent had nothing to do with me sexually. I have my own resources and live on them :"

and he said

"I never did anything to make the respondent misbehave or leave her husband," and "I had no indecent relationship with the respondent when she was at Madura," and nothing else on the subject. Now, it was definitely alleged that they had for some time been living together in the co-respondent's house. His answer was that his sister and others were living there and that the respondent was a friend of the sister ; but no evidence was called to corroborate this. Indeed, the respondent devoted attention mainly to proving ill-treatment by the petitioner, and neither seems to have taken much trouble to disprove the adultery alleged. It is possible that this was partly due to expressions that fell from the Judge indicating that he was not satisfied with the petitioner's case. On the evidence there was an overwhelming case against the co-respondent and, loth as I am to disagree with the trial Judge's findings of fact, the reasons he gives for disbelieving the evidence are so unconvincing, that I think we must reverse his decision and find the co-respondent guilty.

DAULA v. DWARKA PAL

There remains the question of damages. The damages in divorce are not punitive. The means of the co-respondent are an irrelevant consideration except in so far as they were of assistance to him in seducing the wife. It is not the intention that a man should make a profit out of the dishonour of his wife. The only question is what the petitioner has lost in his wife—whether the co-respondent can pay that loss or not is immaterial. When damages have been assessed, in the absence of an order to the contrary, they must be brought into Court and dealt with in pursuance of the Judge's order. They may be ordered to be paid out to the petitioner, but this course is the exception and not the rule. They may be settled on the wife or on her children, or otherwise dealt with in the discretion of the Court, on now well established principles.

In this case I doubt if the petitioner has lost anything by the act of the co-respondent. The home was clearly an unhappy one owing to the incompatibility between the wife and the husband and the husband's mother. The wife took little or no part in looking after the petitioner's house or his comfort; and he derived little pleasure from her society. She left him long before he commenced proceedings, and it is not proved that the co-respondent in any way persuaded her thereto. She was of easy virtue and of a gregarious and pleasure-loving disposition. There were no children of the marriage to be provided for or the burden of whose up-bringing has been left to the deserted husband. The husband has no doubt been put to some expense in having his marriage dissolved. I do not accept his statement that he has injured his prospects with his Railway Company owing to the co-respondent's association with his wife, and I can find no other element of damages present. He will get his costs here and below and Rs 100, to cover any loss he has suffered.

The decree is confirmed as regards divorce, but varied by finding the co-respondent guilty of adultery with the respondent. The appeal will be allowed with costs here and below against the co-respondent. The costs of the co-respondent, if paid, must be returned and the co-respondent must pay Rs. 100 as damages, such damages to be paid to the petitioner.

Coutts-Trotter, J.—I agree and have nothing to add.

Ramesam, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXIII, r. 1—Withdrawal of suit—Formal defect—Failure to give evidence—Discretion of Court—Revision.

Where an order under O. XXIII, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code is passed without the conditions laid down in the rule being complied with, the order is without jurisdiction and may be made the subject of revision. [p. 122, col. 2.]

Kali Prasanna Sil v. Panchanan Nandi Chowdhry, 88 Ind. Cas. 670; 44 C. 367; 23 C. L. J. 489; 20 C. W. N. 1000; Mirza Muhammad Askari v. Lala, 45 Ind. Cas. 594; 21 O. C. 68 relied on.

Where, however, the Trial Court has exercised a judicial discretion in allowing the suit to be withdrawn, the High Court will not interfere in revision. The Trial Court cannot be said to have exercised a judicial discretion where it has misunderstood the nature of the conditions laid down in O. XXIII, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 122, Col. 2.]

The failure of a plaintiff to adduce evidence to identify the property in dispute as belonging to himself is not a "formal defect" within the meaning of O. XXIII, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, so as to justify the Court in granting leave to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. [p. 122, col. 2].

Application against an order of the Munsif, Utranla, dated the 13th July, 1923.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision against an order of the Munsif, Utranla, permitting the plaintiffs to withdraw their suit under O. XXIII, r. 1 on account of an alleged formal defect with permission to bring a fresh suit. The suit was one for the possession of four plots of land. The plots of land are described in detail in the plaint, both the present Survey numbers and the former Settlement numbers alleged to correspond to them being given. The plaintiffs also filed with their plaint a map showing exactly the position of the land which they claimed. The parties entered into evidence and a Commissioner was appointed by the Court to prepare a map on the spot and determine by measurement whether the disputed area formed a part of the plaintiffs' land or the defendants. The Commissioner reported that, according to the recent Survey, the land in dispute clearly formed part of the defendants' fields. He went on to say that there was some difference between the recent Survey and the Settlement map of 1900 and that, according to that map, that part of the disputed area which was now included in plot No. 844 corresponded to old No. 1067 which belonged to the plaintiffs. There was some difference also as regards the remaining numbers but the Settlement map shown to him by the plaintiffs was too torn and old to enable him to draw a correct map of the plots in accordance with it. The evidence on both sides was concluded. Arguments were heard and the learned Munsif was prepared to write his judgment. Apparently he found some difficulty in deciding on the evidence to which party the land really belonged, and he thereupon called up the pleaders of the parties and asked the plaintiffs' pleader to explain the difficulty. The plaintiffs' pleader was unable to do so but, instead, filed an application stating that there was some "legal defect" on account of which the suit must fail, namely, that a mistake had occurred in the specification of numbers and, therefore, even on taking out the decree the plaintiff will be unable to take execution. The learned Munsif accepted this application and passed an order allowing a withdrawal with liberty to bring a fresh suit.

It is quite clear from a perusal of the record that there was no formal defect of the kind contemplated by O. XXIII, r. 1. The only defect that can be suggested is that the plaintiffs have failed to give sufficient evidence to identify the land in dispute with the plots which they claim as their own. There was no doubt whatever in the mind of the Commissioner appointed by the Court as to what the area in dispute actually was. The only difficulty he found arose from the difference between the two maps and the imperfection of the map produced by the plaintiffs. This difficulty might have been removed by procuring a more complete copy of the Settlement map. It is well established that, if an order under O. XXIII, r. 1, is passed without the conditions required by the section being complied with, the order is without jurisdiction and may be made the subject of revision. I need only refer to Kali Prasanna Sil v. Panchanan Nandi Chowdhury (1). Mirza Muhammad Askari v. Lalu (2). The respondents have referred me to certain cases in which it was quite rightly held that, where a Court below has exercised a judicial discretion, the High Court will not interfere in revision. Here, it appears to me, the learned Munsif has misunderstood the nature of the term 'formal defect' used in O. XIII, r. 1, and that the real ground on which withdrawal was sought for was that the evidence was not sufficient to identify the land in dispute with the plots belonging to the plaintiffs. I, therefore, set aside the order of the Court below and direct the learned Munsif to restore the suit to his file and dispose of it accordingly to law. The applicants will have their costs of this application. Other costs will abide the result.

Punjab Custom (Power to Contest) Act (II of 1920), ss. 5, 6, applicability of—Suit for possession by heirs, resisted by appointed heir—Appointment of heir by female.

Section 6 of the Punjab Custom (Power to Contest) Act deals only with the case of an allegation that the appointment of an heir is contrary to custom, it has no application to a case where the plaintiff sues for possession as heir and is resisted by the defendant on the ground that he is an appointed heir. The Act has no application to the case of an appointment of an heir by a female.

Appeal under section 41 of Act XI of 1918, against the decree of the District Judge of Karnal, dated the 20th December 1922.

Mr. Jagan Nath, for the Appellants.Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Ground of appeal No. 3 in which it was contended that the lower Appellate Court erred in allowing additional evidence to be produced is not now pressed, and the only point for decision is whether the plaintiffs were debarred from suing by section 6 of Punjab Act II of 1920.

The suit concerned the land of one Ballu, deceased. Ballu's great-great-great-grand-father was Parlu and the parties to the suit are other descendants of Parlu. After the death of Ballu's widow, Mst. Jiwni, the land was mutated in the name of Richpal, defendant No. 1. The plaintiffs came into Court asserting themselves to be reversionary heirs and saying that the mutation in favour of Richpal was wrong; that Richpal claimed to have been adopted by Mst. Jiwni, widow of Ballu; that in fact he was not so adopted, and that Mst. Jiwni had no power to adopt a son. Richpal pleaded that he was adopted by

KARAMAT ALI v. HARDUWAR PANDE

Ballu before his death and both the Courts below concurred in holding that Richpal had not been adopted by Ballu.

The lower Appellate Court considered the question of whether section 6 of Act II of 1920 barred the suit and decided that it did not, because the section deals only with the case of an allegation that the appointment of an heir is contrary to custom, whereas the plaintiffs had sued for possession, as heirs, and were resisted by Richpal on the ground that he was an appointed heir. An additional reason might have been given, namely, that under section 5 of the Act nothing in the Act is to apply to any appointment of an heir by a female, and, if this suit was one by collaterals to contest the appointment of an heir, on the ground that the appointment was contrary to custom, it manifestly was a suit to contest the appointment of an heir by a female.

There is no force in this appeal and it is dismissed with costs.

Mr. E. R. Kidwai, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. N. Roy, for the Opposite party.

ORDER.—This is an application under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. I must say that the order against which this application is lodged is startling. The applicant was the plaintiff in a suit pending in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gonda exercising jurisdiction as a Small Cause Court. On the date of hearing of the suit, that is, the 28th May 1923, the plaintiff was absent but the defendant was present. The defendant denied the claim. The suit was consequently dismissed. From the 1st June to the 1st July 1923, both days inclusive, the Civil Courts in Oudh were closed for the annual vacation. On the 2nd July 1923 the plaintiff made an application, which is one of very ordinary nature and certainly an application necessitated by the circumstances of this case, for the restoration of his suit. The ground upon which he prayed for restoration was stated to be that, at the time when the case was called up for hearing, the clerk of the pleader whom the plaintiff had engaged in the case, and was in attendance in the Court-room, went to fetch the said pleader who was sitting at the precise moment when the case was called up in the rooms of the Bar Association. These facts are admitted before me as they were admitted in the Court below. Unfortunately, however, the case was disposed of before the pleader could enter the Court-room. The application for restoration has also been rejected and the application before me is intended to get the order passed by the Court below on the application for restoration reversed ; in other words, the object of this application is to seek nothing more and nothing less than the hearing of the case which the plaintiff had instituted in a Court of Justice and which, unfortunately for him, was dismissed in his default without any inquiry into the merits of his claim.

The learned Judge has expressed himself strongly in support of the view which he has taken. I fail to see any cause for the warmth which he has displayed in his judgment under consideration. The matter was one of very ordinary character and, to my mind, the reason given in the application for restoration was sufficient and should have been accepted as such by the learned Judge of the Court below. The attitude taken by him in the present case is certainly founded on the laudable object of expediting the work of his Court but I am afraid the manner in which he has tried to attain that object is calculated more to impede the work than to facilitate it. A little spirit of compromise and mutual good will go a long way towards doing justice and also towards expedition of work.

I set aside the order dated the 28th July 1923 and direct that the plaintiff's suit be restored to its original number in the register of suits and disposed of according to law. No order is made as to the costs of this application.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule has been issued on the ground that the learned Small Cause Court Judge was not justified in law in dismissing the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff's suit was filed on the 24th January 1923 and there were no less than 10 days fixed for the hearing of the suit which was postponed on the application of either party or of both. The last adjournment was on the application of the plaintiffs. On the 25th June the plaintiffs again applied for adjournment. The order was to the following effect: "Plaintiff is directed to pay Rs. 5 as costs to the defendant." On the same date, probably later in the day, the following order was passed: "No costs paid. The plaintiffs' petition is rejected. The suit is dismissed with costs." It is curious that, when the Court directed the plaintiff to pay Rs. 5 as costs, apparently for the adjournment he had prayed for, no further date was fixed for the hearing of the case. The order as it stands looks as if the Court fined the plaintiff Rs. 5, for asking for the adjournment. Be that as it may, the Court was not right in dismissing the plaintiff's petition for adjournment because he could not pay the costs on the day the order was passed. The plaintiff ought to have been given sufficient time and opportunity to produce the money. It is not expected that litigants should always come to Court with sufficient money to meet all unforeseen contingencies. In this connection, reference may be made to the case of Dhanuram Mahto v. Murali Mahto (1). There it is suggested that no doubt the Court has power under section 156 of the Code of 1882 to make orders for adjournment conditional upon payment of costs; at the same time, the Court in adjourning a case to a subsequent day should make the hearing on that day conditional upon payment of costs before that date.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute, the order of the Small Cause Court Judge dated the 25th June 1923 dismissing the plaintiff's suit for default is set aside; and it is directed that he should hear the case according to law. The opposite party has not entered appearance. The petitioner is entitled to costs. I assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

JUDGMENT.

Walmsely, J.—The plaintiff-appellant's case is as follows. In execution of a money decree against the defendants he caused land belonging to them to be sold in auction : he bought it himself and took formal possession through the agency of the Court : he failed to obtain actual possession of plots 1 and 2 and although he obtained actual possession of plot 3, he was afterwards turned out by the defendants. The defendants, in answer, pleaded that the plots formed part of their non-transferable occupancy jote, that they knew nothing of the alleged sale until the institution of the present suit, and that the sale was brought about by the suppression of notices.

There is no dispute about the nature of the jote of which the lands in suit form a part. The defendants have occupancy rights in the jote, and there is no custom sanctioning the transfer of the holding. On these admitted facts the Courts below held that the plaintiff had acquired nothing. They also held that the sale was bad, and that on that account also the plaintiff's suit could not succeed. The plaintiff in consequence lost his suit in both Courts, and it is he who prefers this appeal.

His first ground is that the lower Courts are wrong in the view they have taken about the effect of an execution sale of a non-transferable jote. The learned pleader who appears for the defendants admits this, so it is not necessary to say more on this ground.

The second ground is that the defendants ought not to have been allowed to challenge the sale in this suit inasmuch as they did not seek the remedy offered to them by O. XXI, r. 90. The right of the plaintiff, in the circumstances described, to bring a suit is beyond dispute, and the argument put forward on his behalf is that, inasmuch as the defendants did not seek the relief afforded by O. XXI, r. 90, they cannot raise objections which might have been heard and determined immediately after the sale.

The penalty imposed on a negligent judgment-debtor is set out in r. 92, and it is, that the Court shall make an order confirming the sale and thereupon the sale shall become absolute. This amounts to a judicial determination that none of the objections exist on which the validity of the sale could have been questioned.

Now, if we look at the judgments of the Courts below we find that, although the defendants pleaded ignorance of the sale and of the attempt to take possession, they did not press this point by having an issue framed upon it. They did not even, it appears, satisfy the Courts by negative evidence that the processes were suppressed. They contented themselves with showing that the plaintiff's evidence in support of the sale and of the processes leading up to it, was scanty, and that the price paid was inadequate. The learned Munsiff speaks of fraud, but the learned District Judge does not use the word, and limits his judgment to findings that the processes were not duly served, and that the price was inadequate. In other words, the findings of the final Court of fact do not go beyond the findings necessary for an order cancelling a sale under O. XXI, r. 90. It appears to me that the provisions of r. 92 preclude a judgment debtor from asking a Court in such a suit as this to go into questions which affect nothing but the regularity of the sale.

My conclusion is that the plaintiff must succeed on the second ground also, with the result that the appeal must be allowed and the suit decreed with costs in all Courts.

All such questions arising out of assignment are left out for treatment under the general law relating to contracts, transfers, estoppel and other laws including the personal law of the parties.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 64 of 1921, dated the 25th July 1921.

Mr. M. B. Marathe, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal arising out of a suit for the recovery of a balance of mortgage-debt alleged to be due to plaintiffs as the sons of the deceased co-mortgagee Akaji on the basis of a mortgage-deed dated 12th August 1902, Exhibit P-1, for a consideration of Rs. 3,500. This debt was repayable without interest by 14 annual instalments of Rs. 250 each. The mortgage deed stands in the name of Anyaji and his brother Akaji. Anyaji died in a couple of years after the mortgage, and his son Maroti took his place as a co-mortgagee. During the years 1903 to 1912 certain repayments were made by the mortgagor to one mortgagee or the other, i.e., sometimes to Anyaji, sometimes to Anyaji's son Maroti and at others to Akaji, and credit has been given by the plaintiffs for all those payments in the plaint towards the first nine instalments. Maroti relinquished his interest in the mortgage-debt in suit amongst other properties in favour of Akaji by means of a registered Farakat dated 10th July 1907, and with effect from that date the plaintiffs contend the original co-mortgagee Akaji acquired title as a sole mortgagee.

BASANTRAO v. NARAYAN

The present suit is for the recovery of the last five instalments and their interest subject to the rule of Damdapat. It was filed on 20th November 1919. The defendant No. 1 is the original mortgagor and Nos. 2 and 5 are his sons. The co-mortgagee Anyaji's heir Maroti having relinquished his interest as stated above and he having died before suit the plaintiffs did not think it necessary to join his heir as a party to the suit.

The defence which is relevant to this appeal, raised by the defendants Nos. 1 to 5, was that they did not know of the alleged release by Maroti of his interest in the mortgage-bond in suit in favour of Akaji, and that they continued making payments to one or the other of the mortgagees in the bona fide belief that Maroti had authority to receive payments and give valid discharge on behalf of all the mortgagees. As before, they pleaded two payments to Maroti,

(1) of Rs. 250 on 19th June 1913 as per receipt Exhibit D-7 signed by Maroti,

(2) of Rs. 500 on 23rd March 1914 as per receipt Exhibit D-8 signed by Maroti, and claimed credit for them in full discharge of the plaintiff's claim in respect of three instalments which they repaid. So that if credit were given for them the plaintiff's claim will stand in respect of only two instalments. It appears Akaji survived long after the date of the last payment which he himself realised in 1912 as per Exhibit D-9 dated 8th June 1912, but did not file any suit during his life time; the present suit is brought by his two sons one of whom had attained majority nearly three years before suit, as his age as put down in the plaint indicates. On plaintiff's behalf it was denied that Maroti had any express or implied authority to receive payments or to give valid discharge, on the ground that defendants were aware of the deed of relinquishment by Maroti in favour of Akaji. In view of the above defence of defendants Nos. 1 to 5 the plaintiffs thought fit to apply to the Court praying that Maroti's heir and sister Chidabai be joined as a co-defendant in order that an alternative relief of damages may be granted to plaintiffs as against Maroti's heir, in the event of the Court deciding to give credit to the mortgagor for payments made to Maroti. She was accordingly joined as a party defendant to the suit on 12th March 1920. In due course she was served some time before the date of her written statement dated 16th June 1920 in which she contended that the deed of release was only a bogus document not intended to be acted upon, and that it was only meant as a threat to Maroti in order to put some restraint on his wasteful habits. She admitted that Maroti received the payments and contended that he did so with the consent or acquiescence of Akaji. She thus denied the plaintiff's alternative claim laid as against her.

The only issues relevant to the only point raised in second appeal are:—

- "2. Did the defendant No. 1 really make payments as evidenced by receipts dated 19th June 1913 and 23rd March 1914, respectively, to Maroti towards the mortgage-debt?
3. (a) Was defendant No. 1 justified in making payment to him? Had he (Maroti) express or implied authority to receive payments on behalf of all the mortgagees, and was he able to give a valid discharge?
(b) Had the defendant No. 1 knowledge of the deed of relinquishment and did he make the payments in spite of the deed?
5. Can the plaintiffs ask for an alternative relief against defendant No. 6 in this suit?"

The defendant No. 1 went into the witness-box to prove the bona fides of the payments he made to Maroti in ignorance of the relinquishment. Plaintiffs examined only plaintiff No. 1 as their witness. He admits he has no personal knowledge of the dealings. The Court of first instance held that the said repayments were proved and the receipts Exhibits D-7 and D-8 were genuine. It further held that there was no evidence to show that the mortgagors had notice of the partition or rather of the release. On the point of Maroti's authority, either express or implied, to receive the payment, the finding of that Court was that Maroti had none to give a valid discharge, and that there was no justification for the mortgagors to make the payments to Maroti; and further that, even if Anyaji and Akaji had implied authority to receive payments for each other, the theory of agency had no application to their heirs. The

BASANT RAO v. NARAYAN

Court also held that the question of notice was immaterial on the ground that if a debtor pays to a person alleged to be the mortgagee's agent but without ascertaining the extent of his authority the payment is made at his own peril. It ultimately disallowed credit for the repayments on the ground that Maroti having on the date of those payments no interest in the mortgage-security could not give any discharge valid even to the extent of half. As regards issue No. 5 it was held that the alternative relief claimed against defendant No. 6 was not claimable in the mortgage-suit. In the end, a decree for the entire amount claimed was passed against defendants Nos. 1 to 5 and the claim was dismissed as against defendant No. 6.

Against this decree an appeal was preferred by the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 to the Court of the District Judge, Amroti, and defendant No. 6 was joined as a party respondent No. 3. It was, however, unsuccessful except as regards interest during the pendency of the suit. The Judge of the Court of appeal, in spite of what he states in paragraph 3 of his judgment that the plaintiffs-respondents practically admitted before him that the payment of Rs. 750 should be allowed, dismissed the appeal and upheld the findings of the Court of first instance. He found difficulty in giving effect to the position conceded by the plaintiffs-respondents because he thought he could not give relief to the plaintiffs as against defendant No. 6 in this mortgage-suit. Hence this appeal by defendants Nos. 1 to 5.

That both the Courts erred in the view they have taken about their inability to pass a decree against defendant No. 6 in a mortgage-suit is clear from the observations of Sir Bipin Krishna Bose, A. J. C., in Joharmal v. Nainsukh (1) and of those of Sir Henry Drake Brockman, J. C., in Mahadeo v. Nago (2), where joinder of such an alternative claim for damages was, on the analogy of the ruling in Aiyathurai Ravuthan v. Santhu Meers Ravuthan (3), permitted in order to avoid multiplicity of suits. As held by Sir Bose, A. J. C., it is open to a plaintiff to ask relief in the alternative, "dependent upon what might be found by the Court to be true facts of the case."

The only other point strenuously contended for on behalf of the appellants is that the lower Courts have not given full effect to the finding on issue No. 3 (b) and consequently the conclusion which they have drawn to the effect that payment to Maroti after he ceased to be a mortgagee was not a valid payment, does not legally follow therefrom, and further that the circumstances of the case and the previous conduct of the parties clearly made the payments good legal payments as against the plaintiffs. I see great force in this argument. The Court of Appeal does not appear to have fully realised the significance and bearing which the defendants' plea that their payments were made under the bona fide belief that Maroti continued to hold the authority he had to receive payments on behalf of both the mortgagees, had on the question of the validity of those payments.

The following table will show the previous uniform course of conduct on the part of the mortgagee in the matter of receiving payments from the mortgagor defendant No. 1. It establishes an implied agreement on the part of the mortgagees that payment to one was payment to all:—

Exhibit No.	Date of receipt.	Amount paid.	By whom payment was received and receipt passed.	Name of the mortgagee or mortgagees on whose behalf receipt passed.
1 D-1	8-2-'03 ..	250 0 0	Anyaji's Zibai	agent in the name of Anya and Akaji.

passed receipts either in the name of one or both the mortgagees. After his death, sometimes his son Maroti received payments, and at other times the other co-mortgagee Akaji received them, and each passed receipts in his own name and without reference to the other. This course of conduct naturally engendered a belief in the mind of the mortgagor that payment to one was a good and full payment to all, and that discharge by one was a good discharge in respect of the entire obligation. It relieved the mortgagor from the bother and inconvenience of seeking out or insisting upon the presence of each co-creditor to witness the payment and pass receipt of satisfaction, so that they all may know of the payment and may not contest the fact and validity of the payment received by one as payment to all. The principle underlying section 38 of the Indian Contract Act which enunciates that an offer to one of several joint promisees has the same legal consequence as an offer to all of them holds good here. The further principle that the performance of a promise if made in any manner which the promisee prescribes or sanctions was good performance within the meaning of section 50 of the Contract Act also is pertinently applicable to the facts of the case. The two co-mortgagees were joint at the date of the mortgage. The debtor knew them to be members of a joint family. In the absence of any evidence to fix him with knowledge that their joint family status has been disrupted, the debtor will be legally justified in believing in the continuance of the self-same jointness or community of interest between them or their representatives for the purposes of granting him discharge for payments made as existed before. Here the finding is that the mortgagor had no knowledge of the partition that took place or of the release deed executed by Maroti in favour of his uncle. This gives rise to a presumption which the debtor is entitled to act upon, that the mortgagees are joint and that payment to one is payment to all of them. It further shows that Akaji acquiesced in Maroti taking the place of Anyaji and, therefore, no question of the non-continuance of the agency in the case of heirs after the death of Anyaji really arises here. It has been brought to my notice that in Berar the system of preparing Records of Rights was introduced in 1912 and that in the Record of Rights a note of the existence of mortgages has to be made if they are disclosed in the course of the investigation and that in this particular case the mortgage is shown in those papers as being held by both Akaji and Maroti as late as 1912; see Exhibit P-4 on the record. This also supports the debtor's belief that both continued to be the owners of the mortgage-debt as before.

A passage from Sir Rash Behari Ghose's Law of Mortgage in India, 5th Edition, Vol. 1, page 353, was cited to me in support of the proposition that in a suit by an assignee of a mortgage the mortgagor is entitled to credit for the repayments he may have made to the original mortgagee after the assignment but without notice of the transfer, provided that there is no collusion, and it is argued that credit for the payments should, therefore, be allowed. It has, however, been contended on behalf of the respondents that sections 130 and 131 of the Transfer of Property Act do not contemplate service of any notice of assignment in the case of a transfer of a mortgage because a mortgage is not an actionable claim. It is, therefore, argued that the mortgagee was under no legal obligation to notify the partition to the mortgagor and warn him against making payments to Maroti who had parted with his own rights. The argument of the plaintiffs-respondents though plausible is fallacious. I am not impressed by that argument. It militates against the principle that every prudent man will be presumed to act for his own benefit and that he will not omit to perform a duty he owes to himself at least. If the law did not cast on him a duty to serve a notice on the mortgagor of the fact of the assignment, his own duty to himself did cast it on him. If he wanted to save himself from the effects of his own negligence in the observance of such a duty, or from being estopped on the ground of acquiescence in the continuance of the old practice deducible from his previous conduct which enable the other co-mortgagee to commit fraud as against him as also to be the mortgagor, prudence required that he ought to have given such a notice to the mortgagor. A mere omission very often involves a representation and silence or neglect under such circumstances gives rise to acquiescence and consequent operation of the law of estoppel. But this depends more or less on the facts of each case.

No doubt, the definition of an "actionable claim" excludes from its scope a mortgage of immoveable property. Section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act does not, therefore, purport to lay down the mode in which a transfer of a mortgage could be effected. All that the Legislature appears to have been anxious to provide in framing that section was to lay down the conditions necessary for the validity of a transfer of an "actionable claim", as also the consequences of compliance or non-compliance therewith. It does not, as I understand the section, intend or purport to lay down any mode of transfer for making an assignment of a mortgage; much less does it declare their assignments effective or ineffective for compliance or non-compliance with the requirements of that section. It does not also render invalid any dealing by the mortgagor having no notice of the assignment with the original mortgagee after the date of the assignment. All such questions arising out of such assignments are left for treatment under the general law. The rights, liabilities and equities arising as between the assignee and the mortgagor appear to me to have been expressly left out for treatment under the general law relating to contracts, transfers, estoppel and other laws, including the personal law of the parties. I am not, therefore, prepared to hold with the respondents that there was no duty cast on them to serve a notice of the assignment of the mortgage simply because a transfer of a mortgage is not a transfer of an actionable claim which requires such express notice.

I, therefore, differing from the lower Courts, hold that the mortgagee Akaji ought to have warned the mortgagor against making payments to Maroti after the date of the assignment and that, in the absence of such warning, the authority which Maroti exercised to the knowledge of Akaji after his father's death to receive payments and give discharge for himself and Akaji continued unrevoked and the manner of performance acted upon and sanctioned by the mortgagee in the past continued in full force, and that the payments made to Maroti being made bona fide without notice of the fact of assignment were legal and good payments in discharge of the obligation created by the mortgage so far as they went to satisfy the three instalments. The mortgagors (defendants Nos. 1 to 5) are, therefore, entitled to get credit for the same. This will necessarily confine the plaintiffs' claim to the remaining two instalments for Rs. 250 each, and the same will stand at Rs. 1,000 only being subject to the rule of Damdapat as regards interest so far as defendants Nos. 1 to 5 are concerned. The appeal, therefore, succeeds and is decreed with costs against plaintiffs-respondents. A preliminary decree for foreclosure for payment of Rs. 1,000 and proportionate costs in terms of O. XXXIV, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, will accordingly be passed against defendants Nos. 1 to 5. The defendants Nos. 1 to 5 will get their proportionate costs on the dismissed portion of the claim from plaintiffs for all the Courts. I grant three months' time for payment.

As regards the alternative claim against defendant No. 6, I deem it necessary to say here that no question of limitation arises because the granting of that relief was dependent upon the finding of the Court as to the factum and validity of the payments to Maroti as against the plaintiff. The defendant No. 6 is admittedly a legal representative of the deceased Maroti and is ordinarily liable to make good the amount to plaintiff out of the assets of Maroti which may have reached her hands. The parties, however, did not make any statements as to the extent of such property. They simply fought on the question of law whether defendant No. 6 could be made liable in a mortgage suit and both the Courts below held that she could not be made liable in a mortgage suit, but that a separate suit should be filed against her. As I have, on the strength of the ruling in Mahadeo v. Nago (2), come to the conclusion that the rights of plaintiff can be worked out against defendant No. 6 in this mortgage-suit itself, I may here point out that for the right decision of the extent of defendant No. 6's liability, questions as to how far the act of Maroti was a tortious act, or whether he could have been made liable on the express or implied contract of indemnity in the deed of assignment, and how far the payments received enriched or benefited his assets and whether the benefit so conferred is traceable and the like, raised before me in the course of the argument are pertinent and will have to be decided in the Court of first instance. I, therefore, find that a further enquiry into facts is necessary. I, therefore, direct that the necessary pleadings of the parties may be recorded and necessary issues framed and an enquiry made as to the existence of the assets of Maroti in the hands of defendant No. 6, the liability of the latter being strictly limited in point of extent to such assets. If the assets prove insufficient to satisfy the whole of the liability for Rs. 750 there will be a personal decree for the balance against the defendant No. 6 to the extent of such assets as she may not have duly accounted for.

The case will be remanded for further trial with advertence to the above remarks so far as plaintiffs and defendant No. 6 are concerned. I do not make any order as to the costs of defendant No. 6, either in this or in the Courts below, as they must abide the event.

An ex parte decree passed against a large number of defendants, if set aside on the application of two of them, is set aside against all and, therefore, all of them are necessary parties to a revision petition against the order setting aside the ex parte decree.

Rule against the order of the Munsif, 2nd Court, Satkhira, dated the 30th April 1923, in Mis. Cases Nos. 439 and 433 of 1922, and 421 and 420 of 1922, arising out of Rent Suits Nos. 686 and 687 of 1920.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Anilendra Nath Rai Chowdhuri), for the Petitioner.

Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen, for the (Opposite Parties).

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is taken to the maintainability of this Rule on the ground that all the necessary parties are not before the Court. In my opinion the objection ought to prevail. The suit was brought by the petitioners against 18 tenants for rent and an ex parte decree was passed in that suit. Two of the tenants applied to have the ex parte decree set aside and the Court set aside the ex parte decree and passed the following order: "miscellaneous case be allowed on contest; sale set aside, restore the suits in their original numbers." I observe that it was a suit for rent and under the proviso to r. 13 of O. IX, the whole suit was restored; and in this Court a Rule was obtained only against two of the defendant who were the applicants in the Court below, and the other tenants in whose favour the ex parte decree was set aside and the suit restored were not made parties to this Rule. The effect of this omission is that, if this suit succeeds and the order of the Court below be set aside and the suit decreed against two of the tenants, the order restoring suit in favour of the other 16 tenants will stand. This created an anomaly which cannot be allowed. In this view of the matter, the Rule cannot proceed and must be discharged with costs. I assess the hearing-fee at one gold mohur.

This order will govern the other Rule (707 of 1923) which is also discharged with costs—one gold mohur.

Mr. V. Sivaprakasa Mudaliar, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. Doraiswamy Aiyar—for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

The Chief Justice.—This is an appeal from an order of Kumaraswamy Sastry, J., in Chambers on Judge's summons to discharge the Receiver of certain temple property and to order the Receiver to put the hereditary trustee of that temple in possession of properties and documents relating to the temple. The facts are these. A suit was brought asking for a scheme to be framed in relation to the temple, which was tried by Kumaraswamy Sastry, J., and he in due course gave a decree and framed a scheme. An appeal was lodged against that decree and there was a cross-appeal. Before the case came on in appeal, an application was made before Phillips, J., for the appointment of a Receiver, there being allegations made that the trustee did not properly account, would not hand over or produce books, and was not behaving as a trustee should behave under the scheme as framed by Kumaraswamy Sastry, J., and, having heard the application on several occasions with the trustee before him, Phillips, J., ordered that a Receiver should be appointed. The appeal then came on and this Court confirmed the order of Kumaraswamy Sastry, J., but to some extent—not to a very great extent—modified the scheme as framed by him. The scheme stands in operation as from the date fixed by Mr. Justice Kumaraswamy Sastry's order with the modifications decreed by the Court of Appeal. After the order in appeal, this summons was issued and the case was put before the Court solely on the ground that the effect of the order of the Court of Appeal was to put an end to the Receivership and, in the words of the affidavit, "that the Receiver became functus officio and automatically ceases to be Receiver." The plaintiff and the Receiver, alleging, as I understand, that they were supported by the Advisory Board, opposed this summons and alleged that the trustee was still an unfit person to have control. The matter came before Kumaraswamy Sastry, J., again and he decided that the effect of the order of the Court of Appeal was ipso facto to discharge the Receiver, and declined to go into any question as to whether or not the trustee was a fit person to have charge, or to go into the question whether it was advisable in the interests of the temple that the Receiver should be continued.

In my judgment that is wrong. The order of Phillips, J., was quite irrespective of there being any appeal. His jurisdiction to make the order depended on one of two things, either on the scheme then in operation which provided that applications be made to the Court by summons, or by reason of his powers under O. XL, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code which gives the Court power to appoint a Receiver of any property whether before or after decree, where it appears to the Court to be just and convenient to do so, and that order continued until it was put an end to. It was not put an end to by the Court of Appeal which merely varied the scheme. That being so, this order, in my judgment, is wrong and this appeal must be allowed and allowed with costs. The summons which was taken out before the learned Judge was taken out on entirely wrong grounds and must be dismissed with costs. But I wish to make it quite plain that this does not in any way dispose of the real question which both parties say they desire to have decided. It is perfectly open to the trustee, if he is so advised, to take out a fresh summons asking, among other things, for the discharge of the Receiver. It would be open to him on that application to contend that the scheme as framed by the Court of Appeal gives ample protection to those interested and that it is no longer necessary on the facts of this case to have a Receiver. It would also be open on that application for the plaintiff, the Receiver and the Board, if so advised, to bring any circumstance before the Court as to the conduct of the trustee or otherwise to enable it to arrive at a proper decision on that point. I think that it is unnecessary for me to point out that there are also ample powers under the scheme for the Board or other persons with the consent of the Advocate-General to take steps in reference to the conduct of the trustee, if he has been guilty of any misconduct in recent times as to which we say nothing and express no views.

The result is that this appeal should be allowed and the order of Kumaraswamy Sastry, J., set aside with the result that, pending any fresh proceedings, the Receiver will be reinstated.

Waller, J.—I agree and have nothing to add.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are fully set out in the judgments of the Courts below. Both Courts have found that the plaintiffs are entitled to joint possession of the fields in suit on payment of their proper proportion of the money paid by the defendant to the tenant for the surrender. The lower Appellate Court has correctly found that though the parties are theekadars under section 109 of the Land Revenue Act they can make a partition binding inter se. The cases quoted by the lower Courts are all cases in which there was no partition. The lower Appellate Court holds that such an agreement would require registration and, apart from the fact that Exhibits P.11 and D.30 are not registered, they do not amount to more than an agreement for the collection of rent by the parties from certain tenants, and do not refer to surrenders, nor can any agreement as to surrenders be inferred from the statement that each will not interfere with the tenants of the other party. The learned District Judge is in error in supposing that Exhibit D.30 requires registration. It is an award of arbitrators and does not require registration: Jagannath v. Rambux, (1). The document distinctly provides for rental collections of 12 annas patti being made by plaintiffs, and of 4 annas patti by defendant, without interference by the other party.

Though the jamabandis for the most part show the tenants as tenants of both parties, with the exception of that for 1919-20, which is shortly before the present litigation, the Patwari (P. W. 1) deposes that the separate pattis are not shown in the village papers, as the division was a private one. But it has been admitted by the defendant in his written statement, paragraph 2, that plaintiffs used to realize the rent from the tenants in question, and it is also admitted by his witnesses Dhannalal (D.W. 1) and Jagannath (D. W. 2) that the tenants are divided and Nanhelal, from whom the surrender was taken, was the tenant of plaintiffs and was paying rent to them. It is quite clear, therefore, that the tenants were divided between the plaintiffs and defendant for the purpose of payment of rent, and, this being so, the case, in my opinion, is governed by Chandrabhan v. Deo Rao (2) in which it was held that there is no distinction between a private partition and a partition effected under the Land Revenue Act. If the proprietors elect to partition the village and if they agree that each proprietor shall collect the rents from those tenants whose lands fall within his share, and if the tenants in their turn make attornment, then each proprietor becomes the landlord of his patti within the meaning of the Tenancy Act. This is what has happened in the present case. The relation of landlord and tenant subsisted between the plaintiffs and the tenant Nanhelal, and the surrender could only be made to them under section 89 of the Tenancy Act.

That this is so is shown by the definition of landlord and tenant in section 2 of the Tenancy Act. By virtue of the agreement between the plaintiffs and defendant, the tenant Nanhelal held his land from plaintiffs and was liable to pay rent to them for the land. Consequently, I am unable to agree with the view of the lower Courts that the agreement regarding the collection of rents does not in law connote an agreement about surrenders.

The result is that the tenant could only surrender his land to his landlords, the plaintiffs, and the surrender to defendant is not binding on plaintiffs, who are consequently entitled to possession of the land. Apart from this, the taking of the surrender by defendant is obviously against the agreement not to interfere with the tenants of the other party. The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to succeed. I set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and direct that plaintiffs should recover possession of the land in suit, with all costs.

ORDER.—One Dalbir Singh was the owner of certain property including a share in a malguzari village called Khairrangi in the Seoni District. He borrowed in 1917 some grain, and cash debt from Behari Singh, his maternal uncle, and agreed to repay the same by the 15th November 1919 but died without making any repayments. Behari Singh, therefore, on 13th May 1921 instituted this suit No. 15 of 1921 for the recovery of the grain and cash debt amounting to Rs. 2,477-6-0 out of the assets left by the deceased debtor in the hands of his daughter Rekhamati and mother Mt. Gaibania. Before the date of the hearing (18th July 1921) the daughter died and the mother became the sole heiress to the estate of her deceased son and came into possession of the estate of the deceased debtor. She secured a remission in the grain portion of the claim by a compromise with the plaintiff and confessed judgment for the balance, that is, for Rs. 2,227-6-0. A decree was passed in the following terms: "defendant do pay to the plaintiff 70 khandis of pissi, or its value Rs. 1,680-at Rs. 24-per khandi and Rs. 547-6-0. Defendant's liability be limited to the assets of Dalbir Singh which have come to her and have not been duly disposed." Mt. Gaibania, the judgment-debtor, died before the decree could be executed. On 20th June 1922 the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree against the assets of the deceased Dalbir Singh which on Mt. Gaibania's death came into the hands of the non-applicants who inherited the same as the Sapinda relations of the last male holder. In their statement they admit that Dalbir Singh's share of village Khairrangi is held by them as his heirs and that they are at present the recorded proprietors thereof. They thus admit their character as the "legal representatives" of the deceased debtor or the deceased judgment-debtor as defined in section 2, clause (11), Civil Procedure Code. They have thus been rightly placed on the record as legal representatives in place of the deceased judgment-debtor. Their main contention, however, is that the decree cannot be executed as against the assets of Dalbir Singh in their hands on the ground that Dalbir Singh neither borrowed nor had any legal necessity to borrow any grain debt and on the further ground that Dalbir Singh was a minor in 1917. In short, the objection raised challenges the very basis and the validity of the contract of the loan which merged in the decree. It was also urged on their behalf that the compromise by Mt. Gaibania with her brother and the decree based thereon were collusive. The question for consideration, therefore, as formulated by the executing Court, was "whether the decree passed against the assets of the deceased Dalbir Singh can be re-opened on such allegations as have been made by the non-applicants." The executing Court upheld the contention and found that the non-applicants were entitled to impeach the decree in the execution proceedings and supported the view by the reasoning that a confession decree against a Hindu widow does not bind the reversioner. The question for consideration, therefore, is whether the Subordinate Judge's view is correct and whether it affords any ground for interference in revision.

The first and fundamental rule of law is that an executing Court cannot go behind the decree. The effect of entertaining the objection as to the legality or correctness of the decree would be to reopen the decree, while, as a matter of fact, the Court executing the decree must take the decree as it stands. It has no power to go behind the decree, the reason being that a decree, though it may not be according to law, is binding and conclusive between the parties if it is not appealed from, and it is for these reasons that the Court executing a decree cannot alter, vary or add to, the terms of that decree. Section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code lays down that all questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit. It was held in Tallapragada Sundarappa v. Boorugapalli Sreeramulu, (1), which is a case on all fours with the present case, that where it is alleged that a mortgage decree was obtained by the mortgagee in collusion with the mother (the holder of the life estate) of the last male owner of the property on the ground that the debt itself was purely fictitious, and a declaration was sought for, old section 244, corresponding to new section 47, Civil Procedure Code did not bar a fresh suit as the decree itself was impeached. It was also held there that no appeal lay from an order dealing with the objection of a reversioner in possession of the property of the last male holder on the ground that the decree itself was not binding on him, and that an order disposing of such objection against the reversioner was not a bar to a subsequent suit for the declaration by the reversioner.

3. If a judgment-debtor or a legal representative objects to the execution of a decree on the ground that the decree is not valid because it is collusive the question as to validity of the decree is not one relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree and cannot, therefore, be tried in execution proceedings, under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. Such a question can only be tried in a regular suit brought for the purpose. If the debt was really incurred by the deceased Dalbir Singh his assets in the hands of his mother or of the present non-applicants must necessarily be liable for its satisfaction whether the decree be passed on confession or otherwise. The decree in question has declared liability of such assets in the hands of the representatives of the deceased debtor. If the non-applicants object to the enforcement of that liability against the assets on the ground that the debt itself was non-existent the objection challenges the very foundation of the decree. I am, therefore, of opinion that in deciding to entertain the objection which went behind the decree the executing Court went out of its way, and exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law.

4. It will thus be noticed that the whole of the discussion of the case law indulged in by the executing Court as regards the binding character of a decree passed against a Hindu widow is beside the point. There is always a distinction between a decree passed against a Hindu widow as representative of the last male holder in respect of a debt due by the last male holder, and a decree passed against her in respect of a debt incurred by herself. In the first case she is sued in her representative character, in the second she is before the Court in her personal capacity. A decree which directs recovery of the debt out of the assets of the deceased in the hands of the holder of the life estate, though based on the confession of the widow, cannot therefore be treated as being a decree against the widow personally. Although a personal decree against the widow may not bind the actual reversioner for very good reasons, a decree passed against her in her representative character would not be liable to be challenged on the execution side at the instance of the reversionary heir merely because a decree was passed on a confession.

5. The order of the executing Court is, therefore, set aside and it is directed to execute the decree as it stands against the assets of the deceased Dalbir Singh in the hands of the non-applicants. The applicant will get his costs of this application.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 22, 89, 47, 48—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Guardian, removal of—Special allowance, grant of—Jurisdiction—Appeal—Revision.

A right of appeal must always be founded upon an express rule to that effect or a rule by unavoidable implication. [p. 188, Col. 2.]

The words "removing a guardian" in clause (g) of section 47 of the Guardians and Wards Act are not descriptive of the section but of the order against which appeal is provided for. Therefore, the only appeal permissible with reference to an order under section 89 of the Guardians and Wards Act is one against an order removing a guardian under that section. [p. 188, Col. 2.]

Section 48 of the Guardians and Wards Act attaches finality to orders made under the Act except when they can be challenged either by way of an appeal under section 47 of the Act or by way of an application for revision under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. [p. 189, Col. 1.]

Under section 22 of the Guardian's and Wards Act a District Judge has jurisdiction to grant an allowance to the guardian. [p. 189, Col. 1.]

An order made by a District Judge granting a special allowance to a guardian on his removal for services rendered to the estate is not open to appeal or revision. [p. 189, Col. 1.]

Appeal and application against the order of the District Judge, Rai Bareli, dated 28th November 1923.

Messrs. M. Wasim and M. H. Kidwai, for the Applicants.

B. Bisheshar Nath Srivastava, for the Opposite party.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent was appointed guardian of two minors and of their property in the year 1917. The order of appointment provided for 5 per cent. allowance on the net income of the estate to the guardian. The respondent made efforts from time to time for increment in his allowance. He also asked for legal fees to be allowed to him in respect of cases which he had prosecuted or defended on behalf of the estate, he himself being a legal practitioner. This prayer was also always refused. Finally, the District Judge agreed that the legal fees could be allowed over and above the sanctioned allowance in special cases under an express order of the Court to that effect. One of the two minors has now come of age. They both form a joint Hindu family and on the application of the one who has come of age, the guardian has been removed under section 39, clause (j) of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890). In the course of the proceedings relating to the removal of the guardian the respondent asked for further remuneration under two heads. First, for his general services to the estate over a period of six years and, secondly, for the work which he had done in certain cases in the capacity of a lawyer. The Court, while removing him, has awarded Rs. 3,000 under the first head and Rs. 1,000 under the second. The order under both the heads is the subject-matter of controversy before me.

An appeal was filed to this Court against that order purporting to be permissible by clause (g) of section 47 of the Act mentioned above. The learned Judge of this Court who received the memorandum of appeal refused to admit it as such. He issued notices with reference to a separate application under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure presented by the appellant. I am satisfied that no appeal lies from the order to which reference has already been made. The right of appeal must always be founded upon an express rule to that effect or a rule by unavoidable implication. The only appeal permissible with reference to an order under section 39 of the Act is one against an order removing a guardian under that section. The words "removing a guardian" under clause (g) of section 47 are not descriptive of the section but of the order against which appeal is provided for. This is borne out by reference to the language of clause (a) of section 47 where we find, with reference to section 7, an appeal permitted from an order refusing to appoint a guardian, though section 7 does not in terms provide for such an order. There is also authority that an order refusing to remove a guardian is not appeal-able, though obviously such an order shall ordinarily be passed in proceedings falling under section 39 of the Act: See Pukhwanti Dai v. Indra Narain Singh, (1) and In re Bai Hurkhu, (2) The appellant is not aggrieved with the order removing the respondent from the guardianship. There is, therefore, no appeal before me in terms of clause (g) of section 47. In my opinion the present appeal is not maintainable.

It is, however, argued that the matter may be considered on the merits under the provision of section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. I am not prepared to accede to that argument. Section 48 of the Guardians and Wards Act attaches finality to orders made under that Act except when they can be challenged either by way of an appeal under section 47 of the Act or by way of an application for revision under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. I have already held that no appeal lies and I am further of opinion that the case does not fulfil the requirements of section 115 of the Code. The learned Judge of the Court below had certainly jurisdiction to grant an allowance to the guardian under section 22 of the Guardians and Wards Act. It is conceded that the order originally fixing the allowance at 5 per cent. on the net income of the estate could be modified by the Judge either by increasing or reducing the allowance which was previously fixed. It follows that he could do all this at any time when opportunity arose for taking action under section 22. He has, therefore, acted within his jurisdiction in passing the order complained against. He has also not acted with any illegality or material irregularity in relation to the exercise of his jurisdiction. It is not shown that the order under consideration is wholly arbitrary. What is insisted upon is that the learned Judge had no power to make rewards out of other people's property and in this case he has simply acted on an impulse of generosity at the expense of the appellant.

This argument finds some support from the language used by the learned Judge at some places of his order but the real intention of the order is clear to my mind. All that the Judge has done, or intended to do, was to act within his jurisdiction with which he was invested by section 22 of the Guardians and Wards Act.

The application is dismissed with costs. The appeal is also dismissed but I make no order as to costs.

JUDGMENT.—We think this Rule succeeds to this extent that the case must go back to the Small Cause Court to be dealt with on the footing that the Mablakbandi is a good acknowledgment under section 19 of the Limitation Act and, therefore, will preserve any debt due which was not at that time barred by limitation. But, in dealing with this matter, the learned Judge must also proceed upon the view that the Mablakbandi is not a promise to pay under section 25 of the Contract Act so as to revive any debt, which was Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Chhindwara, in Civil Appeal No. 18 of 1922, 29th March 1923.

Messrs G. V. Trivedi and A. V. Wazalwar for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These three appeals are closely connected and all can be disposed of together. The facts are stated in the remanding judgment of the District Judge, Chhindwara, dated 29th March 1922. They may be shortly summarised as follows.

Seth Sheolal filed a Civil suit against Govinda on 25th April 1919, applying at the same time for attachment of his property before judgment. Notices were issued to the defendant and 27th June 1919 was fixed for hearing both the suit and application. On 14th June 1919 Govinda and his sons Sonba and Jairam executed a sale-deed in respect of absolute occupancy field No. 222 in favour of Seth Girdharilal for a consideration of Rs. 4,000, of which Rs. 1,200 were to be kept in deposit by Girdharilal for payment to Sheolal; Rs. 400 were credited to debts due by Govinda to Girdharilal and Rs. 2,400 were paid in cash. On the same date Girdharilal executed a deed in favour of Govinda's minor son Jairam through his guardian mother Mt. Jani in respect of an absolute occupancy field in another village for a consideration of Rs. 1,500. The application for attachment before judgment of Govinda's property was not pressed by Sheolal. He obtained a decree against Govinda and Sanba on 21st October 1919 and subsequently applied for attachment of the sum of Rs. 1,200 which, according to the sale-deed, remained in deposit with Girdharilal but which was stated to have been taken away by Govinda. He also applied for attachment of Govinda's absolute occupancy field No. 222, but Girdharilal filed an objection on the ground that the field had been sold to him and was in his possession as owner and this objection was allowed on 3rd December 1919. On 13th January 1920 Govinda applied under the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907 to be declared an insolvent and an order of adjudication was passed on 8th April 1920. On 4th August 1920 Sheolal applied under section 53 of Act V of 1920, to have the transfer declared void against him, as the transfer of absolute occupancy field No. 222 to Girdharilal had not been made in good faith. The Subordinate Judge held that the transaction was wholly fraudulent and without consideration and that the sale was void. Both Girdharilal and the insolvent Govinda appealed against this order to the District Judge, Chhindwara, who, finding that the burden of proof had been wrongly placed by the first Court, remanded the case.

After remand the first Court came to the same conclusion. On appeal the District Judge confirmed the decision and appeals Nos. 449 and 427 are appeals from this order by Girdharilal, the transferee, and Govinda, the insolvent, respectively and are both based on similar grounds.

SETH SHEOLAL v. GIRDHARILAL

Besides making an application under the Insolvency Act, the creditor Seth Sheolal brought a suit in view of the provisions of O. XIX, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code, to have it declared that the property was liable to attachment and sale in execution of his decree. That suit was dismissed and on appeal the decision was confirmed by the District Judge, and Second Appeal No. 319 is an appeal against that decision by Seth Sheolal.

It has been contended on behalf of the respondent that no Second Appeal will lie against an order passed under section 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act V of 1920. The question is, however, one under section 4 of the Act, which is in very wide terms and, therefore, a second appeal will lie under section 75 of the Act, but only on a point of law as provided in sub-section (1) of section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This has already been held by this Court in K. S. Abdul Kadir v. Sayad Lal (Second Appeal No. 372-B of 1922).

Counsel for the appellant Girdharilal has raised several points of law as well as of fact. It is argued that an application by the creditor under section 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act will not lie because such an application can only be made by the Receiver. This point has been considered by the learned District Judge. In this case no Receiver has been appointed; the case is covered by Bansilal Agarwala v. Ranglal Agarwala (1) in which it was held that if no Receiver is appointed, the Insolvency Court can itself move on the matter being brought to its notice by any other creditor.

It is next contended that the transfer was not under section 53 but under section 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. That, however, was not the case of the transferee in the lower Court and it is entirely inconsistent with the case now put forward that the transfer was bona fide, that is to say, it was not made with the object of favouring Girdharilal at the expense of the other creditors since he as a creditor of Govinda got only a small amount and the bulk of the consideration was given to the other creditors. This theory is altogether untenable.

Then it is contended that as the objection of Girdharilal to the attachment of the property was upheld, the order under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code, is conclusive unless it is upset by a suit, and this not having been done it is conclusive as against Seth Sheolal and it cannot be urged that the transfer was fraudulent. As a matter of fact, a suit was brought by Seth Sheolal and has been decided not on the merits but on the ground that no such suit will lie when once the debtor has been declared an insolvent, as under section 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act no such suit could be brought without the leave of the Insolvency Court. But the application under section 53 of the Act may be considered as a suit to establish the right which the creditor claims and it would be wholly inequitable to dismiss the suit on the ground that the property was vested in an Insolvency Court and to prevent him from raising his plea in the Insolvency Court. In this case both the suit and the application were filed in the same Court, though no formal permission of the Insolvency Court was obtained before filing the suit. The matter is not res judicata, and is still sub judice.

As to the bona fides of the transfer by Govinda to Girdharilal, I do not think that this is a matter which can be raised in second appeal. Both the Courts below, after considering the evidence, have found that the transfer was not bona fide. In the case already quoted, where the two Courts concurrently found that the present applicant failed to establish their bona fides, the matter was not allowed to be further considered. In any case, it will appear that the insolvent got rid of his absolute occupancy land which was liable to attachment and sale, and the same day his transferee transferred other absolute occupancy land to the insolvent's minor son. All the evidence has been considered at length by the Courts below. The whole consideration was not paid and though an offer of payment of part of the debt was made to Sheolal there is no evidence that there was any actual tender of the money. I need not refer to the improbability of the accounts regarding this transaction, which has been referred to at length by the lower Court. It cannot be said that there is any illegality in the finding so as to justify its being disturbed in second appeal. The transfer, therefore, by the insolvent to Girdharilal being made within two years from the date of adjudication and not being proved to be in good faith cannot stand. The result is that the order of the lower Appellate Court as regards this must be confirmed and the appeals of Govinda and Girdharilal (Second Appeals Nos. 427 and 449) be dismissed with costs.

As regards Sheolal's Appeal No. 319, there is little to be said. No leave of the Court was obtained for the suit and as the insolvent's property was vested in the Court, the creditor has no remedy against the property in respect of the debt other than that provided by section 28 of Act V of 1920. The order of the lower appellate Court is therefore correct and this appeal must also be dismissed with costs.

If in pursuance of an application to set aside a sale under s. 131 of the Estates Land Act (corresponding to O. XXI, r. 80, Civil Procedure Code), the petitioner applies to the Court ordering the sale, for ascertainment of the amount payable by him and pays within 30 days from the date of sale the amount he is asked to pay, the sale will be set aside even if the amount thus paid is less than the full amount and the deficiency is paid after 30 days.

No party should be prejudiced by the act of a Court or by mistake that is attributable to that act. What constitutes an act of Court must, however, depend on the circumstances of each case.

Quære, whether the sale of a raiyat's holding can be set aside on the ground of irregularity under the Madras Estates Land Act.

Petitions under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and 107 of the Government of India Act praying the High Court to revise the orders of the Court of the Deputy Collector, Tiruvallur, dated 27th July 1922 in M. P. No. 130 of 1922, in M. P. No. 132 of 1922 and in M. P. No. 133 of 1922.

Messrs T. P. Ramachandra Iyer and S. Krishnamachariar, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. S. Varadachariar and S. Ranga-chariar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These petitions arise out of applications filed before the Deputy Collector under s. 131 of the Estates Land Act for setting aside the sales for arrears of rent. The sales were on the 13th of March 1922. On the 6th of April an application was put in for the purpose of setting aside the sale on the ground of irregularity. The Deputy Collector, probably being under the impression that no application would lie to set aside the sale on the ground of irregularity, advised that the petitioner may if so inclined, apply to set aside the sale under section 131 of the Estates Land Act, which corresponds to O. XXI, r. 89, Civil Procedure Code. An application was put in for that purpose and a sum of Rs. 150 was deposited at the time. The petitioner was asked to come on the 10th of April for the purpose of ascertaining the balance to be deposited. On the 10th of April, it appears from the record, the petitioner appeared and wanted to know how much he was to pay. The Deputy Collector endorsed on his application "Find out how much he has to pay" and sent it to the Office, and Rs. 158-0 was received on that day. Having paid

ADIMOOLA MUDALIAR v. MANICKA MUDALIAR

Rs. 15-8-0 the petitioner went away and did nothing further. On the 20th of April the purchaser, who was himself the Izradar applied to the Court for payment of the money paid in by him as purchase-money and in his petition he states that he is informed that the judgment-debtor paid into Court the decree-amount with 5 per cent. and poundage and applied for getting rid of the sale under section 131 of the Estates Land Act, that he has no objection to the sale being set aside; and he applied for payment of the money to him. Apparently no notice was taken of this application and on the 2nd of June a notice was sent by Mr. Krishnamachariar, a Vakil of the High Court, to the Deputy Collector wherein the application made by his client on the 20th of April 1922 for payment of the money due to him was referred to. The notice proceeds as follows:—Though they did so even without any formal notice of the petition by the other side for the disposal of expediting payment of the said large amount to them and their request was made so early as 20th of April last and a reminder was sent by my clients by registered post dated the 6th May and registered on the 9th idem and received by the Head Clerk on the 11th of the said month and though my clients subsequently went and requested the said clerk to send the refund order by post, which he said would soon be done, nothing has been done as yet." After receipt of the application by the purchaser, the reminder referred to in the notice and the lawyer's notice, a notice was issued on the 15th of June by the Deputy Collector calling upon the petitioner to pay Rs. 138-6 3. I find a calculation made by the Deputy Collector's office which shows that the arrears were Rs. 168-14-3 and the commission was Rs. 135 making up a total of Rs. 303 14-3 that Rs. 165-8-0 had already been paid and that Rs. 138-6 3 was the balance that he had to pay. On receiving information to pay, this amount was actually paid by the petitioner. Notice was issued by the Deputy Collector informing the parties that the petition for setting aside the sale would be disposed of. Both parties appeared and the Deputy Collector set aside the sale.

Objection was taken before the Deputy Collector that, as the amount required under section 131 of the Estates Land Act was not paid within the time limited by the Act, namely, 30 days from the date of sale, the sale ought not to be set aside. The Deputy Collector set aside the sale on three grounds. He held that the non-payment of the proper sum within 30 days was due to the fact that, owing to want of records, a sum was asked to be paid which did not represent the full amount payable under section 131. He states that the petitioner noted on the statement made by the Deputy Collector as to the amount payable and that, if there was a mistake, the mistake, being that of the office, ought not to prejudice the petitioner. The Deputy Collector also set aside the sale on the ground that the purchaser having agreed to the sale being set aside and to the deposit being paid over to him he is estopped from contending that the sale ought not to be set aside because of the payment being not in accordance with the section. The third ground which he sets out is that there were irregularities in the sale which rendered the sale invalid. He also refers to the contention raised that being an inam it could not be brought to sale before enfranchisement.

These petitions are filed under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, and section 107 of the Government of India Act. Before I can interfere it has to be shown that the Court exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law or failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. The contention of Mr. Ramachandra Iyer for the purchaser is that the amount which had to be paid being an amount which had to be arrived at merely by arithmetical calculation the petitioner was fully competent to have known what the amount was when he himself states the amount of the sale in his petition and that, even assuming that there was some error in calculation or an error made in the Deputy Collector's office, it is not a ground for excusing the non-payment of the full amount required; secondly, that there is nothing on the record to show that the Deputy Collector fixed the amount that was payable or told him to pay a particular sum and that he was misled by such order; thirdly, that there can be no question of estoppel because the petition to refund, the purchase-money proceeded on a statement that if the amount due and payable as required by the section had been paid, the amount ought to be paid over to the purchaser. He states that the Deputy Collector assumed a jurisdiction to set aside the sale on grounds which are not warranted by the very facts which he sets out and that, consequently, he has acted without jurisdiction by misdirecting himself upon the question of law. The contention for the respondent is that there is sufficient material on record to show that the petitioner before the Deputy Collector's Court was not aware of the exact amount payable; that he applied for information to the Deputy Collector; that the Deputy Collector who might have refused information or assistance did render the assistance that was required, and that the question, therefore, as to whether the party was misled is a question of fact which was within the competence of the Deputy Collector to decide and, having decided it in favour of the applicant, there is no want of jurisdiction or irregularity in procedure. It is also contended that the question as to whether the purchaser is estopped or not is a question of fact which it was in the competence of the Deputy Collector to decide. Questions were also raised as to whether section 131 of the Estates Land Act precludes an application to set aside a sale for irregularity. It was argued that having regard to section 192 of the Act which makes section 311 of the Civil Procedure Code inapplicable (owing to its not being included in the category of the sections enumerated), it was open to the Deputy Collector to go into the question of irregularity also. The question as to whether a sale could be set aside on the ground of irregularity under the Estates Land Act is not free from doubt but I think it is unnecessary to decide that question in this application because, if the sections of the Code are applicable, the present application being only to set aside the sale under section 131 of the Estates Land Act, which corresponds to section 310 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code, it is not competent to the Court to go into any question of irregularity in the sale. I do not, therefore, say anything further on this point.

As regards the question as to whether the petitioner in the lower Court was misled by an act of Court, I agree with the contention raised by Mr Varadachariar. I have already stated the facts attending on the payment of the money. There can be little doubt that the Deputy Collector on the 10th of April, when the petitioner applied and asked to know how much the actual amount payable by him, asked the office to find out the amount due and that Rs. 15-8-0 was paid, as appears from the record, on that date. I think it is a fair inference to draw from this fact that Rs. 15-8-0 was paid in consequence of the office informing the petitioner that Rs. 15-8-0 was the amount that was due and which he had to pay to make up the amount payable under the Code. It, therefore, seems to me that the amount which the petitioner paid was the amount which he paid on information given by the Court as to the amount payable. In his petition to set aside the sale he says that he was not served with any papers before the sale and if this statement is true—and there is nothing in the record to show that it is not so—he could not have known the exact amount payable except from what he heard; so that he would have had to apply to somebody for assistance in ascertaining the amount. He chose the person most competent to give details, namely, the Deputy Collector, and the Deputy Collector helped him in ascertaining the amount. It cannot be said that he had any reason to believe that the office had given an amount which was incorrect and, even assuming that he had any doubts, he was justified in acting on the statement of the office in preference to what he might have thought was the amount that was payable.

On these facts, the question is whether the delay ought to be excused. Mr. Ramachandrar Iyer concedes that, if the mistake was a mistake of the Court and if the party was misled, then it will be a ground for excusing the payment after time; but he states that there is nothing to show that the Deputy Collector gave the petitioner any information by which he was misled. I have given my reasons for holding that the petitioner was misled by the figures given on application by him to the Deputy Collector. This is not a case where the petitioner applies to an irresponsible officer for information but where he applies to the Court which ordered the sale for ascertainment of the amount payable by him, and such information was given by the Court. Under these circumstances, I think that the principle in Abdul Latif Moonshi v. Judub

AMLA NAND v. NANDA

Chandra Mitter (1) and Makbool Ahmed Chowdhury v. Bayle Sabhan Chowdhury (2) applies. Reference has been made by Mr. Ramachandra Iyer to Chundi Churan Mandal v. Banke Behary Lal Mandal (3), but there is nothing in that case which overrules the principle of the decisions in 25 Calcutta referred to above. Maclean, C. J., begins his judgment by stating that he "did not intend to lay down, as an absolutely hard and fast rule, that, if the 5 per cent on the purchase-money and the amount specified in the proclamation of sale were not paid within the thirty days, the Court was powerless to set aside the sale."

He also states that he is "not prepared to say that, if the judgment-debtor has been misled by a mistake of the Court, the consequences of that mistake ought to fall upon him." The other Judges also take the same position. Jenkins, J., observes that "it is essential to the respondent's success that it should be established that he has been prejudiced by the act of the Court and that the mistake that has been made is attributive to that act;" and he states that "what constitutes an act of the Court must depend on the circumstances of each case."

If I am right in holding that the petitioner in the lower Court depended upon the statements made by the Deputy Collector, I think that the present case falls within the ruling enunciated and there can be no want of jurisdiction or error which will entitle me to set aside the order of the lower Court. I do not, therefore, think it necessary to go into the other question of estoppel.

In my opinion, there is no ground for interference with the order which also I think is right on the merits. C. R. P. Nos. 783 and 894 of 1922 are dismissed with costs, and C. R. P. No. 893 of 1922 is also dismissed but without costs.

Miscellaneous Reference from the Deputy Secretary to Government, United Provinces, dated the 9th August 1923, under rule 4 of the Rules and Orders relating to the Kumaon Division.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Applicants.

Mr. Bhargava, for the Opposite party.

JUDGMENT.—This reference raises a somewhat difficult question but, as we understand the matter, we are asked to say whether the law relating to pre-emption, as laid down in a ruling of Mr. Giles, officiating Commissioner of Kumaon, in the case of Datt Ram v. Raghunath, decided on the 11th July 1892, is or is not to be applied to the case with which we are concerned.

It seems that both the Deputy Commissioner and the Commissioner sitting in appeal have differentiated this case from the one which was considered by Mr. Giles in the ruling just referred to.

Taking the law to have been correctly laid down in Mr. Giles' judgment, we find it stated as follows:—

"For the purposes of pre-emption the asl village and the laga village are one. A hissedar of a laga village has no right of pre-emption against a purchaser who is a hissedar of the asl village."

AMLA DIN v. NANDU

If this ruling is to be applied literally to the facts of the case with which we are now dealing, it seems to us that the claim of the pre-emptor in this case must be disallowed, for his status, at best, appears to be merely that of a hissedar of a laga village whereas the person who is now the purchaser of the property, namely, Amla Nand, is a hissedar of the asl village.

We have been referred to a little book called, the Manual of Land Tenures in the Kumaon Division compiled by Mr. Stowell.

In this book we find an asl mauza defined as being the chief or parent village to which the lagas or subsidiary villages, are attached. The definition winds up by saying that the asl village and lagas are held under one revenue engagement.

Reading the judgment of Mr. Giles in the light of this definition, we take it as laying down, therefore, that where the asl village and the laga village are held under one revenue engagement the hissedar of the laga village is not entitled to pre-empt against the hissedar of the asl village.

It is said, however, in the present case that the village Rauthiya, in which the property sold is situated, does not really stand to Khandoli, the village in which the purchaser Amla Nand resides, in the relation of a laga to an asl village. In the judgment of the first Appellate Court this village Rauthiya is described as pakka kharikar laga and it is said that it has its own separate Settlement map and "phant." Mr. Mason, the Deputy Commissioner, (District Judge), describes Rauthiya as being really a separate fiscal unit.

It is not clear from this description whether the learned District Judge intended to find that Rauthiya was separately assessed to revenue and was not included in the same revenue engagement as the other village Khandoli.

The Commissioner, as Judge of the High Court of Kumaon, agrees with the opinion of the first Appellate Court. Indeed, his judgment would lead us to believe that he intended to find that this village of Rauthiya is not at all a alaga village but a village quite independent of the other village of Khandoli. In his judgment the learned Commissioner is unable to say how this village came to be recorded in the revenue papers as a laga or off-shoot of Khandoli. He certainly seems to think that it can be nothing of the sort.

It appears to us that the whole question of the right of pre-emption in this case turns upon the relation which is to be traced between these two villages Rauthiya and Khandoli. If they stand to each other in the true relationship of asl and laga villages, that is to say, if they are both held under one revenue engagement, then we are of opinion that the customary law as found by Mr. Giles in his judgment in Datt Ram v. Raghunath ought to be followed in this case. In other words, the claim of the pre-emptor ought to fail and ought to be dismissed.

On the other hand, if it be the fact that these villages are not truly related as asl and laga villages but that the village of Rauthiya is a separate fiscal unit as described in the judgment of the first Appellate Court, then we are of opinion that the pre-emptor in this case has a better right than the purchaser Amla Nand.

We should like to add that a right of pre-emption must, in the absence of Statute, be based either on contract or custom. No contract has been suggested in this case. Presumably, the right claimed is based on customary law. In the absence of any statutory enactment or any entry in a public record of right, the custom may be deduced from a long series of decisions. When a rule of custom is deduced from previous judgments we are of opinion that the rule deduced therefrom should in no way be departed from merely on the ground because it is now thought more equitable or convenient that a new rule should prevail.

As regards costs in this, Court we leave the parties to bear their own.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 172 OF 1922.

November 3, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Baker, J. C.Must. GIRJABAI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
*versus*PURUSHOTTAMDAS AND OTHERS
—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) s. 11—Res judicata—Suit dismissed—Findings adverse to defendant.

A decision cannot be said to be based on a finding unless an appeal can lie against that finding and it cannot operate as res judicata unless the decision upon such a finding is appealed against. [p. 148, Col. 1.]

A suit for ejectment against a sub-tenant was dismissed on the ground that the defendant was not served with a valid notice under law. It was pleaded that the defendant was an occupancy tenant not a sub-tenant as alleged and the plea was found against defendant. In a subsequent suit for ejectment the defendant is not to be precluded by reason of res judicata from pleading that he is an occupancy tenant. [p. 148, Col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nimar, in Civil Appeal No. 91 of 1921, dated on 11th January 1922.

Dr. H. S. Gour and Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, who is the owner of the Malik Makbuza fields in suit, sued to eject the defendants on the ground that they were sub-tenants. The defendants pleaded that they were occupancy tenants and not liable to ejectment. The first Court held that the defendants were occupancy tenants and could not be ejected. On appeal the District Judge of Nimar held that the defendants were sub-tenants but they could not be ejected by virtue of an agreement between them and the plaintiff, constituting a permanent tenancy. The suit was, therefore, dismissed.

The plaintiff makes this second appeal, and the respondents (defendants) have put in a cross-objection against the finding of the lower Appellate Court that they are sub-tenants.

The principal contention of the appellant in this appeal is that the question as to the nature of the defendants' tenancy is res judi- cata by reason of the judgment in case No. 78 of 1917, between the same parties, in which it was held that the defendants were sub-tenants, but the suit was dismissed on the ground of want of notice. The plaintiff then, after giving notices, brought the present suit. The learned District Judge was of opinion that the findings about the status of the defendants in suit No. 78 were not necessary for the determination of the case because the plaintiff's suit was bound to fail in any case for want of notice; hence the issue about the status of the defendants was not material. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the issue was material because if the defendants were occupancy tenants they could not be ejected in any case and the question of notice did not arise, hence the ruling quoted by the lower Appellate Court, Deodhar v. Thakur Nihalsingh does not apply.

The appellant relies on Peary Mohun Mukerjee v. Ambica Churn Bandopadhyaya (2). In that case, however, the facts were the converse of the present case because the plaintiff, whose suit was dismissed, had a right to appeal against all the findings of which he did not avail himself and consequently in his second suit the finding on all issues was held to be res judicata. The present case is on all fours with Thakur Magundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo Singh (3). In that case the plaintiff brought a suit to eject the defendant from certain lands, which he claimed as majhes land, or land which is ordinarily cultivated by the landlord himself or by the ticcardar. The defendant pleaded his right of occupancy. The Court found that the land was majhes land, but dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove notice to quit. Afterwards, the plaintiff brought a suit against the defendant for ejectment from the same land. The defendant again pleaded his right of occupancy. It was held that the defendant was not precluded from raising the same plea, inasmuch as the finding in the previous suit upon the issue whether the defendant was an occupancy tenant was not conclusive against him; nor could that issue be said to have been "finally decided" in that suit within the meaning of section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code. This is precisely similar to the present caso. The plaintiff sued the defendants alleging that the defendants were the sub-tenants. The defendants set up their occupancy right. This issue was found against them but the suit was dismissed because the plaintiff failed to prove notice to quit. Now, when the plaintiff, after giving notice, again sues for ejectment, the defendants are not precluded from setting up their right as occupancy tenants, the reason being that the decision in suit No 78 was not based on the finding that the defendants were sub-tenants but on want of notice. A decision cannot be said to be based on a finding unless an appeal can lie against that finding, for the suit having been altogether dismissed the defendants could not have appealed against the finding regarding their tenancy as the plaintiff did not himself appeal against the decree in that suit. The same principle has been followed in Parbati Devi v. Mathura Nath Banerjee (4). I hold, therefore, that the question of the defendants being sub-tenants is not res judicata.

With regard to the right of the plaintiff to eject the defendants the plaintiff has put in Exhibits P-6 and P-7, of which Exhibit P-6, dated 6th December 1888, recites that at the expiration of 17 years' lease (Ex. P-7) the defendants are to remain in possession on payment of the stipulated rent as long as they please, and are only liable to ejectment on failure to pay rent. So long, therefore, as the defendants pay their rent, they cannot be ejected, being permanent tenants.

It is now contended that this lease was executed by the Mukhtyar of the plaintiff's predecessors in title who were parda nashin ladies and the guardians of the minor and that not being in the interest of the minor it is not binding on the present plaintiff. It has not been contended in the Courts below that it was fraudulent and no such plea can be considered now. The plaintiff's suit must, therefore, fail.

As regards the cross-objection, it is contended that the evidence shows that the defendants were in possession of the land in suit, which is situated in the Nimar District, on the 1st January 1884 when C. P. Act IX of 1883 came into force and, therefore, they were occupancy tenants. The leading case on this point is Tejsingh v. Lalji (5), in which it was held that, under section 41 of Act IX of 1883, every person in Nimar who was already a tenant of land of any kind, was an occupancy tenant irrespective of the period for which he had been a tenant. If he became a tenant after the Act came into force, then, too, he would at once become an occupancy tenant if he was not a sub-tenant. But a person who became tenant of a malik makbuz after the 1st January 1881, would be a sub-tenant under section 51 (1) of the said Act. But even in Nimar, this right of occupancy in a malik makbuz holding is further subject to the proviso that the tenancy is not held under a written lease of the kind mentioned in proviso (c) to section 41. Assuming, however, that the defendants were occupancy tenants under the Statute on the date of the coming into force of Act IX of 1883, they cannot now claim that status because in Exhibit P-6 it is laid down that the occupancy rights in the land vest in the landlord, and whatever rights the defendants possessed, they must be considered to have surrendered them to the landlord in consideration of the execution of the permanent lease (Exh. P-6). The result is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is confirmed and the cross-objection is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Rawalpindi, dated the 4th July 1912.

Mr. Sagar Chand, for Mr. Anant Ram, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs contest a sale of land situate at Bamlot in the Kahuta Tahsil of the Rawalpindi District, which was effected by their cousins in 1909. Their suit has been dismissed, the Courts below having concurred in finding that the sale was effected for necessity. The plaintiffs have filed a second appeal.

The sale was for Rs. 500 and the payment of the full price is found to have been proved.

The learned District Judge is wrong in saying in his judgment that the sale was effected by three persons, namely Khiali, his brother Maulu and their cousin Hari Chand, for the sale-deed shows that the sellers were only Khiali and Hari Chand and not Maulu. Consequently, the argument advanced on behalf of the appellants that there was no necessity for the sale so far as Maulu was concerned has no force.

With regard to Hari Chand, the finding of the lower Appellate Court is that he was a cripple and incapable of working, and that his share of the price was required for his personal necessities.

This is a finding of fact and cannot be contested in second appeal. As to Khiali it is found that he took the money in order to put it into the plaintiff Ram Kishen's shop at Muktsar in which he had joined or was going to join. It is contended for the appellants that this was not a necessary purpose, and reliance is placed on Santa Singh v. Waryam Singh (1) but I think the learned District Judge is right in holding that that ruling is not applicable to the present case. The case relied upon related to an alienation by a Jat, and the learned Judges who decided it remarked that they had no doubt that village custom would not look with favour upon the conversion of a Jat agriculturist into a shop-keeping trader and would not countenance an alienation of ancestral land in order to enable such agriculturist to carry on the business of the shop. The parties in the present case are Brahmins and, although it has been found that the members of their community cultivate land and follow custom, it appears that they have been settled in the village in which the land in suit is situate only since about 1805. The rule prevailing among Jats, who have been agriculturists from time immemorial, that an alienation of ancestral land for the purpose of raising money to be invested in trade is not permissible, cannot, I think, properly be applied to the community of Brahmins to which the parties belong. Moreover, neither of the vendors in this case cultivated land. Hari Chand, as already stated, did no work and Khiali is employed in the police. It is also in evidence that land in the Kahuta Tahsil is inferior and that crops are very uncertain.

I agree with the learned District Judge that the sale by Khiali was for necessity.

The appeal, therefore, fails and I dismiss it with costs.

Rule against an order of the District Judge, 24 Parganas.

Babu Sitaram Banerjee, for the Petitioners

Babu Girijaprasanna Roy Chowdhry, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order of the District Judge, 24 Parganas, setting aside a sale held in execution of a decree of the petitioner. The sale was held so far back as the 7th October 1915 and the present application was presented by the opposite party for setting aside the sale under O. XXI, r. 90, on the 20th April 1922. The Court of first instance found that the property was sold for an inadequate price, that the decree-holder was the purchaser, that the sale processes were duly served, and that the judgment-debtor had given up possession of the land to the decree-holder by an amicable arrangement. On appeal, the learned District Judge has recorded his finding in the following words: "I am inclined to hold that the petitioners are still in possession and that they were not aware of the sale proceedings. The sale proceedings were irregular. The properties were misdescribed and sold for an inadequate price. The decree-holders were the purchasers. The appeal will be allowed and the sale set aside." It is argued that these findings are not sufficient. In my judgment, this objection ought to prevail. The sale was held seven years ago. The judgment-debtors came to Court with the allegation that they were kept back from the knowledge of the sale by the fraud of the decree-holder. The case can only be taken out of the bar imposed by the law of limitation by proof of such fraud. The finding that the judgment-debtors were not aware of the sale proceedings is not enough to attract the operation of section 18 of the Indian Limitation Act. There should be a further finding that they were kept back from the knowledge of the sale by the fraud of the decree-holder. It is clear that such fraud must be distinctly and clearly found in order to extend the period of limitation prescribed under the Limitation Act. The judgment of the learned District Judge is so short and laconic that it is difficult to ascertain if he had directed his mind to the entire evidence in the case and the points arising in it; for instance, the Munsif has found that there was a due publication of the sale proclamation. The learned Judge has not said a word with reference to that finding though it may be very important in determining the question whether the judgment-debtors were aware of the sale or not.

It is next contended by the opposite party that it is not a proper case in which I should interfere under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. Speaking for myself, I am always reluctant to interfere in such matters. But I consider this case to be an exceptional one in that the result of the setting aside of the sale would be that the petitioners would lose all the benefit that they have got under their decree the execution of which would now be barred by limitation. Equities being equal on both sides, I think it is a proper case to exercise my discretion. In support of the view I have expressed and of the course I have adopted I may refer to the case of Kailash Chandra Halder v. Biswanath Pramanio (1).

The result is that this Rule is made absolute, the order of the Court below set aside and the case sent back to the Court of appeal below for rehearing of the appeal and the determination of the matter in dispute according to law. The costs will abide the result. I assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

When a Revenue Court, dealing with a proceeding for the enhancement of rent under section 108 (5) of the Oudh Rent Act, makes a declaration under section 107 II of the Act that the tenants are under proprietors in relation to the land in dispute, a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit by the Zemindar for a declaration that the persons declared to be under-proprietors by the Revenue Court are not under-proprietors. The jurisdiction to make such a declaration is vested exclusively in the Revenue Courts. [p. 152, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh, dated 27th May 1922.

Mr. Radha Kishan, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh, dated the 27th May 1922. The appellant was the plaintiff in the Court below. His suit has been dismissed. The relief for which he prayed was a declaration that the defendants were not under-proprietors of the lands in suit. Those lands are specified with reference to their number and area at the foot of the plaint and are situate in Mauza Oripur Nangir, Pargana Ateha, District Partabgarh. The plaintiff is the taluqdar and, consequently, the superior proprietor of the village. The defendants are admittedly in possession of the lands in question measuring 75 bighas, 16 biswas and 2 biswansis in all. They pay to the plaintiff rent for the occupation of those lands at the rate of Rs. 86 per annum.

The estate of the plaintiff was under the management of the Court of Wards on account of his minority when in 1907 the Court of Wards instituted proceedings for enhancement of rent against the defendants and their predecessors in interest under section 108, clause (5), of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886). In answer to the claim for enhancement of rent the defendants set up a patta dated Asarh, Badi 5th, 1251 Faslî in favour of one Durga Prasad who, they alleged, was their ancestor, and executed by one Sarabjit Singh. On the basis of his patta they claimed to be the under-proprietors of the lands in suit. These proceedings finally terminated with the order of the Board of Revenue, dated the 28th May 1909. The effect of that order was a declaration of the defendants' status as under-proprietors in relation to the lands in dispute. The Board further proceeded to assess rent by making an addition of 40 per cent. on the land revenue to the existing rent. The plaintiff is aggrieved with this order of the Board of Revenue and the object of the present suit is to get rid of it. The only defence with which we are concerned is that the Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to entertain a suit of the nature of which the present suit is. These pleadings gave rise to the preliminary issue—"Is the suit not cognizable by the Civil Court for reasons specified in para. 13 of written statement?" With the consent of the parties the lower Court has decided this issue only and has answered it against the plaintiff and in favour of the defendants. This decision of the Court below has been challenged in appeal before us.

We are of opinion that the decree of the Court below is correct and should be maintained. The decision of the Board of Revenue, to which reference has already been made is specifically founded on section 107 of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886). Under that section the Rent Court is invested with the jurisdiction of making a declaration that the holder of the land is the under-proprietor thereof if the Court finds that it has been held in terms of the conditions stated in that section. It is desirable to quote the exact words of the Board's order:—"If this lease be accepted as creating a valid tenure, the land was acquired in perpetuity by a written instrument and for a valuable consideration and section 107H, therefore, applies." The Board further found "that Sarabjit Singh was competent to grant the lease under which the respondent has held since and that, therefore, the second paragraph of section 107H, applies." (Ex. 11). Prima facie, therefore, the Board of Revenue was competent to grant the declaration in respect of the status of the defendants as under-proprietors of the lands in suit in proceedings under section 107H, already mentioned. It is argued, however, that the jurisdiction conferred on the Rent Courts by the terms of section 107H, is controlled by the proviso mentioned in section 107B, of the same Act and that the present case falls under the last proviso, which is as follows:—"Provided also that nothing in this section shall apply to any grants to which the provisions of section 79 of the United Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1901, are applicable." The contention is that the present case falls within section 79 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, 1901, and consequently the Board of Revenue had no jurisdiction to make the declaration which they have made. The line on which the argument proceeds is that the entire Chapter VIIA of the Oudh Rent Act deals with three classes of suits alone: (1) suits to resume possession of, (2) to have rent assessed on, and (3) to enhance the rent of, any land held rent free or at a favourable rate of rent, vide section 107A. Under section 107B, a suit of any of the three classes mentioned above is barred if it involves any grant to which the provisions of section 79 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, 1901, are applicable.

This line of argument seems to us to be perfectly sound so far as it goes. But the exception contained in the proviso mentioned above relates to the three classes of suits already mentioned as the opening clause of section 107B, clearly shows, "all land held rent free or at a favourable rate of rent shall be liable to resumption or assessment or enhancement of rent." The provisions of section 107H., however, specifically provide for a proceeding which is neither of resumption, nor of assessment, nor of enhancement of rent and for an order founded on that proceeding. It relates to a case where land is not liable to resumption under section 107E, and necessitates an inquiry as to whether it "has been held rent free or at a favourable rate since the 13th day of February 1856, or for fifty years, and by two successors to the original grantee, and land which was acquired, in perpetuity, in consideration of the loss or surrender of a right previously vested in the grantee, or by written instrument and for a valuable consideration." If on inquiry the conditions stated above are found to exist, the Court is enjoined to make a declaration that the holder of such land is the under-proprietor thereof.

§ Section 108 provides that, "except in the way of appeal as herein provided, Courts other than Courts of Revenue shall not take cognizance of the following description of suits, and those suits shall be heard and determined in Courts of Revenue in the manner provided in this Act and not otherwise." In the Schedule relating to the description of suits, the cognizance of which is barred by any Court other than the Court of Revenue, occurs the following clause (5A): "Suit for resumption of, or assessment or enhancement of rent on land held rent free or at a favourable rate of rent or for declaration of any right under section 107G, or section 107H." It would follow from the above that the Board of Revenue had the exclusive jurisdiction for making the declaration which they have made in favour of the defendants in respect of the lands in suit and that the cognizance of the present suit by the Civil Court is barred.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Dispossession—Burying dead bodies in land belonging to another—Injunction—Recurring right—Easement—Prescription.

An owner of waste land cannot be held to have been dispossessed by the mere fact that certain persons have been burying dead bodies in the land. At any rate, the possession of the owners is not affected in respect of that portion of the land in which there are no graves.

The right of the owner of land to restrain persons from burying dead bodies therein is a continually recurring right.

The right to bury dead bodies in land belonging to another is not an easement recognised by the law and cannot be acquired by prescription.

ADIMOOLA MUDALIAR v. MANICK MUDALIAR

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ghulam Basul, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiffs, as members of the proprietary body of Karnal, sued for an injunction to restrain defendants 1 to 3 from burying their dead in a certain plot of land 4 bighas, 12 biswas in area, which the plaintiffs said was Shamilat, as well as for a mandatory injunction for the removal of dead bodies already buried there.

The defendants pleaded that they had been in possession of the land for a long time and had always been using it as a graveyard.

The first Court found that the land belonged to the plaintiffs, that it was not a public graveyard and that the existing graves were not more than 10 years old. It granted an injunction forbidding defendants 1 to 3 to inter their dead in the land in future.

The District Judge on appeal found that the place had been used for burying purposes for probably about 20 years. He held that the plaintiffs had not proved any circumstances beyond bare ownership entitling them to an injunction and he accordingly dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs have presented a second appeal to this Court.

It is contended for the respondents that the lower Appellate Court has given no finding on the question of the title to the land, but this is not correct. The learned District Judge clearly means to find that the land is Shamilat, and as the land is recorded as "abaili deh" there can be no doubt that it belongs to the whole of the proprietary body.

It is next urged for the respondents that they have been in adverse possession for more than 12 years, but this contention also I cannot agree with. The land is waste, and the owners have not been dispossessed merely because the defendants have been burying their dead there. At any rate, the possession of the owners is not affected in respect of that portion of the land in which there are no graves.

Another argument advanced is that the suit should have been brought within six years from the time when the defendants began using the land as a burial ground, and that, not having been brought within that period, it is time-barred. This argument has no force as the plaintiffs are not pressing their claim for an injunction for the removal of the bodies which have been buried in the disputed land. Their right to sue to restrain the defendants from burying bodies there in future is a continually recurring right, and this claim is not barred.

The reasons given by the learned District Judge for refusing an injunction are that the land is of no use to the owners and that the advantage to them in granting the injunction is out of all proportion to the distress that it would inflict on the defendants. But there is a regular graveyard elsewhere, and when it has been found that the land in dispute is not a regular graveyard, that it has been used by the defendants for burying their dead for only about 20 years and that it belongs to the proprietary body of Karnal and not to the defendants, the fact that the latter would be distressed or annoyed at being forbidden to bury their dead there in future is immaterial. An injunction prohibiting them from doing what they have no right to do is not to be refused merely because it would distress them. The learned District Judge has remarked at the end of his judgment that if the case were remanded the defendants might be able to prove that they had used the land for burying purposes for more than the statutory period, but his view that they could acquire by prescription a right to bury the dead in land belonging to other persons is not correct. In Gopal Krishna Sil v. Abdul Smad Chaudhuri (1), cited by Counsel for the appellants, it was held that such an easement is unknown to the law.

The fact that the proprietors have no present use for the land is also not a reason for refusing an injunction. The land is just outside the town of Karnal, and it is impossible to say that the proprietors might not require it at some time for building or other purposes. At any rate, they are entitled to protect their rights, and to prevent persons to whom the land does not belong from using it as a graveyard, and they are not precluded from doing so by the fact that they did not object to bodies being buried there on previous occasions. To refuse an injunction in this case would be tantamount to extinguishing the owners' rights in the land altogether.

I accordingly accept the appeal, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and restore that of the first Court. Defendants 1 to 3 will pay the plaintiffs' costs in this Court and the lower Appellate Court. Costs in the first Court will be paid as directed by that Court.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908) s. 5-A—Wrong legal advice, whether sufficient ground for extension—Discretion in allowing time-barred appeals, when to be exercised.

A wrong legal advice about the period of limitation is not a sufficient ground for extension of period under s. 5-A of the Limitation Act. [p. 155, col. 1.]

When the time for appealing is once passed, a very valuable right is secured to the successful litigant and the Court must, therefore, be fully satisfied of the justice of the grounds on which it is sought to obtain an extension of time for attacking the decree and thus perhaps depriving the successful litigant of the advantages which he has obtained. Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the decision of the Bench in First Appeal No. 57-B of 1921, dated 23rd February 1923.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Applicants.

Messrs. P. N. Rudra and R. R. Jaywant, for the Non-Applicants.

ORDER—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in the Privy Council against the judgment, dated 23rd February, 1923, of a Bench of this Court in F.A. No. 57-B of 1921. The petition was presented on 16th July 1923, i.e., on the 143rd day counted from the date of the judgment. The applicants have, therefore, to account for a delay of 52 days, but as on the 90th day the Court was closed on account of Civil Vacation and it reopened on 16th June 1923 the actual period of delay to be accounted for was 29 days, i.e., between the 16th of June and 16th of July 1923. Originally, the period as proscribed by Article 179 of the Schedule attached to the Limitation Act was 6 months. By amendment Act XXVI of 1920, which came into force on 1st January 1921, the period was curtailed to 90 days. Hence the application is prima facie barred by limitation.

The applicants have stated in the petition and the affidavit of applicant No. 2, Dharamchand, filed along with it, that the cause of the delay was the mistaken advice which Dharamchand got from some pleader of the Amraoti District Court, to the effect that the application could be made in 6 months. The applicants submitted that, being misled by the ill advice, they could not file the petition in time and that the delay may, under the circumstance, be therefore condoned, and the application treated as presented within time by extending limitation under the powers vested in this Court under section 5-A of the Limitation Act. On behalf of the non-applicants it is strenuously contended that they acquired a very valuable right as soon as the limitation period expired and that that right should not be taken away from them unless very strong and cogent reasons are assigned for the delay. It is also urged that the bad legal advice does not constitute sufficient cause for excusing the delay.

We have scrutinized the terms of the affidavit filed, and we find that it does not clearly state the several facts that were necessary to convince us as to the bona fides of the belief alleged to have been generated in the mind of the applicant No. 2 by the ill advice he got from a District Court Pleader. The applicants were represented in the First Appeal by an eminent Counsel practising in this Court who, we presume, was conversant with the provisions of the new amended Act (XXVI of 1920), and, if the applicants instead of consulting him or any other lawyer practising in this Court who had frequent occasions to deal with petitions for leave to appeal to His Majesty in the Privy Council, go and consult a District Court practitioner, who may not have had occasion to deal with the matter, they must thank themselves for the mistake. We think that the mistake was one which, with due care and attention, the applicants could have avoided. The applicants do not, for reasons best known to themselves, like to disclose the name of the pleader whose ill advice they say had misled them. We cannot, therefore, accept the statement of facts alleged in the affidavit as a true statement of facts that really prevented the applicants from making this petition within the time limited by the amended law of limitation.

We think that the non-applicants' contention that this valuable right should not be lightly taken away, has great force, supported as it is by a long series of decisions both English and Indian.

In In re Coles and Ravenshear (1), Collins, M. R., held that "where through a mistake of Counsel as to the effect of certain provisions of law an appeal was not brought until after the expiration of the time thereby allowed for appealing there was no sufficient ground for granting special leave to appeal." That learned Judge quoted, at page 5 of the report, what Lord Halsbury, L. C., said in the case of In re Helsby (2) "The rule gives the Court power under special circumstances to extend the time for appealing. Here there are in my opinion no special circumstances. A mistake was made by a clerk of the appellants' Solicitors. If that is a 'special circumstance' then in every case in which a blunder has been made about the time for appealing the time ought to be extended. I do not think that is the meaning of the rule." The following observations of late James, L. J., were also quoted with approval: "that a party has a vested right in an order of the Court in his favour, and ought not to be deprived of an advantage given to him by the rules unless there has been on his part some conduct raising an equity against him, or in a case of inevitable accident. I cannot see that a mistake made by the Solicitor of the party who is applying for an extension of time is a sufficient ground for extending it." It will thus be seen that whether the mistake be of the clerk or of the Counsel, that does not make any difference in principle.

This principle has received ample recognition at the hands of the Indian Courts also, and we would only cite Babu Ganesh Deshmukh v. Sitaram Martand (3), Karsandas Dharmasey v. Bai Gangabai (4), where Sir Lawrence Jenkins pointed out that, "when the time for appealing is once passed a very valuable right is secured to the successful litigant, and the Court must, therefore, be fully satisfied of the justice of the grounds on which it is sought to obtain an extension of time for attacking the decree and thus perhaps depriving the successful litigant of the advantages which he has obtained."

We entirely concur in this statement of the law. Particularly as we are not satisfied as to the truth of the allegations in the affidavit much less of the bona fides thereof, we decline to exercise our discretion in favour of the applicants who seem to be negligent in the extreme. Compare Vitha v. Suya (5), Kelarnuth v. Zumberlal, (6)

The application stands dismissed with costs. We fix Rs 50 as Counsel's fee in this petition for each of the non-applicants.

Will—Gift—Construction of document—Will or gift.

If, under a document purporting to be a gift and handed over to the alleged donee, the donee gets nothing until the death of the donor, there is no disposal of any immediate rights of possession or any immediate interest in the property, the document is a Will and not a deed of gift.

The fact that the document purports to reserve a life interest in the property to the donor is not a decisive circumstance against its being a Will.

Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastry, dated the 30th day of August, 1922, in the exercise of Ordinary Original Testamentary Jurisdiction of the High Court in T. O. S. No. 11 of 1921.

Messrs. B. Sitarama Rao, K. P. Ramakrishna Iyer and K. B. Ranganada Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. K. Doraiswamy Aiyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

The Chief Justice.—This is an appeal from a judgment of Kumaraswami Sastry, J., in which he found that a document dated November 16th, 1913, described as a gift-deed was in fact a Will. He found that it was duly executed and declined to go into the question whether certain property which passed under that document had been disposed of between the date of the Will and that of the death of the testatrix. There was ample evidence as to the execution of the document, three witnesses being called who swore that they saw the testatrix affix her mark in their presence. He believed that evidence and I can find no reason for suggesting that that decision is wrong. The question whether the document is a Will or a gift is more difficult. It is contended that it is in effect a deed of gift operating in presenti and not a Will at all, and that as it is a deed of gift in respect of immoveable property which has not been registered, it is void and has no effect. A Will is defined in section 3 of the Probate and Administration Act, V of 1881, as,—

"the legal declaration of the intentions of the testator with respect to his property which he desires to be carried into effect after his death."

This document which, as I have said, is described as a gift deed, purports to dispose of part of a house. The relevant portions of the document are as follows :—

" You shall yourself after my life-time, use and enjoy the two rooms built on the ground of the house Municipal No. 11 * * * I shall myself enjoy the rent in respect of those two rooms as long as I may be alive. You shall yourself use and enjoy after my life-time that rent and that ground and the two rooms from son to grandson and so on in succession with power to gift, mortgage, exchange, and sale. No one has any right to or interest in those rooms. To this effect is the gift-deed document executed and given in respect of the aforesaid two rooms and their ground."

In form it is a deed of gift and not a Will, but in fact it is a declaration of the intentions of the donor with respect to her property which she desires to be carried into effect after her death, because there is no disposal of any immediate rights of possession or any immediate interest in the property. The fact that the document purports to reserve a life interest in the property to the donor is an argument against its being a Will, but, as was pointed out by the Privy Council in Thakur Ishri Singh v. Thakur Baldeo Singh (1), no great attention need be paid to that, because it is a frequent thing in this country to find documents which are in fact Wills in terms making clear that the person disposing of the property reserves a life or immediate interest in the property. The various things to consider in arriving at a decision as to whether a document is a Will or a gift are discussed in that judgment on page 800. The document before their Lordships was different to this, but there were certain matters in common between the two which were relied upon by their Lordships, and, in particular, the fact that the document in that case did not purport to give to anybody any possessory or present interest until the death of the donor. A clear instance of a document which should be held to be a gift or a deed of settlement, and not a Will, is to be found in the case of Rajammal v. Authiammal (2), where the donor gave to his wife and daughter-in-law, the latter of whom was claiming maintenance, some property and provided that that property during his life time should be held by the donees for him, that they should receive Rs. 5 per month until his death and that after his death they should have the property absolutely. It was held that that was a deed of gift and not a Will. We have to consider the proper interpretation of this document, and I have come to the conclusion that it is really a Will and not a deed of gift, and I mainly base that view on the fact that the donee gets nothing until the death of the donor. It is true that the document was handed over to the donee, but I find nothing inconsistent with its being a Will in that fact.

Lastly, it is contended that the legacy granted by this Will has been redeemed by reason of the property having been sold after the date of the Will to the defendant. I am not clear on the judgment whether the learned Judge intended to give any decision on that point. It is said that it is covered by the sale-deed Ex. II whereby the testatrix sold certain property to the defendant. I am not satisfied that it is covered by it; in fact, on an examination of the documents and the further evidence, it seems clear that it is not. But that is a matter which it is not necessary to decide now. If and when the legatee tries to obtain possession of the property, there is nothing in this judgment or in the judgment of the Court below to prevent the defendant, if so advised, from setting up that this legacy has been in fact redeemed.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Waller, J.—I agree. I would only add that in my opinion the question whether the testatrix had power to dispose of the property does not arise in a proceeding of this kind.

Where a suit is dismissed in default and an application is made for the restoration of the suit, the Court ought to institute an enquiry into the merits of the application and should not surrender its jurisdiction to the dictation of the defendant.

On a suit being called on for hearing plaintiff's agent after informing the Reader of the Court, went to call Counsel who was present in the compound of the Court, but before the agent or Counsel could return to the Court-room the suit was dismissed for default. On an application for restoration of the suit being made the defendant agreed to the restoration of the suit provided the plaintiff paid Rs. 800 to him. Order.—This is a plaintiff's appeal. It arises out of a suit for the recovery of possession of certain immoveable property. The suit was instituted on the 30th May 1921 and was valued at Rs. 6,000. After many adjournments due to the absence of the defendants, issues came to be framed on the 22nd November 1921. The first issue was as to limitation and involved questions as to the date of the plaintiff's birth. The 17th December 1921 was fixed for the plaintiff's evidence on that issue. The evidence, however, began on the 31st January 1922. On that date the plaintiff examined three witnesses. The case was again adjourned. On the 23rd February 1922 the plaintiff examined one more witness and closed his evidence. On the same day the defendants examined three witnesses on their side. The case was then adjourned to the 27th March 1922 when the defendants examined one more witness. It was again adjourned for the 26th April 1922. On that date the defendants examined more witnesses and the 5th July 1922 was fixed for further evidence. When the case came up for hearing on that date the plaintiff was found to be absent. His suit was dismissed for default. The Court professed to have acted under O. XVII, r. 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure. On the following day the plaintiff applied for restoration of his suit to its original number. This application was accompanied with an affidavit. It came to be decided on the 25th November 1922. The defendants expressed their consent to the restoration of the plaintiff's suit provided he paid them a sum of Rs. 300. The Court without exercising its own judgment accepted the defendants' terms and ordered the restoration of the suit on condition of the plaintiff's paying the sum mentioned above at any time previous to the date of hearing following the order. The 15th January 1923 was then fixed for the defendants' further evidence. On that date the plaintiff asked for time for payment of the sum which he had been ordered to pay on the 25th November 1922. Time was granted to him and the 26th February 1923 was fixed in the case. The plaintiff paid Rs. 90 to the defendants and the case was adjourned to the 6th April 1923. On the last mentioned date the plaintiff asked for more time. The Court refused the prayer and dismissed the suit for the reason that the plaintiff had failed to pay the costs as previously ordered.

Now the real question for determination is whether the Court below was right in passing its order of the 25th November 1922. I am of opinion that it was not. It should have instituted an inquiry into the merits of the application of the 5th July 1922 and not surrendered its jurisdiction to the dictation of the defendants. Indeed, the order of the Court to the 25th November 1922 discloses the fact that the Court was prepared to accept the truth of the allegations in the affidavit accompanying the application. The affidavit was a short and simple one. It stated that the plaintiff's Counsel appeared in the Court-room several times and was awaiting for the call of his case in the compound of the Court buildings, that as soon as the case was called up the pairrokar informed the Reader of the Court, went out to bring his pleader and brought him back and finally that as soon as the pleader appeared it was found that the case had been dismissed in default. The Court says: "The applicant swears that his Vakil was somewhere outside the Court buildings but did not appear when the case was called."

The plaintiff had throughout been diligent in the prosecution of his suit. He gave evidence and appeared all through while the evidence of the defendants' witnesses was being recorded and the case was at that stage when on the 5th July 1922 this unfortunate order was passed. The plaintiff had engaged a Counsel who, according to the affidavit, was present for the most part of the time in the Court-room itself but at the precise moment when this particular case was called up for hearing he happened to be outside the Court. The plaintiff's pairokar rushes out of the Court-room to fetch him. He comes back but finds that the suit had been dismissed in default. To my mind, the facts stated above are proved by the record and by the affidavit. There is no counter-affidavit and, as pointed out above, the Court below seems to be of the opinion that the affidavit filed on behalf of the plaintiff is not untrue. It should always be borne in mind that, "rules of procedure are not made for the purpose of hindering justice." Indrajit Pratap Bahadur Sahi v. Amar Singh. (1)

It was argued on behalf of the respondents that the plaintiff accepted the order of the 25th November 1922 and offered to comply with it by paying a portion of the amount of costs awarded against him by the Court below. In the circumstances in which the plaintiff was placed by the order of the Court, he had no choice left. In any event, an order which to my mind was wholly improper and is now being challenged before me cannot be condoned by reason of the plaintiff's acquiescence in it for some time and, in the circumstances, over which he had no control.

I, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Court and remand the case to that Court with directions that it be restored in the register of the pending suits in that Court and be decided according to law. The appellant will have his costs from the respondents in this Court. The other costs will abide the event Limitation Act (IX of 1903), Sch. I, Art. 14—Adverse possession—Co-sharers—Transferee from co-sharer, suit by, to recover possession—Limitation.

In the case of co sharers the possession of one co-sharer is the possession of all, and if one of them sets up a prescriptive title against the others, he must prove that his possession was openly hostile to the latter and that it could not be lawfully referred to a legal title as co-sharer.

But a transferee or an assignee from a co-sharer does not by the mere fact of transfer or assignment become a co-sharer if his rights as such are denied by the other co-sharers. A suit by such transferee or assignee to recover possession of the share transferred to him from the co sharers of his transferor or assignor must, therefore, be brought within twelve years of the date of the transfer or assignment in his favour.

Second Appeal against the decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Karnal, dated the 12th May 1923.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—After hearing arguments on both sides I am of opinion that this appeal must succeed. The suit was one for possession of a 1/10th share in a certain house at Panipat which the plaintiff claimed to have purchased from one Taiji by a sale-deed executed by the latter in his favour on the 23rd of February 1897. The defendants who are the other co sharers, denied that Taiji had any share in the house or that he had sold it to the plaintiff. It was further contended that the suit was barred by limitation, inasmuch as the plaintiff had never been in possession of the share in dispute from the date of its purchase. The trial Court did not give any findings on the merits but dismissed the suit on the preliminary ground that it was barred by limitation. On appeal the learned Senior Sub-Judge came to a contrary finding and held that it had been proved that the plaintiff had been in joint possession of another 1/5th share in this house with the defendants and that consequently no question of limitation arose in this case. He further held that if Taiji was a co-sharer the plaintiff, as his assignee, would also be a co-sharer and the fact that he had not been in possession from the date of the sale would not be of much consequence. He accordingly accepted the appeal and remanded the case to the Court of first instance for decision on the merits. Against this decision the defendants have come up in second appeal to this Court through Mr. Shamair Chand and I have heard Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan on behalf of the respondent.

It is argued by Mr. Shamair Chand that the finding of the learned Senior Sub-Judge that the plaintiff was in joint possession of a 1/5th share in this house with the other co-sharers is not based on any evidence and must, therefore, be set aside. Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan, on the other hand, contends that there is evidence on record in support of this finding and that the finding being one of fact cannot be impugned in Second appeal. I have carefully read the evidence on which reliance has been placed by Mr. Mehr Chand and I am unable to agree with him that it supports his contention. It is true that some witnesses have stated that the plaintiff sold a 1/5th share in the house to one Sultan Singh and that the latter sold it in turn to Ramji Lal and Moti, defendants; but it is not at all clear how the plaintiff acquired this share. It is stated that this share originally belonged to one Khairati, and that he transferred it to the plaintiff. There is neither any sale deed on the record, nor any other oral evidence from which the fact of this alleged sale could be deduced. In any case, the evidence relied on in no way proves the plaintiff's contention that he or his successors in interest have ever been in possession of this 1/5th share. I must, therefore, hold that the finding of the learned Senior Sub-Judge is not based on any evidence and that it has not been established that the plaintiff has been in possession of any portion of the house in dispute since the date of his purchase.

No authority has been cited by the learned Vakil for the respondents in support of his next contention that the plaintiff, as an assignee, has the same rights and privileges which his assignor had in the property. It is true that in the case of co-sharers the possession of one co-sharer is the possession of all and that if one of them sets up a prescriptive title against the others he must prove that his possession was openly hostile and that it could not be lawfully referred to a legal title as co-sharer; but I fail to understand how a transferee or an assignee can, by the mere fact of transfer or assignment, become a co-sharer if his rights as such are denied by the other co-sharers. It is beyond doubt that if the assignor has not transferred possession of the property assigned to his assignee the latter, in order to succeed in a suit for possession, must sue within 12 years from the date of his assignment, and that a suit against his assignor would be barred if he comes into Court after that period. It would be absurd to hold that the claim which would obviously be barred against the assignor would be within limitation if brought against the other co-sharers, who do not even recognize the right of the assignor to assign in favour of a third party. In my opinion there is no force in this contention, and I must overrule it.

Finally, it was contended by Mr. Mehr Chand that the site in dispute was a vacant piece of land and that the case was, therefore, governed by the principle that possession went with title. This contention, however, is negatived by the plaintiffs' own allegation in the plaint where he stated that the property in suit was not a vacant site, but a residential house. In my opinion the plaintiff has entirely failed to prove his possession within 12 years prior to the institution of the suit, and the claim is clearly barred by limitation.

I accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

Second Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 29th January 1923, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st class, Sonapat, District Rohtak, dated the 30th October 1922, dismissing the claim with costs.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shamair Chand, Advocate for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—It can hardly be said that a question of law is involved in this second appeal and if there is a question of custom, the appeal is not competent as there is no certificate. The facts are few and simple, and are briefly as below:—

The plaintiffs who are Jat agriculturists are the surviving brothers of Hira, the father of the defendant Jai Lal. On the death of Hira, Jai Lal, his only son, succeeded to his estate which was duly mutated in his name. Some time after that, Nihal, a first cousin of Hira, adopted Jai Lal as his son by a registered deed dated the 19th April 1917. Jai Lal's uncles, the plaintiffs, then moved the Revenue authorities for mutating his land in their names stating that he had lost his right to his natural father's inheritance in consequence of adoption by Nihal, but the mutation was refused. In the order refusing the mutation Jai Lal's reply to his uncle's claim was stated to be that he could give up Hira's land on succeeding to Nihal's estate which he had not so far done. Nihal died in 1921 and Jai Lal then succeeded to his estate. The plaintiffs brought this suit for possession of Hira's land on the old ground that Jai Lal had lost his right to succeed to it. But he had succeeded to it before the adoption and, therefore, there was no question of losing the right of succession. The real question was whether, by virtue of the adoption which took place subsequently to the succession, he could be divested of the property which had already devolved upon him on the death of his natural father. The rule of Hindu Law or custom according to which an adopted son is deprived of the right of inheritance in his natural family cannot apply where succession to the natural father's estate precedes the adoption. The plaintiffs in order to succeed in their suit should have established a special custom by which the defendant was liable to be divested of the property that had devolved upon him before the adoption. On this point they examined only two witnesses neither of whom had been adopted after the death of his natural father and deposed that he gave up the lands of his natural father on being adopted. This evidence, coupled with Jai Lal's own statement before the Revenue Officer cited in the order of mutation, has been considered by the Courts below insufficient to establish a general rule of custom and that finding cannot be interfered with. Further, it may be remarked that the adoption of a married orphan who was the only son of his natural father was not valid according to Hindu Law.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

No. 1—PETITIONER*versus*NISHI CHANDRA SIL AND OTHERS
OPPOSITE PARTIES.Pleadings—Decree can be given only on case made by plaintiff—Amendment.

No Judge should give a decree to a plaintiff on a case which is not made in the plaint. If the Judge disbelieves the case as made in the plaint he should dismiss the suit; or in the interest of justice he may give the plaintiff an opportunity to amend the plaint.

Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Petitioner.

Babu Narendra Kumar Das, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—Two grounds have been taken in this case. The first is that the learned Judge was wrong in giving a decree to the plaintiff on a case which was not made in the plaint. This has prejudiced the defendant as he was unable to meet the plaintiff's case as placed before the Judge and accepted by him. The allegations in the plaint are to the effect that the plaintiff had some money deposited with defendant No. 2 and that the plaintiff had taken Rs. 100 out of the money in order to pay certain taxes on timber cut by him. With regard to this case the Judge observes as follows: "This 'Rs. 100 described as plaintiff's money kept in deposit with defendant No. 2, but defendant No. 1 took that as a loan from defendant No. 2 and then promises to pay to the plaintiff. This of course is not proved.'" Having disbelieved the plaintiff's case as set out in the plaint, the learned Judge proceeds to determine whether anything is due to the plaintiff from defendant No. 1 and he finds that Rs. 100 was due from the defendant No 1 to the plaintiff on account of taxes on timber cut from the forest belonging jointly to the plaintiff and one Latifa Khatun. His further finding is that the defendant promised to pay this Rs. 100 to the plaintiff and he gave the plaintiff a decree. In my opinion, this is not the correct procedure to follow. If the Judge disbelieved the case as made in the plaint, his course was to dismiss the suit; or, if he was of opinion that in the interest of justice the plaintiff should be given an opportunity to amend the plaint, he should have given that permission so that the defendant might have notice of the case alleged against him and opportunity to meet it.

The second point is that on the findings of the Judge the suit is not cognizable by the Small Cause Court. The Judge has found that the money was payable to the plaintiff on account of taxes on timber cut. On the authority of the decision of this Court in the cases of Abdulah Sarkar v. Asraf Ali Mandal (1) and Bande Ali Fakir v. Anud Sarkar (2) it is contended that a suit for recovery of royalty on timber cut is not cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. I do not know what the real contest between the parties was as it has not been disclosed on account of the plaintiff not making out this case in the plaint. This point really depends upon the first contention of the petitioner. I think that the proper order that should be passed in this case is that the case should be remitted to the Court below with a direction that if the Court is of opinion that the plaintiff has not proved his case as made in the plaint, he should dismiss the suit, or if it be of opinion that the plaintiff should be given an opportunity for amending his plaint, he should give such leave and give the defendant an opportunity of taking all objections that he may be advised to take in respect of the amendment so made.

The Rule is made absolute. Costs will abide the result. I assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Plaintiff sued to recover a sum of money on the basis of a document which was in the following terms:—

“We have Rs. 900 of yours in deposit with us. We shall pay interest on it at the rate of ten annas per cent.”

Held, that the document did not contain any un-conditional undertaking to pay the principal sum of money and the only undertaking given was to pay interest at the rate of ten annas per cent. coupled with an acknowledgment of the debt; it was not, therefore, a promissory-note within the meaning of section 4 of the Negotiable Instruments Act.

Assignment is a transfer of an estate or interest in property, and no particular words are necessary to effect an assignment, provided the intention to transfer is clear from the language used.

Rama Iyer v. Venkatchallam Patter, 30 M. 75; 1 M. L. T. 829; 16 M. L. J. 564, relied on.

The words “I have sold the document” are sufficient to effect a complete assignment of the debt represented by the document.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Hissar, dated the 18th September, 1923.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Nawal Kishore, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Prabhu Dayal borrowed a sum of Rs. 900 from one Bishambar Dyal and executed a pro-note in his favour on the 23rd of December 1913. On the 3rd of October 1916 he paid a sum of Rs. 275 to Bishambar Dyal and the latter on the 31st of August 1922 is alleged to have assigned the document to the present plaintiff who brought a suit on the basis thereof on the 3rd of October 1922, impleading both Prabhu Dyal and Bishambar Dyal as defendants. The suit was resisted by Prabhu Dyal on the ground that he had paid off the money due on this document to Bishambar Dyal and that nothing now re-mained due. He further contended that the document was not a pro-note and, therefore, not negotiable. The validity of the assignment was also challenged and it was contended that the plaintiff had no locus standi to sue. Bishambar Dyal at first admitted the claim but subsequently, after the issues had been framed, resiled from his previous statement and contended that the alleged assignment was not for valid consideration. The trial Court decreed the suit, holding that the alleged repayment of the loan by Prabhu Dyal to Bishambar Dyal had not been established, that the document was a pro-note, and that the assignment was valid.

On appeal the learned District Judge agreed with the Sub-Judge's finding that the evidence as to repayment was not at all convincing and that the defence subsequently put forward by Bishambar Dyal was false. On the other two questions, however, the finding of the learned District Judge was in favour of the defendants and it was held that the document was not a pro-note and that it had not been validly assigned to the plaintiff. As a result of this finding the suit was dismissed.

Plaintiff has now come up in second appeal to this Court. I agree with the finding of the learned District Judge that the document is not a pro-note. A promissory-note is defined in section 4 of the Negotiable Instruments Act as an instrument in writing containing an unconditional undertaking signed by the maker to pay a certain sum of money to or to the order of the said person. The document in question in the present case is in the following terms:—“Age rupai nau sau tum-hare hamare pas jama hainge. Biyaj dar das anne sainkra denge.” There can be no doubt that the document does not contain any unconditional undertaking to pay the principal sum of money and the only undertaking given is to pay interest at the rate of ten annas per cent. per mensem. The document clearly seems to be an acknowledgment of a debt and not a promissory-note within the meaning of section 4 of the Negotiable Instruments Act.

The next question for consideration is whether the assignment was valid or not. On this point I am unable to agree with the finding of the learned Judge of the Court below that the words on the back of the document amount merely to an endorsement and that they do not constitute a valid assignment in favour of the plaintiff. The endorsement in question is worded as follows:—"Is rugqa ko wasul karne ka malik Nanak Chand haiga. Main ne rugqa ko Nanak Chand hath baichdia haiga. Dastkhat Bishamber Dyal. Miti Bhadon Sudi 9, Samat 1979." Immediately after follows another endorsement to the following effect: "Is rugqa ke rupai biyaj Nanak Chand Kishori Lal seti le lie. Dastkhat Bishambar Dyal. Rupai Sab our biyaj le lie. Dastkhat Bishambar Dayal. Bhadon Sudi, 9 Sambat 1979." The endorsement is also thumb-marked by Bishambar Dyal. In Wharton's Law Lexicon an assignment is defined as a transfer of an estate or interest in property and it is stated that the usual operative verb is "assign", but any other word indicating an intention to make a complete transfer, for example, "convey" will also amount to an assignment. In Rama Iyer v. Venkatachellam Patter (1) the learned Judges observe that no particular words are necessary to effect a transfer if the intention to transfer is clear from the language used. In section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act a transfer of an actionable claim can be effected by the execution of an instrument in writing signed by the transferrer and shall be considered to be complete and effectual upon the execution of such instrument. In the present case the words "rugqa ko Nanak Chand hath baich diya haiga" clearly indicate that a complete assignment has been effected. In my opinion the assignment in writing was valid and it did give the plaintiff a right of suit upon the document in question.

I accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of the Court below, decree the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Allahabad High Court Rules, Ch. III. r. 3—Appeal—Evidence, absence of—Certificate not filed—Ground, whether can be argued—Custom—Blacksmith, additions made by, to dwelling—Zemindar, failure of, to object—Acquiescence—Renewal of additions.

Rule 3 of Chapter III of the Allahabad High Court Rules is imperative, and unless the certificate required by the rule is present, the ground referred to in the rule cannot be argued in spite of the fact that the appeal has been admitted to a hearing. [p. 165, Col. 1]

When an addition made by a blacksmith to his dwelling is allowed to exist by the Zemindar without any objection for several years, the presumption is not only that the Zemindar has acquiesced in the addition being made but that he has accepted it as a reasonable appurtenance of the blacksmith's dwelling, and if the construction comes to an end the latter has a right to replace it. [p. 165, Col. 2]

Second Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Jaunpur, dated the 17th of March 1922.

Messrs. Haribans Sahai and S. S. Sastry, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kumuda Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant is the zemindar of village Sari. The defendants-respondents are two blacksmiths living in the same village. The plaintiff sued to eject the defendants from a saiban, a dalan and a shed on the allegation that these were recent constructions upon his land. The defendants are tenants and residents in the village in which they have a house. They carry on business as blacksmiths there. The Munsif found that one of these structures was an old one and dismissed the suit in respect of it. He decreed the blacksmith's ejectment from the two others. The blacksmiths appealed to the learned Subordinate Judge. The zemindar did not appeal in respect of the dismissal of the portion of his suit. The learned Subordinate Judge decided as follows:—He found that the two structures from which the Munsif had ordered the defendants' ejectment were at least eight years old. He continued, "I am satisfied that these constructions were in the place of the old ones and so the plaintiff did not protest when the new ones were built in place of the old ones and now owing to a criminal case he has lodged the suit." What he meant by the latter part of his finding was that the blacksmiths had got themselves disliked by the zemindar by giving evidence in a criminal case contrary to his views. The learned Subordinate Judge then dismissed the whole of the suit. The zemindar has appealed in respect of the two buildings from which the Munsif ordered the blacksmiths to be ejected. He takes the position that there was no evidence on the record to support the finding that these two structures were made in the place of old ones. This ground of appeal is not open to him under the High Court rules—see Rule 3, Chapter III, as no certificate is filed.

"If the ground of appeal is that there is in fact on the record no evidence or admission to support the decree, the ground shall so state, and shall further state specifically the material finding in support of which there is no evidence or admission on the record.

"No appeal from an appellate decree presented by an Advocate, Attorney or Vakil shall be admitted on any such ground as is in this rule referred to, unless such Advocate, Attorney or Vakil certifies under his hand the memorandum of appeal that he has examined the record and that, in his opinion, such ground is well founded in fact."

Now it is urged to me that as the appeal was admitted for hearing by a learned Judge of this Court it is not open to me to apply that rule and that, in any circumstances, I could permit the certificate to be filed now. I read the rule as imperative. Unless the certificate is present the matter cannot be argued in spite of the fact that the appeal has been admitted to a hearing. It does not follow that the appeal was admitted on this ground, for there are other grounds which have been argued. In respect of the second point that I might allow the certificate to be filed now I note that this appeal was filed on the 10th of July 1922. The certificate should have been filed within, at the most, a few months. I hold a strong view that it is no use making rules unless one keeps them and that if a rule of this Court is disobeyed and the Court allows it, as I am asked to do, to be complied with some 18 months afterwards, the rule is not likely to be very effective, for it will always be possible to break the rule at first, and to comply with it two or three years afterwards.

I now take the appeal upon the other points. It is urged by the learned Counsel for the appellant that on the finding of fact the appeal should succeed. His case is that acquiescence gives no title. This argument is beside the point. What I find the Subordinate Judge to have concluded is this, that constructions similar to these had existed for some twelve years for the convenience of these blacksmiths upon the sites on which they now stand, and the only conclusions to be drawn from the fact that the blacksmiths worked in the village are that these constructions were for their use in carrying on their trade or business or in some way accessory to it. As the original constructions had been made many years ago the obvious presumption is that the zemindar, not only had acquiesced in their having been made but accepted them as reasonable appurtenances of the blacksmiths' dwellings and when those constructions came to an end the blacksmiths had every right to replace them as they were before. I find that they have replaced them as they were before on the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge. His conclusion is, therefore, correct and I dismiss this appeal with costs.

The question whether a certain acknowledgment which was given of a debt was given in order to supply evidence of such debt within the meaning of Art. 1, Sch. I, of the Stamp Act and, if so, whether it would be admissible in evidence without being stamped is not one of public importance or of great private importance, nor can a decision on the point be regarded as an important precedent governing numerous other cases, so as to render it a fit one for granting leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council under section 109 (c), where the value of the subject-matter of the appeal is less than Rs. 10,000.

JUDGMENT.

The Chief Justice.—This is an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council in a case which is under Rs. 10,000. The question, therefore is whether, under section 109 (c) of the C. P. C. we can certify it to be a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Council.

To quote my own words in Raja Rajeswara Sethupathi v. Tirunelakandam Servai (1): "What is contemplated is a class of cases in which there may be involved questions of public importance, or which may be important precedents governing numerous other cases, or in which, while the right in dispute is not exactly measurable in money, it is of great public or private importance." The point in dispute in this case is whether a certain acknowledgment which was given of a debt was given in order to supply evidence of such debt within the meaning of Art. 1 of Sch. I of the Stamp Act, because, if so, not having been properly stamped, it would not be admissible in evidence at all. We held, following other cases, that the question for determination was whether the dominant intention of giving that acknowledgment was to supply evidence of the debt or something else; and we held that, under the circumstances of this particular case, it was not the dominant intention and, therefore, the acknowledgment was admissible. This may be right or may be wrong in law, or it may be the right or wrong view of the facts of the case. But I cannot think that it is a case of public importance or of great private importance; nor do I think that it is an important precedent which would govern numerous other cases. The point has been decided before, and most of the cases on the subject are on the same lines as this judgment. I do not think that this is a case within the meaning of the section. If it is desired to litigate this point before the Privy Council we still have to wait until a case of sufficient magnitude and importance to make it appealable has arisen.

This application must be dismissed with costs.

BRIJ BALLAB DAS v. MAHABIR PRASAD

Mr. Mushtaq Ahmad, for the Applicants.

The opposite parties were not represented.

JUDGMENT.—We think that this application in revision ought to succeed. We do not think that the learned Judge was justified in rejecting the application on any ground, and he certainly was not justified in rejecting it on the ground which he has given. A mistake in the final form of an order may well be due to an original mistake made by the party or his lawyer in making the application. That is not a reason for refusing to correct a mistake, otherwise there would be no object in the legislature giving the Courts jurisdiction to correct mistakes. Mistakes of the kind which may be described as clerical, or due to an oversight between a decree nisi and a decree absolute, are in the majority of cases the mistake or slip of the party who sets the Court in motion. The application made to the learned Judge was a very ordinary one for amendment, and it ought to have been decided on the merits. We take it that the learned Judge was satisfied that there had been a mistake. He says that if there was one, it was in the application, which looks as though he thought there was one. The result was that the order which followed the application was in a mistaken form, and the decree which followed the order, followed the same mistake. It might happen in a suit that a claim for Rs. 100,000 in a plaint was said to be Rs. 200,000 by a slip of the pen, which nobody noticed and which is carried throughout the whole suit from the plaint down to the decree. Nobody can doubt, and it has been decided over and over again, that a mistake of that sort begun in the plaint and carried right through the proceedings without being discovered, can be corrected in the decree. We, therefore, think that the learned Judge ought to have made the amendment. We are not prepared ourselves to make it, because in addition to the verbal alterations necessary, we are asked to direct a resale. A resale seems necessarily to follow from what we are directing to be done. But to prevent any possibility of further mistake, we prefer to indicate what we think ought to be done, and leave the Court below to do in the presence of anybody who chooses to come and object. If the purchasers, as we are told, themselves asked for a correction of the decree, they cannot be heard to object to it now. But the Court, before making any order for resale, ought to give the purchasers an opportunity of being heard. We direct the case to be returned to the lower Court and to be taken up forthwith as a miscellaneous application after notice to the parties, and we direct the lower Court to entertain the application for inserting into the decree absolute the names of Hoshyar Singh and Chhajju Mal so as to bring the decree in this respect into conformity with the decree nisi. Secondly, to strike out one of the 2-3rds. That is to say, to direct in the decree absolute that 2-3rds of the property, and not 2-3rds of 2 3rds shall be sold, as recorded in the new khewat No. 25, and, lastly, to make such order for resale as appears to the Court below to be right, and to be such as the Court below would have made, if it made the decree absolute in the form which we now direct it to be made. The applicant must have the costs of these proceedings in the Court below up to the present date and of the proceedings which we have directed further to be taken.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 12, 21—Contract to grant lease—Specific performance Compensation in money, whether adequate—Intention of Legislature.

The Legislature did not intend that persons who entered into contracts to transfer or lease immovable property should be allowed to escape from them to suit their own convenience by alleging that the person in whose favour the contract was made could be compensated in money. The explanation to section 12 of the Specific Relief Act requires the Court to presume that such compensation cannot be adequate unless and until the contrary is presumed. [p. 168, col. 1 and 2.]

RAMASWAMI CHETTIAR v. ADAPPA CHETTIAR

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Appellants.

Mr. L. P. Zutshi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Judge has gone wrong over this case. The language may be, to persons to whom it is not familiar, somewhat difficult to apply, and it is useful to have a complete knowledge of the whole Act before selecting one passage from a particular section, and construing that by itself. The learned Judge seems to think that the fact that the plaintiffs were able to put into the terms of a money sum, the compensation for the loss which they would probably suffer if they could not get the lease that they wanted, was in itself equivalent to saying that such sum was adequate compensation. It is quite clear that the plaintiffs did not say that. In fact, the plaintiffs really said just the reverse. They asked for specific performance, and it was only in the final alternative that they claimed a sum to recoup their loss as estimated by them as damages if their claim for specific performance was not allowed. But the plaintiffs were claiming what they were prima facie entitled to, namely, a lease of a particular shop, and there may be many reasons why they desire and are willing to pay for a particular shop, and why they are unable to do more than give a rough statement of the loss which they will suffer if they do not get it, preferring the shop to any form of pecuniary compensation. If the matter, or rather the meaning of the word "adequate," is to be judged from their point of view, then it is clear that they do not consider it adequate, otherwise they would ask for the money and not for specific performance. The foregoing reasoning seems to show that the word "adequate" in section 21 must be adequate in the mind of the Court, for some reason found as a fact and stated by the Court for holding it to be adequate, in spite of the opinion of the plaintiffs that it is inadequate. The illustration in section 12 is a useful guide to what is meant. If one looks first at the illustration to section 21, sub-section (a), which the learned Judge was construing, one will see that it deals with moveable property and with contracts of a commercial nature. But turning back to the explanation to section 12, it is clear that the Legislature did not intend that persons who entered into contracts to transfer or lease immoveable property, should be allowed to escape from them to suit their own convenience by alleging that the person in whose favour the contract was made, could be compensated in money, because that explanation requires the Court to presume that such compensation cannot be adequate unless and until the contrary is proved. There is really no suggestion in the judgment of the learned Judge that he approached this point of view. If he had done so, he would probably have hesitated to make the order which he has done. He only refers to the fact that similar shops are available for which the plaintiffs would have to pay higher rent. 'The plaintiffs' answer to this is, that they do not want them unless they are compelled to take them, or one of them. We should have preferred to hear the case argued by the respondent representing the view which the learned Judge has taken, but we have no doubt that the appeal must be allowed and the judgment of the first Court restored with costs here and below, with costs in this Court on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 10—Suit for dissolution of partnership—Death of defendant—Son's application to be brought on record out of time on account of amendment of Limitation Act—Parties, adding of.

In a suit for dissolution of partnership after the preliminary decree was passed, the defendant died on 30th September 1920 and his son applied on 6th January 1921 to be brought on the record. Meanwhile, the Limitation Act was amended so as to reduce the period of limitation for applications under Art. 177, from 6 months to 90 days:

Held, that, in the circumstances of the case, and in the interests of justice, all parties interested should be added under O. I, r. 10 Civil Procedure Code.

RAKIMJAN v. AMAR KRISHNA CHOUDHURY

Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order, dated the 21st March 1921, of the Court of the District Munsif of Devakotta, in I. A. No. 102 of 1921, followed in O. S. No. 526 of 1919.

Mr. T. R. Srinivasa Rajagopala Iyengar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. T. R. Srinivasa Iyengar, for Mr. E. Doraiswamy Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was one for dissolution of partnership. A preliminary decree had been passed and all that remained to be done was to take accounts and pass a final decree. At this stage the defendant died on the 30th September 1920. One of his sons applied on the 6th January 1921 that he and his brother might be brought on the record. He would have been in time if the Limitation Act in force at the commencement of the action, had not been amended by the alteration of the period prescribed under Art. 177, Limitation Act, from six months to ninety days. The Court was closed for Christmas holidays and, a few days after it reopened, the petitioner made this application. In a suit of this nature the distinction between plaintiffs and defendants is not so marked as in suits where only the defendant must pay if the plaintiff obtains a decree.

It was essential that all parties concerned should be on the record and the Court could have, under O. I, r. 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure, added any person whose presence was necessary for finally determining the matters in issue (Vide Lakshmichand Rewachan v. Kachubhai Gulabchand (1). The petitioner was two days late in his application.

He might reasonably have expected that the plaintiff or the Court would have taken steps to bring the representatives of the deceased defendant on the record. There was also the circumstance that the limitation period had been reduced, a fact of which it is not shown that he was aware.

Under all these circumstances, I cannot regard the action of the lower Court in dismissing both the application and the subsequent petition to set aside abatement as taken with a due exercise of discretion and in the interests of justice.

I set aside the order in question and direct the District Munsif to add the legal representatives of the deceased defendant and proceed with the suit.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Ch. X, s. 108 B (3)—Suit for rent—Non-agricultural land—Record of Rights, entry in, whether admissible in evidence.

Although non-agricultural lands are not subject to the provisions of Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, an entry in the Record of Rights with respect to the amount of rent of such land, is admissible in evidence, in a suit for the recovery of rent, as corroborative of other evidence in the suit, although the weight to be attached to such entry would depend on the circumstances of each particular case.

JUDGMENT.

Page, J.—In this second appeal the only question that arises is as to the amount of rent for which the decree ought to have been passed in favour of the landlord. The landlord claimed that the rent in respect of the tenancy in question was fixed at the rate of Rs. 7 per annum. The tenant, on the other hand, claimed that the rent was Rs. 2-4. In the trial Court the plaintiff himself gave evidence orally to the effect that the rent was Rs 7 ; and among the documents filed in the trial Court in this case, was a Record of Rights in which, in respect of a particular plot which was specified by a particular number in the Khatiam, and which the plaintiff claimed, was the land which is the subject-matter of the tenancy in question, the rent was entered as Rs 7. However, the learned trial Court came to the conclusion that there was a pottah and there was certain dakhilas which purported to show that rent was payable and had been paid in respect of a tenancy at the rate of Rs 2-4 as urged by the defendant, and he came to the conclusion that the pottah and the dakhilas referred to the premises in suit and passed a decree for rent at the lower rate. In the lower Appellate Court a different conclusion was arrived at, and the grounds upon which the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court based his conclusion that the higher rate of Rs. 7 ought to be the rate at which rent should be recovered by the plaintiff were two-fold, the first ground being that whereas there were three different plots leased by the plaintiff to the defendant in respect of one of which the rent was Rs 7, with respect to another Rs 2-4 and with respect to a third Rs 2-2, the defendant had not attempted to identify the pottah and the dakhilas as being referable to the land in suit in the present case. He, therefore, came to the conclusion that that evidence was valueless for the purpose in hand, namely, for the purpose of discovering what was the rate at which rent was payable in respect of the premises in suit. I have been pressed by this fact that the defendant had applied before the trial that a local investigation should be held as to the area of the land in question. That application was rejected upon the ground that the predecessor-in-title of the defendant who had had an opportunity of making the application had refrained from doing so, and that, at the time when the application was made, it was too late and that it was unreasonable that it should be granted. I am not satisfied that that was the proper manner in which that application ought to have been treated. But if the local investigation was not permitted, it must have been obvious to the defendant that it had become all the more important for him satisfactorily to identify the plots in question in this suit, with the plots in respect of which the pottah and the dakhilas were created. The learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court, nevertheless, has come to the conclusion, to use his own words, that "the identity of the pottah land with the rent land was not even attempted to be established" and the dakhilas, even if genuine, do not contain anything to show that they were given in respect of the rent of land in suit. In these circumstances, I am not disposed to come to the conclusion that the decision at which he arrived on this matter was wrong.

The second ground upon which the learned Judge in the Court below based his disagreement with the decree passed in the trial Court was that if you look at those khatians to which the attention of the Court was not apparently drawn at the trial, it will appear that they were evidence which satisfactorily corroborated the oral evidence given by the plaintiff to the effect that rent was fixed at the rate of Rs. 7. As regards that matter the learned Vakil for the appellant has urged that the lands in question in this case being non-agricultural lands were lands which were not subject to the provisions of Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that, therefore, no entry in respect of such lands could properly be made in the Record of Rights and he contends, therefore, that the entry in the Record of Rights must be disregarded as being altogether inadmissible. In my opinion, this contention is not sound. Under section 103B (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act "every entry in the Record of Rights so published," that is, published in accordance with the provisions of the Act, "shall be evidence of the matter referred to in such entry and shall be presumed to be correct until it is proved by evidence to be incorrect." Now, this question arose for consideration in the case of Sasi Kanta Acharjya v. Sandhya Moni Dasya (1). In that case two points were taken—one, that the land in question being non-agricultural was not subject to the Bengal Tenancy Act and, therefore, no entry in the Record of Rights could properly be made with respect to it. The Court decided against that contention and held that the lands were subject to the Bengal Tenancy Act. The second question which was raised and decided in that case was that, assuming that the lands were not subject to the Bengal Tenancy Act and, therefore, no entry could properly be made in respect of them no presumption, as set out in section 103 B (3), as to the correctness of the entries could arise. It was not contended in that case that the entries were not admissible in evidence, but it was urged that, although they might be admissible, no presumption as to the correctness could be made. The learned Chief Justice at page 485 observes: "The learned Vakil for the defendant has supported his proposition that if an entry has been made in the Record of Rights with regard to land which does not come within the scope of the Bengal Tenancy Act and with regard to which the Revenue Officer had no jurisdiction to make the entry, no presumption arose under section 103B (3) Bengal Tenancy Act. I am not prepared to go so far as to say that in this case no presumption arose from the entry in the Record of Rights, but I am prepared to say that the presumption could not be of such great weight as would be the case if the entry were with regard to matters which are rightly and properly included in the Record of Rights." Now, applying the proposition laid down by the learned Chief Justice to the facts of this case, in my opinion, the fact that in the Record of Rights the rent of the land in suit is entered as being Rs. 7 was admissible in corroboration of the evidence given by the plaintiff that the rent of the premises had in fact been fixed at Rs 7. The weight to be attached to that corroborative evidence is a matter which, with all the other circumstances in the case, the learned Judge was entitled to take into consideration before deciding what was in fact the rate at which the rent of the premises had been fixed. In these circumstances, and for the reasons which I have given, the issue in this case in the end turns out to be one of fact as to whether, having regard to the evidence adduced on one side and on the other, the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court could reasonably have reached the conclusion at which he arrived. In my opinion, there was evidence before him which would justify him in arriving at the conclusion to which he came and in my opinion, for these reasons, this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

WASI FATIMA BIBI v. ABDUL GHAFFAR KHAN

Second appeal against the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, exercising the powers of a Subordinate Judge, of Allahabad, dated the 3rd March 1922.

Mr. K. Verma, for the Appellant.

Mr. Zafar Medhi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption. On the 7th December 1905 Muhammad Amin and Musammât Shakira Bibi executed a deed of transfer in favour of one Lala Gur Dayal for a sum of Rs. 700. Under this document a two-annas zemin-dari share of the lady and eight-pies zemin-dari share of Muhammad Amin were transferred. On the same date a deed of agreement was executed by Lala Gur Dayal, the transferee, which recited that he had entered into a contract with Muhammad Amin, one of the two vendors, to the effect that in case a sum of Rs. 300 were paid by him within thirty years he would be entitled to get possession of his eight-pies share and if a further sum of Rs. 750 were paid he would get back possession of the two-annas share of Musammât Shakira Bibi also.

In 1919 the present defendant-vendee obtained a sale-deed of a certain share in the same village from a number of other co-sharers. The present plaintiff instituted a suit to pre-empt this sale-deed but while this suit was pending the defendant-vendee, namely, Abdul Ghaffar, obtained a document purporting to be a deed of gift from the said Muhammad Amin. On the strength of this deed he pleaded that he had become a co-sharer in the village and that, therefore, the suit for pre-emption was liable to be dismissed as against him. We have not been able to see the judgment which was pronounced in that case but we know this that that suit, on some ground or other, was actually decreed.

The plaintiff after that decree brought a second suit for pre-emption to recover the property covered by this ostensible deed of gift on the allegation that it really was a sale transaction.

The Courts below have found that a custom of pre-emption exists in favour of the plaintiff but have dismissed the suit on the ground that although the sale was for consideration, nevertheless it was not liable to pre-emption as the interest which it purported to pass could not be pre-empted.

The main question which arises in this appeal is whether the interest, if any, acquired by the vendee is capable of being pre-empted. The answer to the question depends on the further question whether the two documents of the 7th December 1905 taken together form one transaction of a mortgage by conditional sale or whether they represent two distinct and separate transactions, namely, one of a deed of sale by Muhammad Amin and Musammât Shakira Bibi and another a mere agreement by the vendee in favour of one of the vendors only. Both the Courts below have held that the transaction is not one of mortgage by conditional sale. We agree with the view taken by them. It is true that both these documents were executed on one and the same date which may create a suspicion in one's mind that they formed one transaction, but the Courts below have pointed out that it is not shown that the property which was transferred on that date was worth more than Rs. 700 which represented the sale consideration, and have also pointed out that the agreement was with one of the vendors only, namely, Muhammad Amin, and in his favour only. No right to recover back the property was given to Musammât Shakira Bibi or her heirs. This is a very significant feature of the transaction. It is quite inconsistent with the transaction being merely a mortgage by conditional sale for in that case both Muhammad Amin and Musammât Shakira Bibi would have been entitled to redeem, if not the whole, at least their shares of the properties. We, therefore, think that the view taken by the Courts below on this point is correct.

This being so, no interest in the immovable property has passed to the defendant-vendee under the document. There was a mere option of re-purchase arising out of the contract between Muhammad Amin and Lala Gur Dayal, which cannot be said to be immovable property. Whether the vendee has or has not acquired any right to exercise this option we are of opinion that that right cannot be pre-empted. The suit accordingly must fail. The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. S. Rangaswamy Aiyengar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

. Waller, J.—The question for decision is as to the proper construction of a partition-deed executed by two step-sisters. They inherited the properties of their father after the death of his widow. The moveable properties they divided without a deed and the immoveable properties by the deed in question. Nine years later, one of them, Janaki by name, died leaving a Will in favour of the plaintiff. The Will is disputed by the other sister who claims the property by right of survivorship. The partition deed is Ex. A. It refers to the fact that the moveable properties had already been divided, allots a decree to one sister and an usufructuary mortgage to the other and divides the immoveable properties between them. It closes with the sentence,— “Henceforth the only relationship between us will be one of friendship and not of property.”

The question is whether they intended by this expression to exclude the right of succession by survivorship. It is argued that their intention was merely to give up their present and their future rights.

The phrase used in Ex. A. is sometimes to be found in deeds of partition between males. In such cases there is no question of right of survivorship and the phrase would seem to carry no special significance. In a case like this, however, there is a question of right of survivorship and the phrase might well have been intended to carry a special significance.

Several rulings have been cited. The first is Muttuvaduganadha Thevar v. Dosasinga Tevar (1). A partition-deed was relied on in which occurred precisely the same phrase as is now under consideration. The finding was (vide p. 339) that the right renounced in the partition-deed was absolutely different from the right in contest in the subsequent litigation. The decision does not, I think, help the appellant. Here each sister renounced “henceforth” all right to the other's share and they cannot but have had in contemplation the certainty that one of them would predecease the other.

The next ruling, Gomathi Ammal v. Kuppu-thayi Ammal (2), is of no greater service to the appellant, for the finding was that the sisters could not have had in contemplation the renunciation of the right of survivorship as they believed themselves to be entitled to an absolute estate. Had they known that their estate was limited, the language of the deed—that thereafter the connection between them was to be that of blood only—might have led the Court to a different conclusion. The Munsif in this case has entirely failed to grasp the real significance of the ruling.

(1) 3 M. 290; 8 I. A. 99; 4 Sar. P. O. J. 289; 5 Ind. Jur. 438; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 757 (P. O.).
(2) 14 M. L. J. 175.

REZA ALI v. KAZI NUR-UD-DIN AHMED

The last ruling is no more favourable to the appellant. It is Su'hammal v. Krishna Aiyar (3). In that case certain expressions had been used in a deed which were not very apt to the occasion but had been interpreted by the lower Courts as excluding the right to succeed by survivorship. The High Court held that all doubt would have been set at rest had the more usual words that "the parties" henceforth had no connection of property but only of blood" been added. The Munsif interprets the ruling as meaning that it is essential that all the three expressions should be present in order to justify the inference that the right of survivorship had been renounced. He is, I think, wrong. It seems to me clear that the High Court regarded the first two phrases as being of doubtful import and the third as quite conclusive.

In the result, I think that the learned District Judge rightly interpreted the partition deed and would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Krishnan, J.—I agree that the construction placed on Ex. A by the District Judge is correct and that this appeal fails; it is dismissed with costs.

When there is no evidence that the wakif on the day he executed the wakfnama was under an apprehension of immediate death, the mere fact that he was suffering from phthisis or that he died a few days after the execution of the deed, is not enough to establish what in Muhammadian Law is technically called marz-ul-maut. In fact lingering diseases like phthisis remove the suspicion of apprehension of immediate death on the mind of the patient.

If a mutwalli does not act according to the trust imposed upon him by the wakf deed, that could not effect the character of the endowment. It cannot be said that a wakf is not good because it has not been acted upon.

The Charitable and Religious Trusts Act does not become inapplicable because the trustee has parted with the entire trust property.

A person who claims adversely to the trust and who is not liable under section 3 of the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act (XIV of 1920) is not a proper party to proceedings under the Act.

Rule against the order of the District Judge of 24-Parganahs, dated the 13th August 1923, in Miscellaneous non-Judicial Case No. 1 of 1923.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order of the District Judge of 24 Parganahs dated the 12th August 1923 dismissing an application of the petitioners under section 3 of the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act, XIV of 1920. That section authorizes any person having an interest in a trust of a charitable or religious nature to apply to Court for a direction on the trustee for certain information relating to the trust and for an examination and auditing of the accounts of the trust. The petitioners' application has been dismissed by the learned Judge as he has found that the wakfnama was executed during the death illness of the testator and that it was never acted upon.

With regard to the first ground the finding of the learned Judge is as follows: "It appears, however, that it was created when he was in death illness. He was suffering from phthisis. He may have been ill for a long time but death was near." The evidence on the record has been placed before me and the learned Vakil for the appellant assures me that there is no evidence that the wakif on the day he executed the wakfnama was under an apprehension of immediate death. The mere fact that he was suffering from phthisis or that he died a few days after the execution of the deed is not enough to establish what in Muhammadan Law is technically called Marz-ul-maut. In fact lingering diseases like phthisis have been taken by Muhammadan lawyers to remove the suspicion of apprehension of immediate death on the mind of the patient. The attention of the learned Judge is drawn to the case of Fatima Bibi v. Ahmed Bux (1). In that case the deed was executed by the deceased one week before his death, but the Courts here, as well as Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, did not think that it was vitiated by being executed during Marz-ul-maut. The law on this point is fully discussed in the judgment of this Court in the case of Fatima Bibi v. Ahmed Bux (2). The learned Judge, however, on this point found that the alienation is good to the extent of one-third. But he really throws out the petitioners' application on the ground that the document was not acted upon. By that deed the deceased wakif nominated himself Mutwalli during his lifetime and after his death the opposite party No. 1, Kazi Nuruddin Ahmed, as the Mutwalli of the trust. The learned Judge found that the trust on the face of it was good, that a substantial portion of the property was given to religious purposes and that there can be little doubt that it is a valid wakf. I cannot say how it can be held that the wakf was not good because it was not acted upon. It is nobody's case that during his lifetime the dedicator gave any indication of not acting upon this deed. After his death the opposite party No. 1 became Mutwalli of this trust by virtue of this deed, and if he did not act according to the trust imposed upon him by the deed, it would in no way affect the character of the endowment. The Judicial Committee has in several cases discussed this matter and in the recent case of Vidya Varathi Thiritha v. Balusami Ayyar (3), the Judicial Committee have laid down the power and limitations, of a trustee under the Muhammadan trust.

The learned Judge winds up his judgment by this remark: "It is the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act. It does seem to embrace a case where the trust was not acted upon and where the so-called trustee has committed so complete a breach of the trust that the trust properties have passed to a third party." I can well understand the first portion of this remark, which means that the trust when not acted upon cannot be regarded as a valid trust, but I fail to understand the latter portion of the sentence where the Judge seems to have been of opinion that, because the trustee has parted with the entire trust property, the Act becomes inapplicable. I refuse to assent to this proposition. I think that the learned Judge has not approached the case in the proper way, and that on account of the erroneous view he has taken of the law he has failed to exercise jurisdiction which was vested in him under the Charitable and Religious Trust Act.

The Rule is accordingly made absolute, the order of the District Judge dated the 13th August 1923 dismissing the plaintiffs' application under section 3 of the Act set aside and the case remitted to him for reconsideration in the light of the observations I have made above. The opposite party No. 2 (The Bengal Chemical and Pharmaceutical Company) asks for their costs. In proceedings under this Act I do not think that any person who has claims adversely to the trust and who is not liable under section 3 is a proper party. No doubt, any decision on an application made under the Act will not be binding upon persons claiming adversely to the trust. But that does not justify the Court in complicating matters by bringing persons who might raise questions outside the scope of the Act. The opposite party No. 2 is, therefore, entitled to his costs in this Court. I assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur. The costs of the lower Court will be at the discretion of that Court. The petitioners are entitled to their costs of this Court from opposite party No. 1. I assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Kistna, at Ellore, in Original Suit No. 14 of 1920.

Messrs A. Krishnaswamy Iyer and Bapirazu, for the Appellants.

Messrs. C. V. Ananta Krishna and Rama Rao, for the Respondents :—

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff and the 1st defendant are the widows of one Janakiramiah who died on the 6th of October 1919 at his village Pandithavalloor leaving property of considerable value. The plaintiff claims a partition of the property and delivery to her of a moiety thereof. The 1st defendant resists the suit on the ground that the late Janakiramiah left a Will, and the question to be decided in this suit is whether the document put forward was the last Will of the deceased. The learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that it was not executed by Janakiramiah and that it was brought into existence by the 1st defendant and others some time subsequent to his death. We have carefully gone into the evidence, and we are satisfied that Janakiramiah did not make the Will in question and that the 1st defendant is bound to fail.

The learned Vakil for the appellant commented on the judgment and suggested that it did not show that the Subordinate Judge applied his mind to the evidence before recording his finding. The judgment no doubt is far from satisfactory, but on the evidence and on the probabilities we are clearly of the opinion that the 1st defendant has signally failed to make her case.

There is one further matter which requires notice, Ex. VI is the deposition of the plaintiff's father in the enquiry held by the Sub-Registrar in connection with the registering of the Will in question. That deposition was filed in the lower Court on behalf of the defendants and apparently without objection on the part of the plaintiff. Mr. A. Krishnaswami Iyer, the learned Vakil for the appellant, urged that he could rely upon this deposition and cited Jainab Bibi Sahiba v. Hyderally Sahib (1) in support of this contention. The argument is utterly untenable. Under section 33 of the Indian Evidence Act, the evidence given by a witness in a former proceeding is admissible in a later proceeding if certain conditions prescribed by it are found to exist; and it was held in the case above cited that the person against whom the evidence is sought to be used may waive the benefit of the provisions which are intended for his security and that the strict requirements of the section may be departed from by consent of the parties. We fail to see how this case can be of any use to the appellants. They do not seek to make the evidence given by the plaintiff's father in the previous proceeding substantive evidence in the case, indeed they do not desire to rely upon that deposition at all as on very essential points it is bound to be against them. But it is relied upon for the purpose of contradicting the plaintiff's statements in her deposition in the present case. Under section 145 of the Indian Evidence Act the credit of a witness may be impeached by proof of his former inconsistent statements, and before a witness can be so impeached he must be given an opportunity of making any explanation which is open to him. To hold that a witness may be contradicted by previous inconsistent statements not of himself but of a third party would be against principle and opposed to this section.

Next, Mr. Krishnaswamy Iyer argued that Ex. VI would be admissible under section 11 of the Evidence Act. This section, in our opinion, is clearly inapplicable and the cases cited by him namely G. Yannesss v. Mohara Kannessa (2) and Nara Vinayak Patvardhan v. Narahari Bin Raggunath (3) do not seem to be any authority on the point.

It would appear that item 9 of Schedule A was alienated in the lifetime of Janakiramiah and it is excluded from partition by consent.

The extent of item 1 of B Schedule is not admitted by the appellant. But as the identity of the property is not disputed it is unnecessary to decide the extent of the land. We accept the Sub-Judge's finding as to the rate of mesne profits.

In the result, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 69, 70—Person in possession under invalid title—Mortgage paid off—Payment, whether can be recovered from true owner—Subrogation.

Where a person bona fide believing himself to have a claim to property pays off charges on that property, he is entitled to recover the amount paid by him from the true owners of the property, who ultimately get the benefit of the payment, under sections 69 and 70 of the Contract Act. A purchaser of land who, while in possession of the land purchased, pays off an encumbrance on it, is entitled, when his purchase is found invalid, to stand in the shoes of the mortgagee whom he has paid off, on the principle of subrogation.

I C—23

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are at first sight somewhat complicated, but there is only one important point in the case. It will be necessary to state the facts in extenso.

Behari and Ramratan were brothers. The first Court has found that they were separate and the point has not been contested in appeal. Ramratan's property was inherited by his widow Mst. Bhikubai. The property mentioned in Schedule A belonged to Behari, defendant No. 1, and that in Schedule B to Ramratan. On the 23rd April 1901 Behari and Ramratan mortgaged the whole of the property to Bungaji and Onkar for Rs. 1,500. On the 29th October 1910 Bhikubai executed a sale-deed in favour of her sister Ratanbai in respect of the property in Schedule B. On 23rd June 1914 defendant No. 2 Phatusa purchased two houses out of Schedule B at an auction-sale held in execution of a decree obtained by one Dasrath against Bhikubai as legal representative of Ramratan. In the sale proceedings Ratanbai put in objections which were disallowed and she then filed a suit, No. 53 of 1914, against Dasrath which was dismissed on the ground that the sale by Bhikubai was bogus. In 1916 the mortgagees, Onkar and Bungaji, brought suit No. 51 of 1916 against the present defendant No. 1 Behari, Bhikubai, Ratanbai and the auction-purchaser Phatusa on the mortgage passed to them by Behari and Ramratan. On 23rd April 1917 a preliminary decree for sale was passed. On 13th January 1920 the plaintiffs purchased the entire property covered by Schedule B from Bhikubai for Rs. 3,100, and took possession, and before any final decree was passed in the mortgage suit, they paid Rs. 3,330 to the mortgagee decree-holders in satisfaction of the mortgage-debt. The present suit is for contribution against Behari and Phatusa, namely, Rs. 1,665 plus interest against defendant No. 1, and Rs. 777 against defendant No. 2, or for sale of the mortgage property.

Defendants contended that Behari and Ramratan were not divided, and, supposing they were, Bhikubai had already parted with all her interest in the property mentioned in Schedule B and, therefore, had none to convey to the plaintiffs.

The first Court held that Behari and Ramratan were divided, that the sale to Ratanbai was nominal, that Mst. Bhikubai was competent to sell the malik makbuz field No. 338 to the plaintiffs but not the house, because it had already been sold to defendant No. 2 Phatusa; that plaintiffs had paid Rs. 3,330 to the mortgagees; that defendant No. 1 is liable to pay Rs. 1,665 with interest; that plaintiffs were not entitled to claim a charge as their payment did not fully satisfy the mortgage debt, and that, under section 69 of the Contract Act, plaintiffs were entitled to recover Rs. 777 from defendant No. 2.

On appeal by the defendants the District Judge of Khandwa set aside the decree of the lower Court and dismissed the plaintiffs' claim with costs throughout holding that they were strangers and interlopers with no right to pay off the mortgage-decree, and so cannot claim contribution from defendants. The principal question, therefore, in this appeal is whether, under section 69 of the Contract Act, the plaintiffs are persons interested in the payment of money which the defendants are bound by law to pay; or whether, under section 70 of the same Act, the payment made by the plaintiffs for the defendants was made lawfully.

I have already referred to the finding that Behari and Ramratan were separate; that has not been challenged in appeal, and it follows, therefore, that Bhikubai was competent to alienate the property.

This is a case in which the learned District Judge would have done well to have framed issues, as it would have made the judgment easier to follow.

There is a distinct finding of fact by the lower Appellate Court that the sale by Bhikubai to Ratanbai was valid and real. Consequently, the plaintiffs acquired no title by their purchase from Bhikubai. It has been argued in appeal that the finding in the mortgage-suit that the sale by Bhikubai to Ratanbai was not bogus is a finding on the pleadings only and not on evidence, and that the plea was only raised with reference to the question of marshalling. But in view of the finding of the lower Appellate Court, which is based partly on actual evidence of possession, I do not think it is open for this Court in second appeal to go behind this finding of fact, and I will, therefore, start by holding that the plaintiffs acquired no title from Bhikubai. This, however, does not, as the learned District Judge supposes, dispose of the case.

Before proceeding to consider the numerous rulings quoted by the learned Counsel for the appellants, it must be pointed out that at the time of the purchase by the plaintiffs from Bhikubai in 1920, there were two contradictory judgments in existence, in one of which the sale by Bhikubai to Ratanbai had been held invalid, and one in the mortgage-suit in which it had been held valid. The plaintiffs got possession under their sale-deed of the mortgage-property mentioned in Schedule B. There was a mortgage-decree in existence against that property as well as the property in Schedule A, and if steps had been taken to make the decree final, the plaintiffs would have had to pay off the mortgagees or they would have lost the property. The defendant No. 1 Behari was a mortgagor along with his brother Ramratan of the whole property, and the mortgagees had obtained a decree, and in execution his property was liable to be sold. As regards defendant No. 2, the position he has taken is undoubtedly inconsistent, as has been pointed out by the learned District Judge. He is a purchaser at an auction-sale held in execution of a decree against the legal representative of Ramratan. The property in his possession is also subject to the mortgage-charge, as he was a party to the decree on the mortgage.

The learned Counsel for the appellants has relied on Bindubashini v. Narendra Lal Roy (1), in which the plaintiff, who was a mortgagee of a Putni Taluk, obtained a consent decree on a mortgage-bond and paid arrears of revenue to prevent the Taluk being sold, and it was held that he was interested in the payment and was, therefore, entitled to recover the money. As he was a party to the decree that case is not on all fours with the present. There are, however, several decisions which show that when a person bona fide believing himself to have a claim to a property pays off the charges on the property, he is entitled to recover the amount, and Nobin Krishna Bose v. Mon Mohun Bose (2) is a case in point. In that case the plaintiffs, believing that they held a share in a patni, paid a part of the arrear of rent. It was afterwards found that they had no share. It was held that the defendants had taken the benefit of the payment made by the plaintiffs, that the payment was not voluntary, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the money. Again, in Radha Madhub Samonta v. Sasti Ram Sen (3) it was held that the payment of rent by a purchaser of a putni taluk, during a litigation involving his title, fell under section 69 of the Contract Act. In Serafat Ali v. Issan Ali (4) it was held that a payment in satisfaction of a decree, by a person who was a party to the decree and was bound thereby, was a payment lawfully made within the meaning of section 70 of the Indian Contract Act, although it was subsequently found that he had no interest in the property. The trend of these decisions seems to be that though a person's title in the property is subsequently found to be non-existent, he is still entitled to recover the money which he has paid for the preservation of the property, from the persons who are the actual owners, under sections 69/70 of the Contract Act.

Further, the case may be looked at from another point of view. In Chamaswami v. Padala Anandu (5) it was held that a purchaser of land, who, while in possession of the land purchased, pays off an encumbrance on it, is entitled, when his purchase is found invalid, to stand in the shoes of the mortgagee whom he has paid off. Here the doctrine of subrogation comes in. I may refer also to Tangya Fala v. Trimbak Daga (6). It is not possible in a case of this character to apply general principles of law without going into the facts, as each case must be judged on its own merits.

As regards the cases quoted by the learned Counsel for the respondents, Desai Himatsingji v. Bhavabhai (7) and Janki Prasad v. Baldeo Prasad (8), it was found, in the first case, that the payment was not made lawfully but dishonestly, and in the second, that the sale was fictitious. In the present case, as I have said, in view of the conflicting judgments, the plaintiffs may have been under a reasonable doubt as to the nature of the sale by Bhikubai to Ratanbai; they were actually in possession of the property against which the mortgage-decree had been passed, and they were justified in paying off that decree in order to protect themselves against any action by the mortgagees. The defendants were bound to pay this money. Defendant No. 2 took his share of the property subject to the mortgage-charge, and defendant No. 1 is himself one of the mortgagees. By the payment by the plaintiffs, both the defendants are relieved from their liability, at any rate, so far as regards the amount paid by the plaintiffs. I am aware that the payment has not been certified, but, in view of the receipt passed by the mortgagees, which is admitted by one of them, P. W. 5, they would be liable to a criminal prosecution if they attempted to recover this sum again. In these circumstances, I am of opinion that the case is covered by the rulings quoted above, Nobin Krishna Bose v. Mon Mohun Bose (2) and Radha Madhub Samonta v. Sasti Ram Sen (3) as also by the principle laid down in Chamaswami v. Padala Anandu (5), and that the first Court was right in holding that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover this money.

As to the payment being in full or part satisfaction of the mortgage, from the receipt, Exhibit P. 2, it appears to be in full satisfaction, while P. W. 5, the mortgagor Onkar, says it was in part satisfaction. The first Court held that it was in part satisfaction only and so did not constitute a charge on the property under section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The learned District Judge does not appear to have considered this point and, in view of the fact that the payment was not certified, and that one of the mortgagees denies the full payment, the finding of the first Court will stand.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the first Court restored with costs throughout on defendants.

First Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Meerut, dated the 5th March 1921.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. E. O'Connor, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit for sale on a mortgage.

The mortgage was executed on the 11th of January 1909 in favour of Sheikh Shahab-ud-din, the husband of the plaintiff, since deceased.

This mortgage was executed by one Muhammad Aizaz Ali Khan, the second defendant in the case. He purported to execute this deed as the general attorney of his wife Musammat Mahfuz-un-nissa who was impleaded as the first defendant.

The sum borrowed under the mortgage was Rs. 3,000. There was a personal covenant to pay and a further covenant that, in the event of failure to pay, the mortgaged property might be brought to sale. The property, it may be remarked, was the property of Musammat Mahfuz-un-nissa.

The two defendants Mahfuz un-nissa and Muhammad Aizaz Ali Khan set up separate defences. The lady took the line of defence that she was no party to the mortgage-deed. She did not deny that her husband had executed the mortgage in question, although we find a statement to this effect in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, a statement which, on our reading of the pleadings, appears to be erroneous.

The lady really sought to protect herself against the claim of the plaintiff by saying that her husband, defendant No. 2, had no authority to execute the mortgage-deed which was being sued upon. She stated that the power-of-attorney which was held by her husband had not been explained to her and was, therefore, not binding upon her.

The husband, defendant No. 2, did not deny the execution of the mortgage. He put forward a variety of pleas in order to show that the suit was not maintainable.

The learned Judge of the Court below dismissed the claim. He was of opinion, in the first place, that the plaintiff had failed to give due proof of the execution of the mortgage-deed in suit.

In the next place, he held that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the power-of-attorney, under colour of which the mortgage-deed had been executed, was a document binding on the lady. The Subordinate Judge states that there was no satisfactory proof for the purpose of showing that the document had been duly explained to the lady and that she was in a position to fully appreciate the legal consequences of her act when she executed the document.

AISHA v. MAHFUZ-UN-NISSA

The plaintiff in the Court below also claimed to be entitled to a personal decree on the strength of a certain acknowledgment contained in the letter which was written by the second defendant on the 6th of April 1914. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, was of opinion that this acknowledgment could not affect either of the defendants and, consequently, he refused to order any personal decree.

The plaintiff now comes up in appeal and a variety of grounds are put forward upon which the judgment of the Court below is challenged. Before we proceed to discuss the question which arises for determination here, it is important to notice that since the appeal has been filed the first defendant Musammât Mahfuz-un-nissa has died, her heirs have now been made parties to the record and one of these heirs is her own husband, the second defendant, Muhammad Aizaz Ali Khan, who, under the Muhammadan Law, has become entitled as one of his wife's heirs to a one-fourth share of the mortgaged property. That fact will have to be borne in mind later on when we come to announce our decision regarding the liability of Aizaz Ali Khan.

We begin with the finding of the Court below that execution of the document was not duly proved. Here, we have to record our disagreement with the view taken by the learned Judge of the Court below. It was never contended that Musammât Mahfuz-un-nissa herself had executed this deed of mortgage. The case for the plaintiff was that the deed was executed by her husband who was her duly constituted attorney. The husband never denied the execution of the deed and, in the circumstances, it seems to us that execution was duly proved and the plaintiff discharged all the onus which lay upon her in this respect. We refer, in this connection, to section 70 of the Indian Evidence Act. We pass on, therefore, to what is really the important question in the case, namely, whether the mortgage sued upon could be deemed to be binding upon the first defendant, Mahfuz-un-nissa.

It can only be so if we are satisfied that at the time the document was executed her husband had full authority to act on her behalf. This takes us back to the power-of-attorney from which that authority is said to be derived and that document is a document dated the 12th November 1898.

It is a fact that the original power-of-attorney was not produced in the Court below. Obviously, it was in the possession either of Mahfuz-un-nissa or of her husband. Notices were issued to them to produce it but it was not produced.

In order, therefore, to prove that such a document had been executed it became necessary to call the Sub-Registrar in whose Office the power-of-attorney had been registered. It was not possible for the plaintiff to produce a certified copy of the power-of-attorney for, according to the evidence of the Sub-Registrar and according to the rules on the subject, no stranger is entitled to obtain from the Registration Department a certified copy of a document of this nature.

The Sub-Registrar of Moradabad was called and brought with him the Registration Volume in which this power-of-attorney had been copied.

It may be noted that the Sub-Registrar who gave evidence was not the same Sub-Registrar who had registered the deed in the year 1898.

There can be no doubt from the entry in the register which was produced before the learned Subordinate Judge that, a power-of-attorney was executed on the 12th of November 1898 by Musammât Mahfuz-un-nissa in favour of her husband.

The contents of this power-of-attorney were read out in Court by the Sub-Registrar who quoted from the entries in this register. It appears that, amongst other things, the power-of-attorney gave the husband authority to borrow money for household and Court expenses, to pledge or hypothecate his wife's property in any way or to mortgage, sell the whole or any part of his wife's property, or to make a gift of his wife's property or a waqf, or to make an exchange of it.

It is thus obvious that the power-of-attorney which the lady executed in her husband's favour was couched in very wide language and gave him practically unlimited powers of disposal over his wife's estate.

This being so, it becomes necessary to consider whether the requirements of the law

with respect to deeds of this kind executed by parda nashin ladies have been met in this case. It has been laid down as the law by a string of rulings that, where a person relies on a document of this nature and is making a claim against a parda nashin woman, based upon a document of this kind, it is incumbent upon him to give satisfactory evidence that the document has been explained and understood by the lady. We may refer to the following cases in this connection:—

Sudisht Lal v. Musammat Sheoharat Koer (1), Shambati Koeri v. Jago Bibi (2) and Sajjad Husain v. Wazir Ali Khan (3).

The doctrine is well understood. The only difficulty which arises is as to its application to particular cases. No uniform standard of evidence which will satisfy the Court can be laid down, and each case must be decided on its own facts.

Turning to the evidence in this case, all we have is what was read out in Court by the Sub-Registrar from the volume of the register which he produced before the Subordinate Judge.

This register contains copies of the endorsements which were made upon the power-of-attorney at the time of its registration. We refer to the following endorsements which contain the only evidence regarding the question as to whether the document was duly explained to the lady and understood by her. We begin with the following:—

"To day I went in person to the executant of this general power-of-attorney at 5 p.m. and satisfied myself that Musammat Mahfuz-un-nissa executed this power-of-attorney of her own free will and accord. The above-named executant affixed her signature to the power-of-attorney in my presence and she was identified by Ehsan Ali Khan and Muhammad Sarfaraz Ali Khan."

This endorsement, therefore, can be relied upon for the purpose of showing that, as a matter of fact, the lady executed a document in the presence of the Registering Officer and that he was satisfied that this execution had been made of her own free-will and accord.

A further endorsement in the following language is also proved to have been recorded on the power-of-attorney:—

"Musammat Mahfuz-un-nissa...after hearing all the contents of the document admitted it in a loud voice from behind the door at her dwelling house."

We observe here that the translation of this passage in the paper-book is not quite correct.

This is the whole of the evidence upon which we are asked to find that the document was read to the lady and explained to her so that she was thoroughly aware of the consequences which would follow in law from her act of execution.

It has been argued before us that the declaration made by the Sub-Registrar and embodied in the endorsement on the deed is sufficient proof that the document was read and explained to the lady.

It is to be noted, however, that while the language used by the Registering Officer would indicate that the document had been read out to the lady there is nothing expressly indicating that he explained the document to the lady; in other words, that he explained to the lady what the results of her actions would be. We have been referred to the Registration Rules which were issued in the year 1896 and which were, therefore, in force at the time this document was registered. Under rule 185 Registering Officers were directed, in the case of documents executed by parda nashin ladies, to obtain the admission of execution from the executant's own lips. The rule further lays down the necessity for having the lady properly identified, and a further direction is given that the terms of the document should be explained to the executant and if, while admitting execution, she objects to any of the terms, a note of such objection should be made.

We are asked to presume that the Sub-Registrar must have carried out the rule to which we have just referred and that, consequently, we ought to hold that the document was duly explained to the lady so as to be thoroughly understood by her.

KYAS MUHAMMAD v. BANNA

The case is no doubt a somewhat difficult one and it has been rendered more difficult by reason of both the lady and her husband keeping out of the witness-box. This is a circumstance which has to be weighed. But, making allowance for everything, we have in the end to decide whether there is before us that satisfactory evidence of explanation and understanding which the law requires.

All we can say is that, after giving the case our most careful consideration, we are not satisfied that the plaintiff has discharged the duty which the law cast upon her, and so, as regards this part of the case, we cannot disagree with the finding of the Court below.

There remains only one other question and that is with respect to the liability of the husband.

We have already referred to the fact that the husband admitted the execution of this document although his statement was that that the property which was being mortgaged was not his property. That was a true statement of course at the time it was made. But we have it now that a one-fourth share in the mortgaged property has come to the husband by inheritance and we have, therefore, to deal with the question of his liability as things now stand.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad has, in this connection, relied upon the provisions of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act and we think that plea is well taken. It is at the option of the plaintiff under this section to seek a remedy against the property which has come into the possession of Aizaz Ali Khan, and, therefore, if there is a debt owing from Aizaz Ali Khan in respect of the mortgage-deed in suit that debt may be enforced against this one-fourth share which has now become the property.

As regards the question of the indebtedness of Aizaz Ali Khan we think there can be no reasonable doubt. It is proved beyond all question that the money which was borrowed under the mortgage was delivered into his hands. Furthermore, in a letter which is on the record (Ex. 2, printed at p. 29 of the record) Aizaz Ali Khan, on the 6th of April 1914, admitted that he took this money to meet his own expenses, and he, further, in paragraph 4 of that letter, made a statement clearly indicating that at that date, the debt was still subsisting. This being so, and the acknowledgment having been within six years of the date of the mortgage and also within six years of the date of the suit, we think Aizaz Ali Khan is clearly bound and that, as against him, a decree can be passed by which the debt incurred under the document in suit can be enforced against a one-fourth share of the mortgaged property now belonging to Aizaz Ali Khan since the time of his wife's death.

We, therefore, give a decree for the full amount of the mortgage against Aizaz Ali Khan and we also give a decree for sale directing the sale of the one-fourth share of the mortgaged property which he has inherited from his wife. The usual decree for sale will be prepared. The plaintiff will be entitled to recover costs from Aizaz Ali Khan both in this Court and in the Court below. The costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

As regards the respondents Nos. 1 to 6, the suit against them fails and is dismissed with costs in both Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decree declaring a Will made in Australia in 1915 by Rahmat Khan, a Rajput of Guna Chaur, in the Nawashahr, Tahsil of the Jullundur District, bequeathing all his property to Kyas Muhammad, defendant No. 1, to be invalid against the rights of the plaintiffs, who are Rahmat Khan's collaterals in the 7th degree. The defendant Kyas Muhammad is also a collateral of Rahmat Khan, but a more distant one.

The first ground of appeal as to the plaintiffs not being in possession of the property and not being competent to sue for a declaration of their rights is not pressed. The land has been cultivated by tenants and the appellant has not been exercising possession either of the land or of the houses in suit. As he was not in possession the plaintiffs could not sue him for possession, and they rightly asked for a declaratory decree.

The second ground of appeal as to the property not being ancestral is also not pressed so far as the land is concerned. As regards the houses, since they are in the village in which the land is situate we agree with the lower Court in holding, on the authority of Nur Hussain v. Ali Sher (1), that they are to be considered as an appanage to the land.

It is contended for the appellant that there have been many alienations in the village, that the original tribal bond has been broken by the introduction of persons of many different tribes in the proprietary body, and that, therefore, the Rajputs have unrestricted powers of alienation. But, in the first place, this was not the defence taken by the appellant in his pleas in which the only ground on which he urged that Rahmat Khan had an unrestricted power of alienation was that he had become a trader. In the second place, the Rajputs have been proprietors in the village for several centuries and are still, apparently, the predominating tribe there. The customary restrictions of their powers of alienation would not be affected by the fact that in recent years members of other tribes have acquired small areas of land in the village. Thirdly, although there have been many alienations, many have been contested, and the appellant's witness, Alla Bukhsh, says that several suits went up to the Chief Court and that while in some cases the alienations were upheld in others they were set aside. This admission would show that powers of alienation of the Rajputs of Guna Chaur are restricted and the appellant has failed to prove the contrary.

The main argument on the appellant's behalf is that it rests with the plaintiff to prove that collaterals in the 7th degree are competent to contest a Will. This argument is, however, opposed to the authorities. Although we do not agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that collaterals in the 7th degree have been held in Pal Singh v. Ganda Singh (2) to be entitled to impeach an alienation it has been laid down in several cases that the burden is on the alienee to justify the alienation even when the persons challenging it were collaterals in the 7th degree, and that there is no presumption against the locus standi of agnates beyond a definite degree of relationship to challenge an alienation, see, for instance, Surjan v. Jodha (3) and Wazira v. Pani (4) Jiwan v. Rupa (5) Arrur Singh v. Lachmi (6) and Kha san Singh v. Relu (7). There are no doubt authorities for the view that there is a presumption against the right of collaterals on the 6th degree to exclude daughters from succession; but the question as to the respective rights of inheritance of daughters and collaterals is quite distinct from the question of the right of distant collaterals to contest alienations. We hold that the onus in this case is on the appellant to prove that the plaintiffs are not entitled to contest Rahmat Khan's Will. That onus has not been in any way discharged.

A further contention on behalf of the appellant is that the Will is valid by reason of his having rendered services to the testator. But we agree with the lower Court that there is no satisfactory evidence that he performed any services, only two witnesses, Hira Singh and Amin Chand, profess to have any personal knowledge on the subject, and they merely say in a vague way that the appellant rendered services without stating their nature.

We affirm the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Seoni, in Civil Suit No. 31 of 1920, dated the 10th April 1922.

Mr. N. G. Bose, for the Appellants.

Mr. V. Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit to enforce the mortgage, dated 3rd August 1908, executed by one Nandlal, Gond, the deceased father of the present defendants, in favour of the deceased father of the plaintiffs-appellants. The Court of first instance, while passing a decree for the entire claim on the basis of the mortgage, restricted its operation to only 4-annas 5-pies share out of the 8-annas share mortgaged and declared that the remaining 3-annas 6-pies share which represented the interests of the defendants was not affected by the mortgage. The reason for this exclusion of the defendants' share from liability under the mortgage was that the defendants, although Gonds, were governed by Hindu Law and the property covered by the mortgage was joint ancestral property in the hands of the mortgagor Nandlal and, in the absence of legal necessity, Nandlal was not legally competent to mortgage anything beyond his own interest therein. Against that decree an appeal was preferred by plaintiffs to this Court which was then presided over by Rao Bahadur W. R. Dhobley, Additional Judicial Commisdecision on the merits with the following remarks, which I reproduce in extenso :—

RAMNATH v. SUKALSI

"According to the respondents' learned Advocate it is unnecessary for the purposes of his case to go into this much vexed and disputed question as to whether Gonds as such are or are not Hindus and are or are not governed by the Hindu Law, as the defendants assert that they and the particular tribe to which they belong have adopted the Hindu custom and the general Hindu Law in respect of inheritance and joint family and that the Courts are, therefore, bound to administer that law in their case. This particular aspect of the case was not gone into by the lower Court and the defendants' learned Advocate, therefore, says that it is necessary that an enquiry should be directed on this point. It is admitted by him that some of the Gonds in certain Districts in these Provinces may be governed by Hindu Law and others may not. The learned Advocate urges that the defendants base their claim to be governed by the principles of joint family and inheritance of the Hindu Law, because they assert that the tribe to which their family belongs have adopted those principles. The case shall have, therefore, to go back to the lower Court with directions that statements of the parties on this point should be taken and the case decided accordingly. I consider it unnecessary for the purposes of this case to decide the general question whether Gonds as such are or are not governed by the Hindu Law. If the principles of Hindu Law concerning joint family and inheritance have been accepted by the tribe to which the defendants' family belongs and these are followed by them, the mortgage would not be binding upon their interest and share in the ancestral property."

The pleadings of the defendants recorded after remand show that they claimed to belong to the tribe of Rajgonds who, according to them, are Hindus and are governed by the principles of Hindu Law in the matter of joint family property, inheritance, succession by survivorship, etc. They also claimed that they are Hindus for they adopted almost all Hindu customs, such as worship of Hindu Gods, and asserted that in matters of marriage, adoption and all other matters they followed Hindu Law and custom. They further contended that they had adopted Hindu Law and, therefore, even if they were not Hindus, still in matters of inheritance and succession they should be governed by the Hindu Law. The following additional issues were then framed :—

- "11. Whether the defendants are Rajgonds ?
- "12. Whether Rajgonds have adopted the rules which govern joint Hindu family property ? "

The parties were given opportunity to adduce additional evidence on these issues. The defendants examined seven witnesses, namely D. W. 10—16 ; they are all Rajgonds excepting D. W. 13. The first Court finds on their evidence that the defendants are Rajgonds and that Rajgonds follow the rules of Hindu Law regarding joint family, succession and survivorship, etc. The evidence adduced by the plaintiffs, namely, that of P. Ws. 1, 3, 4 and 5, was considered worthless and very meagre and unsatisfactory. Both the additional issues were found in the affirmative and the result was that the decree passed after remand also excluded 3-annas 6-pies share of the defendants out of the 8-annas share mortgaged from the operation of the decree. It is against this decree that the plaintiffs have preferred this appeal, urging, firstly, that the defendants had not proved that they were Rajgonds and, further, that on the evidence on record it ought to have been held that the family of the defendants did not adopt the rules of Hindu Law regarding the joint family and inheritance.

At this stage of the argument the learned pleader for the appellants conceded that under the present state of the case-law Rajgonds are governed by Hindu Law, and that if, on the evidence, the defendants are held as having succeeded in establishing that they belonged to the community of Rajgonds, then there will be no question as to the law by which the defendants should be governed. He contends that the defendants have failed to prove that they are Rajgonds and that the evidence on record is insufficient to prove their so-called status as Rajgonds. In support of this contention of his he brings to my notice the pleadings of the defendants prior to the order of remand. He points out that if the defendants were really Rajgonds and enjoyed that status in the community, they would certainly not have failed to style themselves as Rajgonds even in their first defence. The subsequent pleadings, where they assert that they are Rajgonds, are characterized as an afterthought. In view of the express directions by this Court for recording the statements of the parties on the point of the tribe to which the defendants belonged, I am not prepared to uphold this contention. The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner, who remanded the case, thought that the pleadings already made by the parties were not complete, otherwise he would not have given express directions about taking the statements of the parties. It was with a view to afford a chance to both the parties to put their case clearly before the Court and to adduce such additional evidence in support of it as they may choose to examine, that the remand was ordered. I am not, therefore, impressed by the plaintiff's said argument.

It is next contended that the defendants style themselves as Hindus, but as it has been held in Vithoba v. Lalsingh, (1) that a Gond is not a Hindu and is not governed by the Hindu Law, the defendants' contention that they are Hindus and, therefore, governed by the Hindu Law cannot be upheld. They must be governed by the law of inheritance as laid down in the Indian Succession Act and not by usages and customs of Hindu Law. It is, however, pointed out in that ruling that it is open to any party to prove that his family or any general body of the Gonds in which he is included has adopted all the principles of Hindu Law, so that they could now be called as bound by those principles; but this must be proved by the party which alleges it.

It is strenuously urged that the evidence adduced by the defendants is not what it should be. There is no evidence of instances to show that in the matters of succession, marriage, adoption and alienation the defendants' family has followed the principles of Hindu Law. My attention has been drawn to the judgment of Sir Henry Stanyon in Second Appeal No. 231 of 1916, dated 20th

August 1917, and particularly to the passage which lays down the nature of evidence that is necessary to be adduced in such cases and also to certain passages in Bhattacharya's Tagore Law Lectures on Hindu Joint Family and Trevelyan's Hindu Law, 2nd edition, and it is urged that as the evidence on record does not satisfy the requirements laid down in them the finding of the Court of first instance that defendants are Rajgonds and, therefore, governed by Hindu Law is liable to be set aside as based on insufficient data. The learned Counsel for the respondents concedes that the evidence is not so thorough and full of instances as pointed out by Sir Henry Stanyon in his judgment as it ought to be. He, however, contends that the evidence, as it is, being given by members of the community of Rajgonds who admit that the defendants possess like themselves the status of Rajgonds, ought to be treated as sufficient. He contends, and I think rightly, that this recognition by the community is in itself good evidence to prove the defendants' status. In cases where status by adoption has to be established, evidence of repute and recognition by the community is held admissible to prove that status. There is no reliable evidence to the contrary adduced by the plaintiffs which would in any way disprove the status established for the defendants by their witnesses. The correctness of their assertion that they are Rajgonds and as such governed by the principles and usages of Hindu Law is thus beyond doubt. The only evidence of the plaintiffs' witness P. W. 5, examined before remand, does not, it is contended, negative the defendants' assertion that their father was a Rajgond. In the examination-in-chief the witnesses did assert that Nandlal was a Dhurgond and he did make a distinction between a Dhurgond and a Rajgond, but when asked in cross-examination whether the defendants were Rajgonds or Dhurgonds he said he did not know. This testimony is hardly sufficient to rebut the positive evidence to the contrary adduced by the defendants.

Reading the evidence on record as a whole, I think there is ample material to support the finding of the lower Court that the defendants are Rajgonds. That Rajgonds are governed by Hindu Law is conceded by the appellants. There is also evidence on record consisting of the testimony of defendants' witnesses as also of plaintiff's witness No. 1 after remand to prove that the incidents of a joint family do apply to these Gonds. Some of the witnesses do admit that amongst Raj-gonds a son takes interest by birth. This declaration or admission being a statement against the proprietary interest of the declarant, is clearly admissible in evidence like a declaration by a Jain that a Jain widow can adopt a son without her husband's authority. In any case, such statements are, in my opinion, admissible under sections 48 and 49 of the Indian Evidence Act, even though not supported by specific instances.

The result is that the plaintiffs' appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J. —Two questions have been argued before us; first, that the learned Additional District Judge erred in coming to the conclusion that the proper course for the plaintiff-appellant was to apply for partition before the Collector and, secondly, that the learned Additional District Judge erred in thinking that there were not sufficient materials on the record for giving the plaintiff the appropriate relief in the circumstances of the case. So far as the first point is concerned, I have come to the conclusion that the argument of the learned Vakil for the appellant ought to prevail. This is not a suit for partition of revenue paying lands. The plaintiff does not ask the Court to separate the Government revenue as between the plaintiff and the defendant. He invites the Court to fix the liability of the defendants in regard to the Government revenue for which the plaintiff is liable to the Collector. This is a suit of a Civil nature and I know of no enactment which prevents the Civil Court from taking cognizance of a suit of this nature. The first contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant must prevail. But, so far as the other contention is concerned, I am of opinion that the finding of the learned District Judge is a finding of fact and is binding on us in second appeal. The learned Judge says: "there is no sufficient material for assessment of Government revenue on the basis of which the plaintiff has sued for contribution." We must assume that there were not materials on the record sufficient to enable the learned Judge to pass judgment in favour of the plaintiff. Mr. Lachmi Narain Singh contends that, in order to do complete justice between the parties, the learned Judge should have referred the matter to a Commissioner for taking evidence and coming to a proper conclusion on the point. But in my opinion it was not the duty of the learned Judge, on his own responsibility, to issue a commission. It was for the parties to make a proper application before the learned District Judge. That course was not adopted by the plaintiff and, in my opinion, it is quite impossible now to give him any relief, especially as he took no trouble to place proper materials before the Court below. The appeal accordingly fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Second appeal against the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court of Allahabad, exercising the powers of a Subordinate Judge, dated the 31st January 1922.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmed and Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants.Messrs. Abu Ali, P. N. Banerji, and Majid Ali, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to a plot of land situated in Jhansi which was at one time occupied by a house belonging to Muhammad Zahur. Muhammad Zahur was a ryot. The zemin-dari rights of his father in the village were, it is said, sold sometime before 1882. Muhammad Zahur worked as a karinda of his father-in-law, who had a zemin-dari share in Busgit, his wife and children lived in Busgit, while he kept up his connection with Jhansi. He died in 1887. The house in question fell into ruins sometime afterwards and the question for consideration in this case is whether the defendants, who are the heirs of Muhammad Zahur, had abandoned the house after the death of Muhammad Zahur and allowed it to fall into ruins so as to entitle the zemin-dar, namely, the defendant No. 9, to resume the land on which the said house stood and grant the right of occupancy thereof to the present plaintiff-respondent. The plaintiff-respondent owns a house adjacent to the land in dispute; and her allegation is that the licensee to build a house on the land so abandoned was granted to her by the defendant No. 9 in September 1919. She complains that when she wanted to build a house on the said land the defendants-appellants interfered and prevented her from making constructions over the same. It is also said that the said defendants then hurriedly collected some materials and built certain walls and a room in order to keep the plaintiff out of the enjoyment of that site.

The defendants deny having abandoned the site. The Court of first instance found in their favour but the lower Appellate Court held otherwise. The question at issue is really one of fact depending very largely on the evidence of intention afforded by the conduct of the plaintiffs since 1887.

The lower Appellate Court has referred in detail to the various facts established by the documentary evidence produced, tending to show that the defendants had abandoned their residence in the house in dispute and settled elsewhere, that from 1889 onwards they described themselves as residents of Busgit, and that though three members of their family had been buried at Jhansi, one having come there to live with his wife and the other two temporarily on account of plague, none of them is shown to have occupied the house in dispute which was lying in ruins from long before. The lower Appellate Court has also pointed out that if any of the members of the family did come to Jhansi for temporary purposes, they came and stopped in other houses with other people and showed no intention of either retaining the site of the house in dispute under their control or to rebuild and maintain the house after it had been allowed to fall into ruins.

DHARINEE V. PIARI

The learned Counsel for the defendants-appellants contends that the plaintiff as a licensee had no right to sue; that the inferences drawn by the lower Appellate Court from the facts found to have been established were not justified, and that in any case the defendants should be deemed to have continued to be the owners of the site in question and to have a right to build thereon. The right of the plaintiff to stop the defendants-appellants from interfering with her constructions was denied by the defendants-appellants on the ground that the latter had not abandoned the site; but her right as a licensee to file a suit was never questioned in any of the Courts below or in the Memorandum of Appeal filed in this Court. In fact, if the finding of the lower Appellate Court that the defendants-appellants had abandoned the site and allowed the house to fall into ruins so as to entitle the zemindar to resume the same is correct, the right of the zemindar to grant a license to the plaintiff to occupy the site and build a house thereon cannot be questioned. The decision in Basdeo Rai v. Dwarka Ram (1) has no application because that was a suit between a licensor and a licensee, and the question was what was the proper remedy in a case where the licensee has been ousted by the wrongful revocation of the license. The finding arrived at by the lower Appellate Court on the question of abandonment is based not so much on inferences as on the conduct of the defendants since 1889 onwards and the intention to be gathered therefrom. In Hazari Lal v. Nimar (2) it was held in somewhat similar circumstances in respect of land occupied by a grove, the trees whereof had been cut, that the land having been abandoned by the original groveholders and having remained waste for over 12 years and reverted to the zemindars, and the successors of the original holders could not resume possession and plant a new grove thereon without the permission of the zemindars. As regards the site, there can be no question that on the sale of the proprietary rights, if any, possessed by the father of Muhammad Zahur, the entire land appertaining to the property sold passed to the auction-purchaser; and by operation of law the judgment-debtor became a ryot and the rights of the judgment-debtor in respect of the site occupied by his dwelling house were reduced to the position of the other persons residing in the village.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI r. 33 (1)—Restitution of conjugal rights, decree for—Direction that wife shall not be imprisoned—Appellate Court, interference by—Imprisonment, object of.

Where a lower Appellate Court directs under O. XXI, r. 33 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code, a decree for restitution of conjugal rights shall not be enforced by imprisonment of the wife, the High Court will be very slow to interfere with the exercise of the discretion.

Imprisonment, if allowed in such cases, is not a penalty for anything the wife may have done, but a means of forcibly compelling her return to her husband.

The tendency of modern legislation is against sending a woman to Jail in such cases.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. Muhammad Yusaf, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. The plaintiff-appellant has been given a decree, but the Court below has added to it a condition that it shall not be enforced by the imprisonment of the wife and it is against this condition that he appeals. O. XXI, r. 33 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code expressly permits of such a condition being inserted in the decree, and this

GOPI v. RAJ ROOP

Court would, ordinarily, be very slow to interfere with the discretion of the Court below in a matter of this kind. It is quite true that this is not a strong case in favour of the wife. The allegations of cruelty which she made have been disbelieved. The finding of the learned Munsif, which the Court below adopts, is that the woman left her husband's house originally in the company of her brothers, but when the time came for her to return she was unwilling to do so. The learned Munsif says that the plaintiff has given no reason for her refusal but that the probabilities are that she is under the influence of a certain barber and that this has induced her refusal. Even in such a case it is possible, if the husband got her back by force, that he might take the opportunity for punishing her for her unfaithfulness. Imprisonment, if allowed in these cases, is not a penalty for anything the wife may have done, but a means of forcibly compelling her return to her husband. As the Bombay High Court remarked in a recent case, Bai Parwati v. Ganhi Mansukh getha (1), the tendency of modern legislation is against sending a woman to Jail in such cases, and in fact since this decree was passed the law has been so altered by both Houses of the Legislature as to make imprisonment illegal as a means of enforcing a decree of this nature. The learned Judge has slightly anticipated the amendment of the law. On the whole, I am not prepared to interfere with the discretion exercised by the learned Judge and I accordingly dismiss the appeal though, under the circumstances, without costs.

When a person who succeeds to an estate accepts rent from a tenant of the estate without being aware of the fact that the tenant claims to hold under a permanent lease granted by an intermediate holder of the estate, which he had no power to grant, such acceptance does not amount to an election or to a waiver of the landlord's right to object to the validity of the lease.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Benares, dated the 11th March 1922.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to plot No. 738 khassra which is situated in Mauza Shukulpura outside the skirts of Benares City. The village Shukulpura was granted to Musammatt Asmedh Kunwar by the father of the plaintiff on the 9th of April 1889 by an agreement which provided that she was to hold the same in her possession and enjoy the profits thereof for her maintenance during her lifetime without any power of alienation.

While Musammatt Asmedh Kunwar was so in possession of that village, she granted a perpetual lease of the plot in dispute to Gopal, Ganga and Gopi for a premium of Rs. 100 on an agreement that the lessees would pay her a rent of Rs. 12 per annum and be entitled to use the land for planting a grove, constructing buildings or for any other purposes they liked. On the strength of that lease a grove, consisting mostly of guava trees, was planted over the said land by the lessees and a ridge or mud wall was built around it for the protection of the trees.

GOPI v. RAJ ROOP

The lease was granted on the 11th of May 1905. On the 16th of March 1918 Musammatt Asmedh Kunwar died. The plaintiff as the successor-in-interest of her father, the original proprietor of the village, sues to eject the lessees from the land of the said grove and for mesne profits, contending that the lease in question became inoperative after the death of Musammatt Asmedh Kunwar. Gopal and Ganga have since sold their interest in the said grove to Gopi for Rs. 100 on the 12th of August 1916. The defence of Gopi was that the plaintiff had accepted the rent of the land in question since the death of Musammatt Asmedh Kunwar, that the defendant had spent about Rs. 2,000 in making improvements over the said land, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief claimed.

The trial Court found in favour of the plaintiff and allowed the defendant to remove all the constructions made and trees planted by him within a month from the date of its decree. The lower Appellate Court upheld the decree for possession but dismissed the claim for mesne profits, holding that the plaintiff was not entitled to the same by reason of her having accepted the rent of the holding from the contesting defendant for three years after the death of Musammatt Asmedh Kunwar.

It is urged on behalf of the defendant-appellant that the acceptance of rent by the plaintiff operated as a ratification by her of the lease granted by Asmedh Kunwar, and that, in any case, the plaintiff is not entitled to claim possession without paying for the improvements made by the defendant during the subsistence of the lease. Section 35 of the Transfer of Property Act lays down that where a person professes to transfer any property which he has no right to transfer and as a part of the same transaction confers any benefit on the owner of the property, such owner must elect either to confirm such transfer or to dissent from it; but an acceptance of a benefit by the person on whom it is conferred does not constitute an election by him to confirm the transfer, unless he is aware of his duty to elect and of those circumstances, which would influence the judgment of a reasonable man in making an election. The receipts filed show that the rent in the present case was received by Gaya Prasad, an agent of the plaintiff, and there is nothing to show that either the plaintiff or her agent was aware of the circumstances in which the lease was granted or of the terms on which it was held by the person paying the rent. There can be no election where the person receiving the rent is not aware of his duty to elect; or, in other words, of the fact that a perpetual lease had been granted by the intermediate holder which it was in his power to repudiate or confirm. An acceptance of rent in these circumstances even for a period of three years cannot operate as an estoppel or waiver by the plaintiff of the invalidity of the lease after the death of Musammatt Asmedh Kunwar.

The decision in Madhu Sudan Singh v. Rooke (1) does not apply because in that case the rent had been accepted with a full knowledge of the patni lease, sought to be repudiated. In fact, the tenant had filed a petition, depositing the rent in Court to the credit of the opposite party, stating the rent was being paid on account of a patni lease granted to him by the intermediate holder. The intermediate holder in that case was a Hindu widow. On the said deposit having been made an application was filed on behalf of the reversionary heir of the said widow, agreeing to accept the said payment. A Hindu widow, holding a life-interest, has a larger power than a lady holding an estate in lieu of maintenance for her life without any power of alienation. In Beni Pershad Koeri v. Dudhnath Roy (2) where a grant of a village for maintenance was made by a Zemindar to his nephews operating only for life, and the grantees executed a permanent lease in favour of another, it was held in a suit brought by the successor-in-interest of the original grantor that the mere acceptance of rent by such successor-in-interest at the rate stipulated in the permanent lease could not have the effect of confirming the lease in its entirety; nor could the duration of the lease exceed that of the original grant. In the absence of any evidence to show that the plaintiff or her agent was aware of the terms and conditions of the lease under which the grove was planted, an acceptance of rent from the person in possession of the land could not, therefore, estop the plaintiff from claiming possession and seeking to avoid the lease so far as it granted the plaintiff a perpetual right.

As regards the improvements alleged to have been made by the lessees and referred to in the written statement and in the grounds of appeal to the Court below, it is not clear from the evidence when they were made and whether they were made in good faith within the meaning of section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act. No issue was framed on that point by the Court of first instance or evidence taken. The lower Appellate Court is, therefore, directed to determine, after taking such additional evidence which the parties may adduce, —

(1) Whether the improvements in question were made by the defendants or any of them in good faith, believing that they were absolutely entitled as lessees to make the same?

(2) Whether these improvements were made in the life time of Musammat Asmedh Kunwar or partly in her life time and partly after her death and the acceptance of rent by the plaintiff, and, if so, to what extent?

(3) What was the value of the said improvements, as it would accrue to the transferee, if the ejectment is effected?

Three months' time will be allowed for recording the findings. On receipt of the findings ten days will be allowed to the parties for objections.

Mr. N. C. Vaish, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question which arises in this appeal is whether the claim of the plaintiffs is barred by Article 82, Schedule I of the Limitation Act. The facts are these. Between the houses of the parties lies a wall which in previous litigation between them was declared to be the property of the plaintiffs. The defendants have placed some beams on that wall and masonry roof. The plaintiffs' suit was instituted for the removal of the beams in so far as they rested on the plaintiffs' wall. The defendants claimed a right of support for the beams of their roof. The lower Appellate Court, without finding whether the defendants had a thatched roof resting on the plaintiffs' wall, held that, as the defendants had placed a much heavier burden on the wall than had existed before, the plaintiffs were entitled to have that burden removed and decreed the claim. An appeal was preferred to this Court and for the first time in this Court it was contended that the claim was barred by Article 32. This plea prevailed before a learned Judge of this Court and he held that the said Article applied and as the construction complained of had admittedly been made more than two years prior to the institution of the suit he dismissed the claim. The plaintiffs have preferred this appeal. The question is by no means free from difficulty but, after considering the matter, we are of opinion that Article 32 is not applicable to the present case. That Article runs as follows :—

It is admitted that the purpose for which the defendants could use the wall was the support which the wall could afford to their beams, we do not think that they have used the wall for a different purpose. The only purpose for which they could use the wall was that of placing beams on it. They have carried out the same purpose but in a different way, that is to say, according to the finding of the Court below, they have placed upon the wall heavier and more numerous beams than had existed before and, instead of putting a thatched roof, they have placed a masonry roof. The real purpose, however, is that of support for the beams upon which the roof now rests. Therefore, it cannot be said that there has been a perversion of the purpose for which the defendants had a right to use the wall. Article 32 cannot apply to a case of this kind. A common instance of the application of the Article is that of a tenant who having a right to cultivate land digs a tank in it or builds a house on it. Our attention has been drawn to the ruling in Jadu Ram v. Kanhaia Ram (1), in which a learned Judge of this Court held that Article 32 had no application to a matter like this. That was a case which was much stronger than the case before us. We are unable to agree with the view which the learned Judge who decided this case has taken on the point. In our judgment the Article in question does not bar the present suit. There was no other question to be considered in the appeal. We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the learned Judge of this Court and restore that of the lower Appellate Court. The appellants will have their costs of both the hearings in this Court. We allow the defendants two months' time from this date for the removal of such portions of the beams in dispute as rest on the plaintiffs' wall.

Ordinarily, every plaintiff has got a right to say that the rights of the parties should be adjudicated upon as they existed at the date of the suit, and that the Court should not take notice of any events that have happened during the pendency of the suit. This, however, is not an invariable rule and a Court will, in exceptional cases, depart from it, especially when by so doing it can shorten a litigation and best attain the ends of justice by preserving the rights of both parties. It is not only in the power but it sometimes is the duty, of even a Court of appeal to take notice of events which have happened during the pendency of appeal, and such events not appearing on the record can be allowed to be proved by extrinsic evidence. Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Jubbulpore, dated the 27th March 1922

Mr. N. G. Bose, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant, Anantram, brought this suit for a declaration that he is a tenant of certain occupancy and ordinary fields in Mouza Kajarwara and also for the recovery of Rs. 420 said to have been recovered by defendant-respondent, Murlidhar, from some lessees of the said fields. The Munsif dismissed the suit on the ground that the land was the property of the defendant. The lower Appellate Court also dismissed the appeal. Against this decision the plaintiff has come in second appeal to this Court. The defence urged may be summarised as under. The defendant was a Patwari of the village and in view of his position as such he did not think it desirable to allow the land in question to stand in his own name and, therefore, arranged to have it recorded in the name of of the plaintiff; that the defendant had been uniformly in possession of the said land and that plaintiff was never in possession and that the rent used to be paid by the defendant; that the defendant resigned his Patwariship in Sambat 1975 from which year his name was recorded in the jamabandis as tenant of the land. This defence was raised on 12th May 1921 and the case was adjourned to 13th July 1921 for plaintiff's reply. On the day of this adjourned hearing the defendant filed an additional written statement wherein he urged the following additional plea, that the plaintiff and defendant and Jiwanlal had referred their dispute to arbitration by an agreement dated 21st May 1917. Panchas made their award on 7th November 1917 whereby the plaintiff's claim for the land in dispute was disallowed. As no stamp for the award was filed the delivery of the award was delayed till the 12th July 1921 when the value of a stamp was supplied by the defendant. This suit is, therefore, untenable. The plaintiff's reply, through Mr. Sheoprasad, pleader, on this additional plea was to the following effect:—"An agreement was entered into by the parties by way of a proposal to refer the dispute relating to the land in dispute to arbitration of Beohar Raghubir Singh and others in 1917 as alleged by the defendant in his additional written statement, but it was never given effect to as the parties withdrew the reference and no award was made by the arbitrators within a reasonable time. It is denied that the delay was due to want of time. The reference does not bar the present suit." It was also pleaded in the alternative that if the parties did not expressly withdraw the reference an implied withdrawal of the reference and refusal by the arbitrators to arbitrate should be inferred from the fact that the arbitrators did not make any award for such a long time and that, if the arbitrators made any award as alleged by the defendant, the proceedings as well as the award were never communicated to the plaintiff. They are, therefore, fraudulent and void on account of the misconduct of the arbitrators. The Munsif framed the following issues:—

- "1. Whether the parties referred the dispute relating to the lands in suit to the arbitration of the Hon'ble Beohar Raghubir Singh and others?"
- "2. Did they make an award and disallow plaintiff's claim to the lands in suit? If so, when was it given?"
- "3. Was the reference withdrawn by the parties and, if not, does the delay in making the award, if any, operate as an implied withdrawal?"
- "4. Was the award communicated to the plaintiff? If not, does the omission amount to misconduct on the part of the arbitrators and does it vitiate the proceedings and the award as fraudulent?"
- "5. Is the suit barred by reason of the award?"

The findings of the Court of first instance may be summarised as under; that the parties did refer the dispute relating to the land in suit to the Panchas as alleged by the defendant; that the reference was not withdrawn either expressly or by implication and, further, that there was nothing in the proceedings that might have vitiated the award; that the real and original award was Exhibit D-3 which was engrossed on a plain paper and signed by all the arbitrators on 7th November 1917; that the award declared the land in suit to be the property of the defendant subject to a payment of Rs. 200 by him to the plaintiff; that the award in question was not vitiated for want of publication to the parties, and that the Panchas did make an attempt to communicate the decision to the parties and it was no fault of theirs if the latter failed either to provide stamp or to attend to hear the award pronounced. The Munsif, being of opinion that communication of the decision to the parties was not an essential condition of a valid award, did not give a definite finding on the question of the service of notice on the plaintiff, to the payment of Rs. 200 by defendant to plaintiff, the Munsif held that plaintiff was at liberty to receive the money if paid to the Sarpanchas or to claim it by a suit.

The District Judge held that, whatever disputes existed with regard to the land in suit were included within the reference to arbitration; that the award of 1917, Exhibit D-3, was a valid one. It was signed by all the Panchas and was already validated in the lower Court by realising the stamp-duty and penalty; that plaintiff-appellant had received notice of the date of making award and if he remained absent that was a matter of his own choice; that the reference to arbitration was not withdrawn either expressly or by implication by the parties and that there was no evidence to support the contention that the award was a fraudulent one. As regards payment of Rs. 200 the lower Appellate Court held, on the evidence of Beohar Raghubir Singh, that the defendant-respondent had actually deposited this amount with him as Sarpancha and it saw no reason to direct the defendant to pay the amount to plaintiff in this suit. In the end, it was held that the defendant-respondent's title having been made out sufficiently clearly and the award being binding on both parties the plaintiff's claim was rightly dismissed.

In second appeal three grounds are urged: (1) that the award dated 12th July 1921 was not legally valid and could not affect the plaintiff's right to the fields; (2) that there was no valid award between the parties and, therefore, the case should have been tried and decided on the merits, and (3) that the present dispute was not referred to arbitrators for decision by the Ikrarnama dated 21st May 1917 which has been wrongly interpreted by the Courts below. All the questions raised are, to my mind, questions on which there are concurrent findings of fact. As regards ground No. 1, suffice it to say that the Courts below did not treat the award dated 12th July 1921, Exhibit D-2, as a valid award. They regarded the award of 7th November 1917, Exhibit D-3, as the real award in the case.

No question, therefore, about the award dated 12th July 1921, Exhibit D-2, affecting the plaintiff's right to the fields claimed at all arises for consideration by me. As regards ground No. 3, I am not prepared to hold that the Courts below have committed any error in interpreting the Ikrarnama. If we look into the proceedings of the arbitrators, as also the deposition of Beohar Raghubir Singh and the award Exhibit D-3, it will be clear that plaintiff was desirous of having the question relating to the lands in suit settled by the Panchas. The finding seems to be correct and must stand.

Ground No. 2 is rather general and under that ground a long argument was addressed to show that there was no valid award between the parties which barred the present suit. Several matters not expressly pleaded challenging the validity of the award, were pressed by the appellant at the hearing; for example, though the appellant's case in the Court of first instance was that there was no award at all in 1917, the concurrent finding of fact was that there was such an award in 1917. He had challenged the validity of the award on the ground of want of publication, and characterised the proceedings of the arbitrators as fraudulent and void on account of their misconduct, but all the same he did not challenge its validity either on the ground that there was an interpolation in the terms of the Ikrarnama, or on the ground that the land in suit was not included in the reference, or that the words "Jagha Jamin" in the Ikrarnama were not sufficiently wide to include a claim in respect of the land in suit. Neither did he contend in the first Court that the award left some items undecided, nor that the decision related to some and not all the parties to the reference. If I were to allow points such as these to be taken at this late stage of second appeal, it would be enabling a defeated litigant to evade his defeat by devising a new case which was never set up when it should have been set up. The Court of appeal is not justified in exposing a party after he has obtained his decree to the brunt of a new attack of which he had never had notice during the hearing of the suit: Nathu Piraji v. Umedmal Gadumal (1). All these are points which, no doubt, might have been taken in answer to the plea of the defendant based on the award but they were never taken and cannot, therefore, be allowed to be raised at this final stage of appeal. These points, if pressed at the hearing, would have been replied to and witnesses could have been examined and cross-examined with reference thereto. I see no reason to allow them to be pressed before me.

(1) 1 Ind. Cas. 466; 88 B 85; 10 Bom. I. R. 768.

One important question raised about the validity of the award on the ground of its non-publication remains to be disposed of. In this case I do not find that any date was fixed by the terms of the Ikrarnama before which the award was to be made. The arbitrators were, therefore, within their rights to make the award within a reasonable time. The Ikrarnama does not also specify the mode of delivery of the award whether it was to be delivered to "every party" or to "both parties" or to "the parties or one of them." In the absence of any express stipulation, I think the duty of the arbitrators was to have the award ready for delivery to the parties at their request and to acquaint them with the fact within a reasonable time. The time of actual delivery in such a case is not material. Moreover, the submission of Exhibit D-1 does not provide that the arbitrators shall "make and publish" their award. It is only where the submission provides for the making and publishing of the award that the award is not valid unless it is published, see Armist v. Breame (2), quoted in Russell on Arbitration and Award, 10th Edition, page 436. It is observed by the learned author that this does not seem to be a matter of any practical importance because an award is generally regarded as "published" as soon as the arbitrator has done any act whereby he becomes functus officio. In other words, as soon as the arbitrator has made a complete award, such award is regarded as made and published. It is needless to add that the law casts upon the arbitrator no obligation to stamp the award, and he does not usually do so. So the award was complete though it was unstamped and, therefore, inadmissible in evidence. As stated above, the Appellate Court has held that notice was given to plaintiff but the latter remained absent. In view of this finding the plaintiff cannot make his own negligence to attend before the arbitrators to inform himself about the actual decision, a ground for saying that the award was not valid for non-publication to him

Rightly or wrongly, both parties laboured under a misapprehension as regards the binding character of the award made upon a reference made by them to the arbitrators. The defendant being in possession of the property was not particular about furnishing the required stamp to the arbitrators to engross the award thereon. The plaintiff, on the other hand, presumably believed that the original award in respect of which notice was served on him "would not be available for any purpose whatsoever until the same was engrossed upon a stamped paper" as required by the Stamp Law and he was naturally not interested in furnishing the stamp himself. That award of 1917 was stamped and validated in the course of this suit; this validation had, under the Stamp Law, a retrospective effect but for this validation the award was inadmissible in evidence and the Court could not act upon it though filed in the case as an Exhibit D-3. It has now, by reason of the validation by the Court on the recovery of the stamp duty and penalty on 19th December 1921, furnished a good defence to the suit, and the plaintiff's suit gets defeated by it. Under these circumstances, I think the plaintiff may be said to have had ample justification to file the suit on 3rd February 1921, but that he has lost his right to continue it as soon as the award of 1917 was validated and became admissible in evidence as an answer to the claim.

Under ordinary circumstances every plaintiff has got a right to say that the rights of the parties should be adjudicated upon as they existed at the date of the suit, and that the Court should not take notice of any events that have happened during the pendency of the suit. I need only say that this rule is not an invariable rule; there are several exceptions to it. Every Court will in exceptional cases depart from this rule especially where by so doing it can shorten a litigation and best attain the ends of justice by preserving the rights of both parties. It is not only in the power but it sometimes is the duty of even a Court of appeal to take notice of events which have happened during the pendency of appeal, and such events not appearing on the record could be allowed to be proved by extrinsic evidence. This power is, as stated by Mr. Justice Thayer in Ransom v. City of Pierre (3), cited with approval in Ram Ratan Sahu v. Bishun Chand (4), based on the principle that, 'it is the duty of the Court which still retains control of the judgment, to take such action as will shorten litigation, preserve the rights of both parties and best subserve the ends of justice.' In the interest of justice, therefore, I think both the Courts were bound to take notice of the award of 1917 (Exhibit D-3) as validated and to give effect to it.

I cannot see any reason why in giving effect to the award the proper form of relief to which the plaintiff was entitled under the terms of the very same award should not have been granted to him in this very suit in place of the larger relief which he claimed. I think equity demands this. I, therefore, while upholding the dismissal of the plaintiff's claim for a declaration of his title to the property in suit, and for injunction for restraining the defendant from interfering with the plaintiff's possession and for the relief about the amount of Rs. 420 on account of lease money, order that a direction be added in the decree to the following effect: "that the defendant do pay to plaintiff Rs. 200 as directed by the award."

Admittedly, the payment of this amount was a condition precedent to the defendant's retaining the land to himself as the evidence of defendant's own witness No. 1 and the terms of the award Exhibit D-3 will show. The defendant had the use of this money as also the usufruct of the land from 7th November 1917 to the end of July 1921 after which the witness says the same was deposited with him. I do not regard the deposit of the money with D. W. 1 as a sufficient compliance with the direction of the award. The defendant ought to have deposited that money into Court as a complete answer to the claim. This he has not done. I do not, therefore, think it equitable to allow the defendant to have the use of the money as also the usufruct and to merely order him to pay Rs. 200 only to the defendant. I think the ends of justice will be met by an award of interest on the amount at Court rate from 7th November 1917 till satisfaction. A further direction will, therefore, be inserted in the decree that interest should be paid from 7th November 1917 until satisfaction of this amount. As regards costs I think that the circumstances of the case show that both parties had laboured under some misapprehension of their rights and it is, therefore, but just and proper that each party should bear his own costs throughout and I order accordingly.

Where one member of a joint Hindu family enters into a contract of partnership with a stranger, the other members of the family do not become partners and cannot sue for dissolution of the partnership. The partnership is dissolved by the death of the member who is a partner, and limitation for a suit for an account of the partnership begins to run from the date of the death of the partner. JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are set out in the judgments of the Courts below. The plaintiff brought a suit for accounts of a partnership alleging that his deceased brother Lachhusa entered into partnership with defendant 1 on behalf of the joint family and that on his death on 9th December 1917 the plaintiff and defendant 2 as survivors of the joint family continued the partnership, of which the plaintiff sues for accounts.

The first Court found that Lachhusa did not represent the joint family; that the partnership was dissolved on the death of Lachhusa, and that the present claim is time-barred.

On appeal the District Judge, Nimar, upheld the finding of the first Court, holding that the partnership was dissolved by operation of section 253, Contract Act, on the death of Lachhusa; that the suit was time-barred, and that though the claim for a share of assets subsequently coming into the hands of the defendant might lie, the present claim was not one of that description and the appeal, therefore, failed. The plaintiff makes this second appeal.

It is settled law that the contract of partnership entered into by Lachhusa with defendant 1 does not make the other members of the family partners, and they not being partners cannot institute any suit for dissolution of partnership; cf. Grande Gungayya v. Grande Venkataramiah (1). The learned District Judge has relied on Sokkanadha Vanni Mundayar v. Sokkanadha Vanni Mundayar (2), in which it was held that where the manager of a joint Hindu family enters into a partnership for the family benefit with a person, a stranger to the family, the partnership is dissolved on the death of the manager in the absence of any agreement with the survivors. It was further held that, although a suit for a general account of a partnership will be barred under Schedule II, Article 106 of the Limitation Act, if brought more than three years after the dissolution of the partnership, a suit will lie for recovering a share of any particular assets received by a partner after such dissolution, if such suit is brought within time and if such claim, having regard to previous dealings, is not inequitable. The latter part of this case has been overruled by the Privy Council in Gopala Chetty v. Vijayaraghavachariar (3) in which it was held that if the right of a partner to sue for an account is barred by limitation, he cannot sue the partner who has subsequently received any assets for a share of them. The case in 28 Mad., 344 is referred to and disapproved as to this particular point. No question, therefore, would arise of the right of the plaintiff to sue for any assets received by the defendant subsequently to the dissolution of the partnership.

The remaining portion of the 28 Mad. case, however, is still law and it must, therefore, be held that the partnership was dissolved on the death of Lachhusa in December 1917, and limitation for a suit for accounts began to run from that date, and the present suit is time-barred, being brought on the July 1921.

The only other argument on which the present suit could be supported is that there was a contract that the partnership should not be dissolved on the death of Lachhusa. There is no pleading to this effect and no evidence. The plaint is based on the allegation that after the death of Lachhusa the partnership business was continued by the plaintiff on behalf of the joint family, this being apparently based on the supposition that all the members of the family were partners, which is not the law. There is no evidence that the partnership was continued between the sons of Lachhusa, or any of them, and the defendant after the death of Lachhusa. It has been contended that the fact that certain bags of linseed, which were purchased on behalf of the partnership, were sold after the death of Lachhusa and the proceeds paid to defendants with the consent of the plaintiff, is an indication that the partnership continued. In my opinion it is not an indication of anything of the kind. Obviously, the linseed which was purchased during the continuance of the partnership had to be sold and converted into cash after the dissolution as there was no object in keeping it; it merely represents the assets of the partnership. As the plaintiff was a representative of a deceased partner, though not a partner himself, he would be entitled to a share in the assets, and, therefore, it is not unnatural that his consent should be taken by the broker who sold the goods to the payment of these assets to the defendants.

In these circumstances, it is clear that the partnership came to an end on the death of Lachhusa, that the present suit for accounts is time-barred, and that there is no indication Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 181, 182—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 144, 151—Application for restitution, nature of—Limitation—Patna High Court, whether bound by decisions of Calcutta High Court.

Held by the majority (Ross, J., dissenting):—An application for restitution under section 144 or 151 of the Civil Procedure Code is not an application for execution, and the proper Article of the Limitation Act applicable to such an application is Article 181 of the first Schedule of the Act.

Case law discussed.

Per Das, J.:—Article 182 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act applies to such applications for execution as are contemplated by the Code of Civil Procedure and are provided in O. XXI of the Code. An application for restitution is not such an application. The jurisdiction to order restitution is inherent in the Court and flows not from any power which it may have to carry into effect the decree or order of the Court, but from the recognition of the duty which it owes to the suitors to take care that no injury is done to them by its acts. The Code of Civil Procedure and the Limitation Act are the two great procedure Codes in India. They are Statutes in pari materia and are to be taken together as forming one system and as interpreting and enforcing each other. [p. 206, col. 1]

The Patna High Court should not, without very good reason, depart from a long course of decisions of the Calcutta High Court, especially on points of procedure. [p. 207, col. 1]

Second appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge, Purulia, dated the 18th January 1923, reversing that of the Munsif, Purulia, dated the 26th November 1921.

Mr. A. B. Mukharji, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. K. Roy, for the Respondents.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO FULL BENCH.

Mullick, J.—Abinash Chandra Karmakar and Satish Chandra Karmakar brought a suit against Basanta Kumari Dassi and her brother for rent and ejectment in respect of a house and obtained an ex parte decree on the 10th January 1917. On the 29th March of the same year the plaintiffs in that suit got possession of the house. On the 18th June 1917 the ex parte decree was set aside and the suit was restored for hearing. The result of the re-trial was that the suit was dismissed on the 7th March 1918. On the 13th July 1918 an appeal from that decision to the District Judge was also dismissed on the ground that the plaintiffs had no title. The defence of Basanta Kumari in that suit was that the house had been acquired by her husband from one Dwarka Nath Karmakar and on her husband's death devolved upon her son with whose consent she and her brother were occupying the house.

The ex parte decree having been set aside, the appellant preferred an application on the 29th June 1921 under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code asking that she might be restored to possession. By that time Abinash Karmakar and Satish Chandra Karmakar were no longer in possession. It appears that in 1914 they had mortgaged the house to one Bal Mukund who obtained a decree upon his mortgage and took possession on the 24th May 1918.

The Munsif, who was the Court of first instance and to whom the application for restitution was presented, dismissed it on the ground that it was barred by limitation. It was also contended before him that restitution could not be obtained against Bal Mukund who was not the representative of the plaintiffs Abinash Chandra Karmakar and Satish Chandra Karmakar in the original suit; but on this point the Munsif decided in the appellant's favour.

BALMAKUNDA MARWARI v. BASANTA KUMARI DASSI

In appeal the Subordinate Judge took the view that as Basanta Kumari had no title and was only in possession with the permission of her son, she was not competent to apply for restitution.

Basanta Kumari then preferred a second appeal, namely, No. 144 of 1922, to this Court which was heard by a Division Bench with the result that the appeal was remanded for rehearing by a judgment which is reported in Basanta Kumari Dassi v. Balmakund Marwari (1). The Division Bench held that restitution could be obtained against Balmakund. On the question of limitation they held that Article 182 of Schedule I of the Indian Limitation Act was applicable and that if Basanta Kumari could prove that she presented an application for recovery of possession on the 1st June 1918, and that the proceedings on her application were stayed by the order of the District Judge from the 1st June till the 13th July 1918 then the application was within the period allowed by Article 182.

The Subordinate Judge has now allowed the application for restitution, holding that on the 1st of June 1918 the applicant made an application for restoration of possession, that she was entitled to deduction of time during the period of stay, that is, from the 1st June till the 13th July 1918, and that her application was within three years of the 1st June 1918. He also found that on the 11th June 1919 the petitioner made another application for restoration of possession and that her application of the 29th June 1921 was, therefore, within time in any case without making any deduction for the period of the stay of the proceedings.

The present second appeal, No. 65 of 1923, is preferred against the Subordinate Judge's order.

The sole question argued before us here is the point of limitation.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant Balmakund Marwari that Article 181 and not Article 182 is applicable to the case and if that is so, then the right of restitution having accrued on the 18th June 1917 and the application for restitution having been made on the 29th June 1921 the application was barred under the provisions of Article 181 even after making allowance for the period between the 1st June and the 13th July 1918. On behalf of the respondents it is contended that the judgment of the Division Bench in Appeal No. 144 of 1922 conclusively decided that Article 182 and not Article 181 is applicable, and it is urged that it res judicata.

In my opinion a careful perusal of the judgment shows that it was not the intention of the Court to decide finally what was the period of limitation in this case and the matter is still open for decision.

There is, however, considerable difference of opinion on the point. The Division Bench have cited with approval Soma Sundaram Pillai v. Chokkalingam Pillai (2), where it was held that Article 182 was applicable to an application for restitution. In Kurgodigowda Bin Lingangouda v. Ningangouda (3) the question was whether section 6 of the Indian Limitation Act could be applied to extend time on the ground of minority in the case of an application for restitution and it was observed that, for the purposes of section 6 such an application could fairly be treated as an application for execution. On the other hand, Shibai v. Yeso (4) is clear authority for the contrary view that Article 181 is applicable. In Kirpa Sindhu Roy v. Mahanta Raibhadra Das (5) it appears to have been admitted that Article 181 was applicable; but the matter was considered and the respondents contend that it is an authority which conflicts with the decision of the Division Bench.

In the circumstances, we think that the question is one which should be referred to the Full Bench.

There can be no doubt that for the purpose of appeal an order made in a proceeding for restitution is a decree within the meaning of the Civil Procedure Code, but the question is whether the application for restitution which starts the proceeding is an application for the execution of a decree. The relevant section in the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 was section 583 and section 144 of the present Code considerably amplifies that section and makes clear various points on which there was conflict. It was held in some cases, for instance, that a separate suit for restitution would lie. The present section omits all reference to execution and also in clear terms bars a separate suit. The section, when read with section 36 of the Code, provides that an order for restitution will be enforced as far as possible as a decree, but it does not say that the order is a decree.

Again, the section applies only to cases where a decree is varied or reversed, and it may be contended that the reference to a Court of first instance indicates that the reversal should be made by an Appellate Court but, in my opinion, the words 'Court of first instance' do not control the preceding words. In any event, section 151 of the Code would apply and relief could be given under the inherent powers even if section 144 was not expressly applicable to cases of reversal of ex parte decrees.

But whether the decree of reversal be made by an Appellate Court or by the Court of first instance, the question is whether the application for restitution is an application for the enforcement of any relief given by a decree. There is really no decree to execute for the decree does not say that the defendant is to be restored to possession. Indeed, it could not give any such direction for the simple reason that a decree only speaks with reference to the facts upon which a plaint is founded and cannot take into account events which have happened thereafter. O. XXI, which contains rules framed for giving effect to section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and which prescribes how an application for execution shall be framed and what procedure shall be followed in execution proceedings, does not refer to any application for restitution.

The same reasoning applies to the contention that, though there may be no decrees, there is at least an implied order which is capable of execution under Order XXI. Order XXI does relate to the execution of decrees and orders, but orders not expressly referred to therein do not come within its purview.

An application for restitution, therefore, is, in my opinion, not an application for execution within the meaning of the Civil Procedure Code.

The next question is whether the words 'application for execution' have a wider meaning in Article 182 of Schedule I of the Indian Limitation Act. I think the answer must be in the negative. The Indian Limitation Act was amended in the same year as the Civil Procedure Code and must be read in conjunction with that Act. The term 'execution' in Article 182 means execution in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code and refers, in my opinion, only to those decrees and orders which are referred to in Order XXI.

If an order setting aside an ex parte decree carried with it an implied decree or order for restitution, subject to the rules contained in section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and in Order XXI, then there was no necessity for prescribing expressly in section 144 that no suit shall be instituted, for that prohibition is already contained in section 47. In my opinion an application for restitution is an original application, something in the nature of a suit and is governed by Article 181.

Accordingly, as we differ from the decision of the Division Bench above referred to, we refer this appeal for final decision to a Full Bench.

The question to be decided is whether Article 181 or Article 182 of Schedule I of the Indian Limitation Act is applicable to an application for the exercise of the power of restitution conferred either by section 144 or 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, and if neither of the above Articles is applicable, then is there any other Article applicable to the case.

Bucknill, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT OF FULL BENCH.

Das, J.—The question formulated for the decision of the Full Bench is as follows:—Whether Article 181 or Article 182 of Sch. I of the Indian Limitation Act is applicable to an application for the exercise of the power of restitution conferred either by section 144 or section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and, if neither of the above Articles is applicable, then, is there any other Article applicable to the case. A preliminary argument was advanced to us on behalf of the respondent to the effect that the reference is not competent having regard to the fact that a Division Bench of this Court, presided over by the learned Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad, expressed a final opinion on this point at an earlier stage of this case. It appears that two questions were involved in the application for restitution presented by the defendant-respondent, Basanta Kumari Dassi, first, whether the application was not barred by limitation, and, secondly, whether Balmakunda, the appellant, against whom the application was made could be regarded, in the circumstances of the case, as the representative-in-interest of the plaintiffs, who obtained a decree against Basanta Kumari which decree was subsequently set aside on appeal. It may be mentioned that Balmakunda was not a party to the suit but is in actual possession of the property which is the subject-matter of the application for restitution by virtue of his purchase at a Court sale held in pursuance of a decree which had been obtained by him against the plaintiffs. The learned Munsif to whom the application for restitution was presented, dismissed it on the ground that it was barred by limitation. He held, however, that Balmakunda was the representative of the plaintiffs, and that an effective order could be made against him provided the application was within time. Basanta Kumari appealed from the decision of the Munsif; and the learned Subordinate Judge dealing with the appeal took the view that no application for restitution could be made by Basanta Kumari against Balmakunda. Having arrived at that conclusion he thought it unnecessary to deal with the question of limitation and he left that question undecided. From that decision Basanta Kumari appealed to this Court and a Division Bench of this Court, presided over by the Hon'ble the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad, took the view that Balmakunda was the representative of the plaintiffs and in that view the Division Bench set aside the decision of the Subordinate Judge and remanded the case to him for considering the question of limitation. The whole argument of the respondent is based on this decision of the Division Bench which has been reported in Basanta Kumari Dassi v. Balmakund Marwari (1), and it has been strongly insisted before us that the Division Bench decided finally that Article 182 was applicable to an application for restitution and that it became necessary for the Division Bench to remand the question of limitation to the Subordinate Judge only because it was urged on behalf of Balmakunda that, even on the assumption that Article 182 was applicable, the application for restitution was barred by limitation. It appears that certain facts which it was necessary for Basanta Kumari to establish to enable her to contend that her application for restitution, regarded as an application for execution, was within time were not before the Division Bench of this Court as the question had not been gone into by the learned Subordinate Judge; and the whole argument of Mr. A. K. Roy on behalf of the respondent was to the effect that the only question which was left for the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge was whether, upon the facts, the application of Basanta Kumari was within time, the Division Bench having decided finally that the application must be regarded as an application for execution. On remand the learned Subordinate Judge considered that he was bound by the decision of this Court that Article 182 was applicable to an application for restitution; and he came to the conclusion that, in the circumstances of the facts proved before him, the application was within time. From that decision there was an appeal to this Court and another Division Bench of this Court, presided over by Mullick and Bucknill JJ., took the view that the question had not been finally decided by the earlier decision of the Division Bench and, being of opinion that the question was of sufficient importance, has referred it for the decision of the Full Bench.

It is obvious that if the question was in fact decided by the Division Bench by its decision reported in Basanta Kumari Dassi v. Balmakund Marwari (1), it was not open to another Division Bench at another stage of the case to allow the question to be re-agitated before it. I have, however, come to the conclusion that the question was not in fact decided by the Division Bench. I am willing to admit that there are expressions in the leading judgment which strongly support the argument advanced on behalf of the respondent; but the question must, in my opinion, be decided on the terms of the actual order passed by the Court. Now, the actual order runs as follows:—"In the result, we set aside the decision of the Subordinate Judge refusing the appellant's application but as the appellant's right to succeed in that application must still depend upon the question of limitation, we direct that the learned Subordinate Judge, before finally disposing of the appeal, to consider the question of limitation and come to a decision thereon in the light of the facts already before him." It will be observed that the whole question of limitation was remanded for the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge, and not the narrower question of fact, namely, whether Basanta Kumari had taken certain steps in execution which would save her application for restitution under Article 182 of the Limitation Act. It is worthy of note that Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad agreed "to the order proposed", namely, the order remanding the question of limitation for the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge. As I have said already, the judgment of the learned Chief Justice leaves no room for doubt that in his opinion Article 182 is applicable to an application for restitution, but if he had intended to decide the question finally and if Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad agreed with that view, the order of remand would have been couched in different language. It is one thing to express a view, it is another and a different thing to decide a point. I can hardly believe that so careful a Judge as the learned Chief Justice should have asked the Subordinate Judge to decide the question of limitation, if he had decided it himself; and though I quite agree that it was in any case necessary to remand the case for the investigation of certain facts upon which alone it could be argued that the application for restitution was within time, even assuming that Article 182 was applicable to such an application, the form of order, in my opinion, precludes the argument that the Court decided that Article 182 was applicable and remanded the case merely for the investigation of an issue of fact. If the argument of the learned Vakil for the respondent were well founded the Court should have remanded the case under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 25 and not under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 23. In any event, I cannot ignore that Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad was careful to say that he agreed to the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice and that the order proposed left the whole question of limitation to be decided by the learned Subordinate Judge.

In my opinion the question of limitation was not decided by the Division Bench and it was open to Mullick and Bucknill, JJ., to refer it for the decision of the Full Bench. I would accordingly overrule the preliminary point raised on behalf of the respondent.

I now come to the point raised in the order of reference, namely, whether Article 181 or Article 182 is applicable to an order for restitution. Now, it seems to me that, before dealing with the question, it is necessary to have a clear idea as to what is meant by restitution, and whether the jurisdiction as to restitution is the same as the jurisdiction as to execution. Article 182 applies to an application for execution of a decree or order; and the broad question which we have to determine is whether an application for restitution is in essence an application for execution. That the jurisdiction to make restitution exists and is inherent in every Court is not open to doubt; nor is it open to doubt that that jurisdiction flows, not from any express power that might be given in that behalf by the Legislature, but from the recognition of the principle that, "it is the duty of the Courts to take care that no act of the Court in the course of the whole of the proceedings does an injury to the suitors in the Court." Rodger v. The Comptoir de Paris (6). I desire to emphasise the point that this jurisdiction was not for the first time conferred by the Code of Civil Procedure but that it existed independently of the Code and could be, and was in fact, exercised whenever the act of the Court did any injury to the suitors. Execution, on the other hand, signifies the enforcement or effectuation of the judgments or orders of Courts of Justice. In a narrower sense, it means the enforcement of such judgments or orders by a public officer under certain express powers conferred by the Code. Execution presupposes a decree or order capable of being carried into effect; restitution presupposes an act of the Court which has done an injury to the suitors. Execution will issue as of course; but in cases not comprehended strictly within the letter of section 144 of the Code, restitution is not a matter of course but depends upon the discretion of the Court and will be ordered only when the justice of the case calls for : it Ashutosh v. Upendra (7). It seems to me that when the nature of the jurisdiction as to restitution is closely examined, it will be found that it bears only a superficial resemblance to the jurisdiction as to execution.

The argument in favour of the view that restitution is by way of execution has been put very forcibly and concisely by the learned Chief Justice of this Court in his order of remand reported in Basanta Kumari Dassi v. Balmakund Marwari (1): "Although" said his Lordship, "an application under section 144 is not included in O. XXI which lays down the rules of procedure in execution cases still in substance I think that an application asking for restitution in consequence of a decree having been set aside is just as much an application in execution of that decree as any other application which seeks to have the actual declarations in the decree enforced. It is true that the decree only deals with it in a negative sort of way but in fact the result of setting aside a decree in favour of one party is to give the other the right to be restored to the same position as he was in before that decree was passed and to set aside any advantage that the decree-holder might have obtained by executing the decree." I understand that the view of the learned Chief Justice is that restitution is nothing more than carrying into effect this negative aspect of the decree. Now, let me take a concrete case. A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 5,000 and recovers the money from B by levying execution. The decree is ultimately set aside in appeal. I quite agree that the decree reversing the primary decree is authority for the view that A should refund to B the sum of money taken by him in execution, but in making restitution the Court has complete power to direct A not only to pay the sum of Rs. 5,000, but also to pay interest upon the sum to B. Upon what is the jurisdiction to compel payment of interest founded? I quite agree that the appellate decree, in so far as it reversed the decree of the Court of first instance, may be read as containing a direction by implication that A should refund to B the sum of money taken by him in execution, but there is no direction, either express or by implication, that A should pay interest on the sum seized by him by virtue of a wrong order of the Court. There is no jurisdiction in a Court executing a decree to award interest where the decree itself is silent as to interest. Whence, then, does the Court derive jurisdiction to compel a party to refund not only the principal sum seized by him in execution of an erroneous decree of Court (as to which there may be a direction by implication in the decree reversing the original decree) but also interest upon that sum (as to which there is no direction whatever either express or by implication)?

The answer, I think, is given by Lord Cairns in the leading case of Rodger v. The Comptoir de Paris (6). That was a case in which the Supreme Court of Hong-Kong gave a decree for money to the plaintiff in an action for trover. There was an appeal to the Privy Council, but pending the appeal the plaintiff recovered the sum decreed in his favour by levying execution. The Privy Council set aside the judgment of the Supreme Court of Hong-Kong and directed non-suit to be entered. The defendant, the successful party in the Privy Council, applied for restitution not only of the money which had been paid under the original decree, but also of interest upon all the sums paid. The Supreme Court at Hong-Kong took the view that there being no direction as to payment of interest in the decree of the Privy Council and interest not being recoverable either at common law or by statute in the case of repayment of money erroneously paid under a judgment which is reversed, it had no power to direct the payment of interest upon the sums paid under the original decree. Lord Cairns, after pointing out that it was the duty of the tribunals to take care that no act of the Court does an injury to suitors in the Court, proceeded to say as follows: "It is contended on the part of the respondents here, that the principal sum being restored to the present petitioners, they have no right to recover from them any interest. It is obvious that, if that is so, injury, and very grave injury, will be done to the petitioners. They will by reason of an act of the Court have paid a sum which it is now ascertained was ordered to be paid by mistake and wrongfully. They will recover that sum after the lapse of a considerable time, but they will recover it without ordinary fruits which are derived from the enjoyment of money. On the other hand, those fruits will have been enjoyed, or may have been enjoyed, by the person who by mistake and by wrong obtained possession of the money under a judgment which has been reversed. So far as, therefore, principle is concerned, their Lordships have no doubt or hesitation in saying that injustice will be done to the petitioners, and that the perfect judicial determination which it must be the object of all Courts to arrive at, will not have been arrived at unless the persons who have had their money improperly taken from them have the money restored to them, with interest during the time that the money has been withheld." It will be noticed that Lord Cairns does not base his decision upon the ground that there was in that case a decree which could only be carried into effect by directing payment not only of the principal sums paid under the erroneous decree of the Court of first instance but also of the interest on those sums. His decision, on the other hand, is based upon the view that it is the duty of the Court to take care that no injury is done to the suitors by any act of the Court. In my opinion the decision of Lord Cairns is authority for the view that the jurisdiction to order restitution is inherent in the Court and that it flows, not from any power which it may have to carry into effect the decree or order of the Court, but from the recognition of the duty which it owes to the suitors to take care that no injury is done to them by its acts.

The next question is, has the Civil Procedure Code and the Limitation Act expressed a different view as to the nature of restitution? It has been argued before us that the Code of 1882 contains a clear intimation to the effect that an application for restitution is to be regarded as an application for execution and that it was not the intention of the Code of 1908 in any way to alter the law on the subject. The provision as to restitution found its place in the Code of 1882 in the Chapter dealing with appeals, not in the Chapter dealing with executions and section 583, which contains the provision as to restitution, ran as follows:—"When a party entitled to any benefit (by way of restitution or otherwise) under a decree passed in an appeal under this Chapter desires to obtain execution of the same he shall apply to the Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred, and such Court shall proceed to execute the decree passed in appeal according to the rules hereinbefore prescribed for the execution of decrees in suits." I can find nothing in section 583 to encourage the argument that in the Code of 1882 the Legislature expressed the view that an application for restitution was to be regarded as an application for execution. If that was the view of the Legislature, the provision should have found its place not in the Chapter relating to appeals but in the Chapter relating to execution. It no doubt laid down the procedure as to the execution of an order for restitution, but there is no suggestion whatever in the section itself that an order for restitution should be considered as an order for execution. The Code of 1908 removes any doubt that might arise upon the interpretation of the earlier Code. The word "decree" has been defined in the Code of 1908 to include the determination of any question within section 144. In other words, the order under section 144 is itself a decree and capable of execution as such. It is, in my opinion, impossible now to contend that an order for restitution is an order in execution.

Apart from any other consideration, it seems to me that the term "application for the execution of a decree or order" in Art. 182 of the Limitation Act must be understood in the sense in which that term is used in the Code of Civil Procedure. The Code of Civil Procedure and the Indian Limitation Act are the two great Procedural Codes in India and they were amended in the same year and were to come into operation on the same day. They are Statutes in pari materia and are to be taken together as forming one system, and as interpreting and enforcing each other—see Palmer's case (8). Now, Article 182 applies in terms to applications for executions of decrees or orders. Applications for execution of decrees or orders are dealt with in O. XXI of the Code. In my opinion, Article 182 applies to such applications for execution as are contemplated by the Code and are provided for in O. XXI of the Code. It is not disputed that an application for restitution is not an application provided for in O. XXI of the Code.

This is my view of the question submitted for the decision of the Full Bench, but even if that were not my view, I think I would be bound to follow the decisions of the Calcutta High Court, which are to the effect that an application for restitution is governed by Article 181 and not Article 182 of the Limitation Act. See Harish Chandra Shaha v. Chandra Mohan Shaha (9); Masurunnissa Khatun v. Joy Chand Lal (10); Gangadhar Marwari v. Lachman Singh (11) and Asutosh Gossain v. Upen'ra Prosad Mitra (7). It is quite true that a different view has been taken in the other High Courts but, as was pointed out by the Full Bench of this Court in Haji Abdul Ganiv. Raja Ram (12), "this Court should not, without very good reason, depart from a long course of decisions of the Calcutta High Court." The question raised in the order of reference is a question of procedure and to do otherwise than follow the decisions of the Calcutta High Court on the point would cause great and unnecessary confusion. It has been contended before us that the question has not been argued in the Calcutta High Court as to the applicability of Article 181 as opposed to the applicability of Article 182 in relation to an application for restitution. That may be so, but where the question is one of procedure, it is of the utmost importance that the suitors should know where they stand and it is not a matter of much moment that the question was not raised in the Calcutta High Court in the form in which it has been raised here. It is sufficient that the Calcutta High Court has intimated to the suitors that Article 181 applies to an application for restitution. It is worthy of note that in this Court the view has been taken that Article 181 is applicable to an application for restitution: See Kripasindhu Roy v. Mahanta Balbhadra Das, (5). In my opinion Article 181 is applicable to an application for restitution and as it is conceded before us that if Article 181 applies the application is clearly barred by limitation, I would allow this appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and restore the order of the Court of first instance.

Ross, J.—The first point for consideration is whether it was decided by this Court in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 144 of 1922 that the Article governing the case is Article 182. Two questions were raised in that appeal. The first was whether Balmakunda Marwari, then respondent No. 1, was the representative in interest of the other two respondents, so that restitution might be claimed as against him. The other was the question of limitation. The Munsif had decided both these points; the first in favour of the present respondent, and the second against her. The Subordinate Judge on appeal had held that the present respondent was not entitled to regain possession from anybody; and, without dealing with the question of limitation, had dismissed the application. In this Court the first question dealt with was the position of Balmakunda. It was held that his position was no better than that of his mortgagors and that the application for restitution was maintainable as against him. The Court then turned to the question of limitation which had not been dealt with by the Subordinate Judge. It was pointed out that it was not quite clear from the Munsif's judgment how far any application for execution of the decree was made or how far that application included a claim to be restored to possession of the property. The Subordinate Judge, who might have gone into the evidence, had not done so. But before sending back the case for a determination of this question by the lower Appellate Court, the learned Chief Justice considered that he had to be satisfied that, even upon the facts so far as known, the then appellant really had a case to present upon this part of the appeal. In this connection the question of Articles 181 and 182 was discussed. The opinion was expressed that Article 182 applied, and, there being, therefore, a case to present upon this part of the appeal, the case was remanded in the following terms: "In the result, we set aside the decision of the Subordinate Judge refusing the appellant's application; but as the appellant's right to succeed in that application must still depend upon the question of limitation, we direct that the learned Subordinate Judge, before finally disposing of the appeal, to consider the question of limitation and come to a decision thereon in the light of the facts already before him. For that purpose he will be entitled, of course, to consider any orders in the case that have been made and that appear in the order sheet in the Court records or in the record before him." It seems to me plain from the terms of this order that the remand was a remand of the whole case under O. XLI, r. 23 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Subordinate Judge had in effect disposed of the application on a preliminary point and the Appellate Court remanded the case directing what issue was to be tried. It was not a remand under O. XLI, r. 25 of the Civil Procedure Code. The whole question of limitation was before the Subordinate Judge and in my opinion it was not and could not have been the intention of this Court to decide a part of the question, namely, the Article of the Limitation Act applicable, and leave a part only, namely, the question of fact for the decision of the Court to which the remand was made. The applicability of Articles 181 or 182 had to be discussed in order that the Court might be satisfied that there was a case worth remanding; but the opinion expressed on that part of the case was limited to that purpose and was not, in my opinion, intended to be in any sense conclusive of the question. On this point, therefore, I agree with the judgment that has just been delivered.

I now turn to the question whether Article 181 or Article 182 applies to an application for restitution and on this point I am of a different opinion. I can see no reason in principle why an application for restitution should not be treated as an application for execution. There may be no express direction for restitution in the decree, but restitution follows as a necessary consequence where a decree that has been executed is varied or reversed and the effect of section 144 of the Code is that a direction for restitution is implied in the decree. The order reversing or varying a decree is by implication an order for restitution of any property taken in execution of that decree and is immediately capable of execution. To my mind, the words of the section: "The Court.....shall.....cause.....restitution to be made" import execution. It may be noted, in passing, that in England if a judgment for the recovery of land be reversed or set aside after possession has been obtained thereunder, restitution may be obtained by a writ of possession addressed to the Sheriff

Authority also seems to me to be decidedly in favour of this view.

Three decisions in Calcutta were cited in which it was held that Article 181 applied. In Harish Chandra Singh v. Chandra Mohan Dass (9) the learned Judges referred to the decisions in Nand Ram v. Sita Ram (13) and Kurupam Zamindar v. Sadasiva (14) and said that they were disposed to agree with the latter; but added that whether Article 178 or Article 179 of the second Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act of 1877 (Act XV of 1877) applied, the application was out of time. The question, therefore, did not call for decision in that case. In Masirunnissa Khatun v. Joychand (10) the decision in Harish Chandra Singh v. Chandra Mohan Dass (9) was followed without discussion; and on the facts the question whether Article 181 or 182 of Act IX of 1908 applied did not require to be decided. In Ashutosh Goswami v. Upendra Prasad Mitra (7) it was held that no question of limitation arose, though incidentally a reference was made to Article 181. There is one case in Madras, viz., Kurupam Zamindar v. Sadasiva (14) where also, although the learned Judges were disposed to think that Article 178 applies, the application was barred whether the Article applicable was 178 or 179. Moreover, it was held that the application was an application in execution, governed by the rules prescribed by the Code for the execution of decrees. It may also be noted that one of the Judges who was a party to that decision expressed a different opinion, in Venkayya v. Ragava Charlu (15). In Shivabai Kom Babya Swami v. Yesoo (4) it was stated that Article 181 applied but there was no discussion of the question, the only other Article considered being Article 166. In Hanifunissa v. Chunnilal (16) it was assumed that the case was governed by Article 181 and no question of law was discussed.

BALMAKUNDA MARWARI v. BASANTA KUMARI DASSI

On the other hand, there are reasoned decisions for the application of Article 182 of which some of the more important are the following: In Venkayya v. Ragava Charlu (15), it was held that Article 179 applied and it was observed that the reference to Article 178 in Kurupam Zamindar v. Sadasiva (14) was a mere obiter dictum. In Somasundaram Pillai v. Chokkalingam Pillai (17) the question was discussed by Seshagiri Ayyar, J., who, referring to the argument based on the difference in language between section 583 of the previous Code of Civil Procedure and section 144 of the present Code, said: "We are unable to see the difference. Section 144 of the present Code has been so framed as to enable the successful party in the Appellate Court to be placed in statu quo ante. The language of section 583 of the old Code was not wide enough to cover all cases of benefits arising from the reversal of a decree being fully realized by the successful party. Apart from this change, we see no ground for holding that the Legislature intended to make any departure in the procedure by which restitution is to be obtained. Under the old Code, restitution was by way of execution: see Prag Narain v. Kamakhia Singh (18). The same rule applies to similar applications under the new Code. The language of section 47 of the Code would cover all cases of restitution. The party seeking the aid of the Court is agitating a question relating to the execution of the decree under which the other party deprived him of his property." The same view was taken in Unnamalai Ammal v. Mathan (19), a case of the Madras High Court, where it was held with reference to the difference between section 583 of the old Code and section 144 of the new Code that, "the Legislature could not have intended that an application for restitution should not be treated as an application in execution. All that the Legislature intended was to make clear that certain applications, which under the old Code were not included in section 583, were included in section 144, Civil Procedure Code." The decision in Asutosh Goswami v. Upendra Prasad Mitra (7) was referred to and it was pointed out that the observation made in that case was obiter and that no reasons were given in support of the view that Article 182 did not apply. In Kurgodigouda v. Ningangouda (3) an order for restitution was treated as an order for execution. The question was also dealt with in Sayad Hamidalli v. Ahmedalli (20) where Macleod, C. J., decided that an application for restitution could not be treated as anything else than an application for execution of the decree of the Appellate Court. "It is the decree of the Appellate Court which entitles the successful appellant to get back something which he had been deprived of by the decree of the lower Court, under which the then successful party had actually received possession. In order, therefore, to get back what he has lost, the successful appellant must apply for execution of the order which entitled him to get back that possession. Clearly, therefore, Article 182 applies to applications under section 144." In Nand Ram v. Sita Ram (13), Oldfield and Tyrrell, JJ., described the benefit by way of restitution under a decree as a necessary incident of the decree and held that the plaintiff was competent to move the local Court to execute the appellate decree in his favour according to the rules prescribed for the execution of decrees in suits, and that Article 179 applied. In Damodar Das v. Birj Lal (21) Chamier and Piggott, JJ., held that execution covered restitution. The question, however, in my opinion, is concluded by the decision of the Privy Council in Prag Narain v. Kamakhia Singh (18). In that case the respondents had applied in the execution proceedings for mesne profits and interest by way of restitution. It was held that their claim to have the questions in dispute determined in the execution proceedings was justified by sections 583 and 244 of the Code.

The weight of authority, therefore, in my opinion, is in favour of the view that Article 182 governs the present case and I would answer the question in this sense. I would accordingly hold that the application for restitution was not barred by time and would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—This case has been referred to a Full Bench for decision of the question as to whether Article 181 or Article 182 of Schedule I of the Indian Limitation Act is applicable to an application for the exercise of the power of restitution conferred either by section 144 or 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, and if neither of the above Articles is applicable, then is there any other Article applicable to the case. The question has arisen in a second appeal and, therefore, the whole appeal is before the Full Bench for final decision.

The question propounded arose under the following circumstances: on the 10th of January 1917, an ex parte decree was obtained by Abinash Chandra Karmakar and Satish Chandra Karmakar against Basanta Kumari Dassi and another, directing among other reliefs the ejectment of the defendants from a house occupied by them. This decree was executed and possession was delivered to the plaintiffs-decree-holders on the 29th of March 1917. Upon an application made by the defendants under O. IX, r. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code the decree was set aside by the Court of first instance and the suit was restored by an order dated the 18th of June 1917. The suit was ultimately dismissed after hearing on the 7th of March 1918. There was an appeal to the District Judge which was also dismissed on the 13th of July 1918. On the 29th of June 1921 the defendants filed an application before the learned Munsif for restitution and prayed for restoration of possession of the house under section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It appears that at this time the plaintiffs who had obtained the decree and were put in possession on the 29th of March 1917 were no longer in possession, but one Balmakunda, a mortgagee from the original plaintiffs-decree-holders, was in possession by virtue of purchase and delivery of possession in execution of a mortgage-decree obtained by him against the original plaintiffs.

Two questions were raised before the learned Munsif by way of objection to the application under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code. The first objection was that the application could not be entertained against Balmakunda who was not the representative of the original decree-holders; and the second objection was that the application was barred by limitation. The learned Munsif held that restitution could be granted against Balmakunda who was a representative of the original decree-holders but that the application was barred by limitation, and he accordingly rejected the application. On appeal to the Subordinate Judge it was held that the application could not be entertained inasmuch as the original defendants had no title to the house, the title being in the son of Basanta Kumari Dassi and the defendants being in possession under the permission of the son, and further that the application could not be entertained against Balmakunda. In this view of the case, the learned Subordinate Judge held that the question of limitation did not arise and he dismissed the application. There was a second appeal to this Court which came up for hearing in a Division Bench, presided over by his Lordship the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad. Their Lordships held that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the application could not be maintained by the defendants or that it could not be entertained against Balmakunda. They accordingly set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge in so far as it held that the application was not maintainable; but as the question of limitation had not been decided by the learned Subordinate Judge, their Lordships remanded the case for a consideration of the question. In the course of the judgment, his Lordship the Chief Justice expressed the view that the proper Article applicable to the case was Article 182 and not Article 181 of the first Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act. His Lordship expressed the opinion that applications for restitution were really applications for execution of decrees, and consequently Article 182 applied, and the petitioners for restitution were entitled to show that a previous application for restitution had been made by them within the period of limitation, and if they succeeded in doing so, then the present application, filed on the 29th of June 1921, being within three years from the previous application would be within time. Moreover, it was stated before their Lordships that in a previous application for restitution which was filed within time a stay had been obtained from the Court of appeal below and that the period during which the stay was in force should be excluded. Their Lordships, therefore, remanded the case to the lower Appellate Court. On remand the learned Subordinate Judge has held that the application was within the period of limitation treating it as an application for execution under Article 182 of the Limitation Act. Against this order of the learned Subordinate Judge the present second appeal has been preferred to this Court. This appeal came on for hearing in a Division Bench presided over by Mr. Justice Mullick and Mr. Justice Bucknill, and their Lordships differed from the opinion expressed by their Lordships the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad on the question of limitation, and the case has accordingly been referred for the decision of a Full Bench.

In my opinion the proper Article applicable to an application for restitution under section 144 or section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code is Article 181 of Schedule I of the Indian Limitation Act. Section 144 provides for cases where a decree is varied or reversed, and if any party is entitled to any benefit on account of such variance or reversal by way of restitution or otherwise, that such restitution should be granted to such party and that the parties should be placed, as far as it may be possible, in the same position which they would have occupied but for such decree or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed. The right to apply for restitution is a right which is independent of any reliefs granted by the decree. The power to grant restitution is an inherent power in a Court to restore parties in the position which they occupied before the decree which is reversed was passed. It is the power to prevent any injury being caused to any party by any act of the Court itself, and this power, to my mind, is wholly independent of the rights conferred by a decree and which rights can be enforced only by way of execution. Where, for instance, in a suit for possession of property the plaintiff succeeds in the Court of first instance, and in execution of that decree possession is delivered to him, but on appeal the decree is subsequently reversed, the final decree of the Court of appeal merely declares that the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief and does not provide for re-delivery of possession to a successful defendant, the defendant in such a case cannot properly apply to execute the decree of the Court of appeal in order to be restored to possession because there is no such direction in the decree. The application can be made to the Court only in its inherent power to restore parties to their original position. This application for restitution is, to my mind, an application either in the suit itself or by way of miscellaneous proceeding invoking the Court's inherent jurisdiction to remedy an injury caused to a party. In some of the cases dealing with the point, it has been said that the relief granted by the decree of the Court of appeal which varies or reverses the decree of the Court of first instance is of a negative character and that it grants a relief to the successful party which is capable of enforcement by way of execution. With very great respect to the learned Judges who hold this view, I am unable to agree with them. A decree can be executed only in so far as it grants any relief; so far as the successful defendant is concerned, it merely dismisses the claim of the plaintiff, there is no relief either positive or negative granted to the defendant, and there is no direction in the decree which is capable of execution. That an application for restitution under section 144 is not an application for execution is clear on a reference to the old section 583 of the Code of 1882. Section 583 provided for restitution in case of decrees passed in appeal under Chapter XLI of the Code of 1882 which related to appeals from original decrees. Moreover, it directed that on an application being made by any party entitled to any benefit (by way of restitution or otherwise) under a decree passed in appeal and who desires to obtain execution of the same, the Court to which the application is made shall proceed to execute the decree passed in appeal according to the rules which were prescribed for the execution of decrees in suits. There was, therefore, a clear provision in the Code of 1882 that applications for restitution should be dealt with as applications for execution. In section 144 of the present Code there is no reference to execution at all. Moreover, if an application for restitution be treated as an application for execution, then I fail to see any necessity for enacting section 144 at all because such matters had already been provided for in section 47 of the Code. If an application for restitution is an application for execution, then it relates to a question arising between the parties to the suit or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. Furthermore, it is provided in section 47 that questions relating to execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree, shall be determined by the Court executing that decree and not by a separate suit. Section 144 also provides that no suit shall be instituted for the purposes of obtaining any restitution or any other relief which could be obtained by application under sub-section (1) of the section. To my mind, section 47 deals with questions relating to execution of decrees which properly may be treated as applications in execution, while section 144 deals with questions which do not come strictly within the meaning of execution of a decree but which are analogous to it, namely, applications for relief consequent upon a decree being set aside. Under the definition of a decree as given in the Code of Civil Procedure, the determination of any question within section 144 is a decree; and when an application is made for restitution under section 144 and the Court makes an order directing restitution to be effected, that order is a decree which has to be enforced in the way in which decrees are enforced by way of execution. I am, therefore, of opinion that an application for restitution under section 144 or 151 of the Civil Procedure Code is not an application for execution; and the proper Article of the Limitation Act applicable to such an application is Article 181 of the first Schedule of the Act. That Article 181 applies to such applications has been uniformly held by the Calcutta High Court (see Harish Chandra Saha v. Chandra Mohan Das, (9) and Ashutosh Goswami v. Upendra Prasad Mitra (7)). There has been a divergence of opinion on this point in the Bombay High Court. In Kurgodgouda bin Lingangouda v. Nimgangouda bin Nimgangouda, (3) and Sayad Hamidalli v. Ahmedalli (20), it has been held that Article 182 applies, while in Shivbai Kom Babya Swami v. Yesoo (4) the view has been expressed that the proper Article applicable is Article 181. In Madras the later cases are in favour of the view that Article 182 applies (see Venkayya

v. Raghvacharlu (15) and Somasundaram Pillai v. Chokkalingan Pillai (17)). The Allahabad High Court also take the same view in the case of Nand Ram v. Sita Ram (13) whereas the Patna High Court in the case of Krupasindhu Roy v. Mahanta Balbhadra Das (5) took the view that Article 181 was applicable. With very great respect to the Judges who hold the contrary view, I beg to differ from them, and I would answer the question referred to us by saying that the proper Article applicable to an application for restitution is Article 181 of Schedule I of the Indian Limitation Act.

It has, however, been contended by the learned Vakil for the respondents that the question as to which Article of the Indian Limitation Act is applicable to the present case has already been determined by this Court in the order of remand of their Lordships the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad, and that it is no longer open to us to come to a different finding on the same question in this case, and reliance has been placed upon the case of Rai Brij Raj Krishna v. Chathu Singh (22); on the other hand, it has been contended by the learned Vakil for the appellant that their Lordships in their order of remand did not intend to lay it down as a proposition of law that Article 182 was applicable, and that when the question of limitation was sent down to the Court below for decision it was the whole question, and it is still open to the appellant to contend that the proper Article applicable to the case is Article 181 and not Article 182. The learned Judges before whom the case came in appeal after the remand have taken the view that the Division Bench which made the order of remand did not intend to decide this question finally. I regret I am unable to agree with them. When I read the judgment of his Lordship the Chief Justice I can have no doubt that his Lordship did lay it down as a proposition of law that the proper Article applicable to the question was Article 182, and the case was remanded to the Court below only for a finding on the question of fact as to whether or not the application, treating it as an application in execution, was within time within the meaning of Article 182 of the Limitation Act. In the first place, dealing with the question as to whether an application for restitution was maintainable, his Lordship the Chief Justice observes as follows:—"I think, therefore, that, apart from the question of limitation which must be considered presently, the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot stand." His Lordship thereupon proposed to consider and did as a matter of fact proceed to consider the question of limitation. His Lordship then observes that it was not quite clear from the judgment of the Munsif how far any application for execution of the decree was made or how far that application included a claim to be restored to possession of the property, and after referring to the fact that the learned Subordinate Judge had not dealt with this matter, his Lordship says that the Subordinate Judge would be entitled to go to the evidence upon this matter and arrive at a conclusion about it. But before sending back the case for determination of this question by the lower Appellate Court his Lordship thought that he must be satisfied that the appellant really had a case to present upon his part of the appeal even upon the facts disclosed so far. His Lordship then proceeds to consider the question whether an application under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code was to be treated as an application in execution, because if it was not to be so treated, then it was quite clear that the application would be barred by limitation and no remand would be necessary. His Lordship then refers to the case of Somasunularam Pillai v. Chokkalingam Pillai (17) where it was laid down that an application for restitution was an application for execution under the present Civil Procedure Code and says, "in my opinion that case was properly decided." His Lordship then examines the question in detail and comes to the following conclusion: "I think, therefore, that it is only right and proper to regard an application under section 144 as an application made in execution of a decree." His Lordship then refers to certain circumstances which if proved would save the application, treating it as one for execution, from being barred by limitation. One of those circumstances was the fact appearing from the Munsif's judgment that on 12th June 1918, an application for execution had been made by the appellant in the appeal before his Lordship and with reference to that application his Lordship observes as follows: "If in fact that application was made, then I think it being, as I have already said, an application in execution, and governed by Article 182 of the Limitation Act, the present application must be regarded as in time." It was because there was no finding in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court upon the question as to whether such previous application for execution had been really filed and whether there was in that previous execution application an application for possession, that a remand to the lower Appellate Court became necessary, otherwise, had there been a finding, no remand would have been necessary. I have, therefore, no doubt in my mind that it was not a mere expression of a view by his Lordship the Chief Justice but a clear and binding decision on the point that the Article applicable to the present case was Article 182 of the Limitation Act. As regards the form of the order of remand I think there can be no doubt on reading the whole judgment that the order of remand directed the lower Appellate Court to come to a finding of fact and then to decide the case having regard to the decision on the point of law already arrived at by this Court. This view is supported by the form of the decree drawn up in that appeal. I think no inference can be drawn from the words: "I agree to the order proposed" used by Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad. His Lordship apparently agreed with the Hon'ble the Chief Justice in his decision on the point of law otherwise he would certainly have expressed his views on the point if he held a different view. I am, therefore, of opinion that it is no longer open to contend in this case that the proper Article applicable is Article 181. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal on this ground.

Das, J.—As a result of the decision of the majority of the Bench, this appeal is dismissed with costs.

When a Muhammadan widow is in possession of her husband's property in lieu of dower, she is not liable to piecemeal suits by every separate heir of her husband. She is entitled to retain the entire property until her entire dower is satisfied.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Benares, dated the 11th of January 1922.

Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Appellants.Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by the plaintiffs-appellants, Musummat Jan Bibi and others, for possession of their shares of a house by partition. The finding of the Court below is that defendant Batulan Bibi is in lawful and peaceful possession of the house in lieu of her unpaid dower and that the plaintiffs cannot obtain possession without satisfying her dower. The main plea on which the plaintiffs attack this finding is based on an ambiguity in the judgment of the Court below. The learned Judge of the Court below finds in the earlier part of his judgment that Musummat Batulan Bibi is undoubtedly in possession of the house. Further on he says:

"I have been shown no ruling which requires that the possession of the house on the part of the widow must be exclusive. All that appears to be necessary is to show that she is in actual possession and that there has been no division between her and any other person."

This is not a clear finding, and the sentence in question may mean one of two things. It may mean either that Musummat Batulan Bibi and the other heirs of the family were in actual joint possession of the house, in which case the decree of the Court below would be clearly incorrect; or it may merely mean that Musummat Batulan is not in possession adversely to the other heirs. The former meaning would be to some extent inconsistent with what the learned Judge has said above and I have examined the evidence to find out what the learned Judge's finding meant. I find that Musummat Batulan and her husband gave clear evidence that they were in exclusive possession of the house. They were not cross-examined on the point and there is no evidence to the contrary to be found on the record. The plaintiffs admitted in para. 8 of their plaint that they were out of possession at the time when the suit was instituted. It is, therefore, clear that the learned Judge could not have meant that Musummat Batulan was not in sole possession of the house and his decree cannot be attacked on this ground.

The second and remaining plea which has been urged is that the plaintiffs should only have been required to pay up a proportionate share of the dower. No authority has been quoted in support of this proposition and, so far as I know, the authority of all the commentators is against it. If the widow is in possession in lieu of dower she is not liable to piece-meal suits by every separate heir. She is entitled to retain the entire property until the entire dower is satisfied. The decree of the Court below is, therefore, correct and I dismiss the appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

AMJAD KHAN v SHAFIUDDIN KHAN

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Bilaspur, dated the 26th June 1922.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—After a good deal of discussion of the matter I am still quite unable to see how the fact that the plaintiff is closely related to the Protected Thekedar of the village is relevant at all ; indeed, there would be no more relevancy in the fact, if it were one, that he was actually one of the proprietors of the village, as he has been somewhat carelessly assumed to be, and not merely a person with certain rights against the sole lessee of it. The objection taken here to the plea of limitation being allowed to be raised in appeal for the first time rests on the assertion that in answer to it the plea of fact could have been advanced that the land was not an occupancy holding at all but really khudkasht. But that plea was raised and examined in the lower Appellate Court and the materials for the decision of the question of fact are more than sufficient. The plaintiff was undoubtedly an occupancy tenant of the land from the time he was so recorded in the Settlement of 1904.

The only other contention put forward on behalf of the appellant is that Article (i) of the Second Schedule of the Tenancy Act, 1920, applies only to a case in which a tenant has been dispossessed of his entire holding, not to one in which he has been dispossessed of a part only and has retained possession of the rest. The original holding had an area of 22.18 acres and the present suit is in respect of 13.9 acres only. It is by no means certain that the plaintiff is in possession of any part of the holding. Even if he is, it is by no means improbable, from his own statements in the plaint, that he was dispossessed of the whole of it at one time by five brothers and has recovered possession of a part from one of them by a suit filed in 1917, that is to say, within two years of his dispossession which was in 1916, and is now seeking to recover the rest from three more of them.

But I can discover no reason whatever for holding that the words of Article (1) of the Schedule of the Tenancy Act have reference only to an entire holding and not a part of one. Two arguments were put forward by the learned pleader for the appellant. The first was that, whenever the Act refers to a part of a holding as well as to the whole it says so expressly. Sections 98 and 100 were cited as instances of both the whole and a part being expressly mentioned, and sections 21 and 35 might have been cited as instances of the mention of the holding having reference to the whole only and not to a part. Such an argument might be used in support of another sound reason in support of the proposition, but it is so weak in itself that the other reasons would have to be practically sufficient in themselves and so not in need of any reinforcement.

The other argument was that a tenant who retains possession of a part of his holding can still be said to retain some sort of possession over the holding and cannot, therefore, be said to have been dispossessed of his holding. That is merely a repetition of the proposition that the word "holding" means the whole of it and not a part of it, but the matter has no bearing on the question of the time that should be allowed to him for the recovery of possession. There is no reason why he should have to sue within two years for the whole of his holding, and yet have twelve years if he had retained possession of a part of it. Indeed, if there is any ground for making a difference in the periods of limitation allowed in the two cases, it would seem reasonable to give the shorter period to the man still in possession of a part of holding. The appeal will be dismissed and the appellant must pay all the costs.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Agra, dated the 25th January 1922.

Mr. R. Malcomson and Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to a house situated in the town of Ferozabad. The plaintiffs claim to be the owners of the site occupied by that house and allege that Musammatt Khairatan and Hasan Amjad Khan, who were occupying that house, have been wrongfully denying the title of the plaintiffs to the land in question. They seek the ejectment of the said occupants and implead certain other persons whom they describe as having been once in possession as the heirs of Nur Khan, the original ryot.

According to the plaintiffs the land in question belonged to Azim-ud-din Khan by virtue of a purchase made from Rahim Ali on the 4th of December 1859 and Nur Khan had built a house thereon with the permission of his predecessor-in-title. It was also stated that after the death of Nur Khan two of his sons, Kale Khan and Sardar Khan, executed an agreement on the 3rd of July 1865, by which they agreed to pay a ground rent of one anna per mensem and to vacate the land in case default was made in payment thereof.

It appears that Nur Khan died, leaving three sons, Kale Khan, Sardar Khan and Munir Khan, and a daughter named Musammatt Khairatan. According to the plaintiffs the heirs of Kale Khan and Sardar Khan, namely, Musammatt Mariam Bibe, Musammatt Mammen and Hamid Khan, had left the house long ago and gone to live in another house in the town and Munir Khan had similarly left the house 15 or 16 years ago and gone to live elsewhere. The defendants, Musammatt Khairatan and Amjad Khan, who are in occupation of the house deny the plaintiff's title to the land occupied by the house in dispute and plead that they have been in adverse possession of the same. They also deny the genuineness of the lease purporting to have been executed by Kale Khan and Sardar Khan on which the plaintiffs relied in support of their claim. The lease did not specify the boundaries or number of the land to which it related and no attempt was made by any of the Courts below to find out whether it related to the land occupied by the house of Nur Khan, which was referred to in the sale-deed of the 4th December 1859 executed by Rahim Ali in favour of Azim-ud-din Khan. The trial Court refers to an admission said to have been made by Amjad Khan that he and his mother or Nur Khan had no other house in the town except the one in question. But while the Court of first instance held that the sarkhat of the 3rd of July 1865 executed by Kale Khan and Sardar Khan was not binding on the other defendants, the lower Appellate Court thought that it had been presumably executed by Kale Khan and Sardar Khan on behalf of the entire family and was binding on the other defendants also. Both the Courts below eventually agreed in passing a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for the ejectment of the defendants on the ground that they denied the title of the plaintiffs to the land in question and were liable to be evicted whether they occupied the same as licensees or tenants.

It appears that there were two houses in the occupation of the descendants of Nur Khan at the time of the Settlement of 1877. In the sale-deed the boundaries of the entire land sold were mentioned and it was also stated that a portion of that land was occupied by a house belonging to Imam-ud-din and another portion by a house belonging to Nur Khan, both of which had been built with the permission of the former proprietor. In the sarkhat no boundaries were given but a house existing on the land leased was described as having been occupied by Kale Khan and Sardar Khan. In the Khasra abadi of 1877 A. D. ahata No. 261 comprising house No. 184 was entered as having been occupied by Gul Khan (alias Munir Khan), son of Nur Khan, and ahata No. 382 comprising house No. 261 was described as having been occupied by Kale Khan, son of Nur Khan. The trial Court thought that the latter house was the one received by Kale Khan from his father-in-law, and the former was the one referred to in the sale-deed and the sarkhat.

Be that as it may, the sarkhat is not binding on the present occupants. Musammat Khairatan derived her title directly from Nur Khan and Amjad Khan is her son. They are not bound by any sarkhat which Kale Khan and Sardar Khan may have executed in favour of Ajimuddin Khan, agreeing to pay ground rent and to vacate the land in case of non-payment. In the plaint it was admitted that Musammat Narayan had been living with her husband in another house from 14 or 15 years, and that Hamed Khan and Musammat Mamman had left the house long ago, and were living in another house belonging to the plaintiff. In these circumstances, the contesting defendants cannot be treated as tenants liable to ejectment for non-payment of rent which, as the Court of first instance found, was never actually realised even from those who are said to have agreed to pay the same. In the Municipal khassra prepared in 1896 house No. 323 was entered as having been occupied by Munir Khan, son of Nur Khan, as a tenant of the present plaintiffs, but there is nothing to show which that house was. That entry is of no value.

The contesting defendants can, therefore, be treated as only licensees, holding the land in dispute in succession to Nur Khan by virtue of a license which was granted by one of the former proprietors when the house was built. The existence of the license is indicated by the sale-deed of 1859 which was executed when there was no dispute between the parties, and the recital there contained is admissible in evidence both as an admission made by a party before the controversy arose and otherwise. It is not shown that the license was granted subject to any restrictive covenant entitling the licensor to revoke it at his will. The house in dispute has been in the continued occupation of Nur Khan and after him by that branch of his line which is now represented by the contesting defendants without the payment of any rent, and the mere fact that, being ignorant of the origin of their title, they have denied the title of the plaintiffs, would not render them liable to ejectment; as pointed out in Malik Akbar Ali Khan v. Shah Muhammad (1) a licensee, unlike a lessee does not forfeit his license by merely denying the title of his licensor. In Nasirul Zaman Khan v. Ajimullah (2) it was held that a license could not be revoked, if the licensee acting upon the license had executed a work of a permanent character. It was further pointed out that a kachcha thatched house might be a work of a permanent character and the fact that the thatch was renewed from time to time did not make it a work of a temporary character. On behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents reliance has been placed on the decision in Jai Chand Bahadur v. Girwar Singh (3). There the question was one of burden of proof of adverse possession and a licensee who had set up an adverse right was held to have no title to claim the same, unless he succeeded in establishing his title by adverse possession. There is no question of burden of proof here. The title of the plaintiffs as owners of the land and of the defendants as licensees from the former proprietor is beyond dispute. The only question is whether that license has been forfeited by reason of the denial set up in this case. There was no denial prior to the suit. Unless the license is shown to have been granted under restrictive conditions of the nature set up, no revocation can be allowed to the prejudice of the heirs of the licensee, by whom a permanent structure has been built.

The appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the claim of the plaintiffs dismissed, but, in view of the fact that the defendants have improperly denied the title of the plaintiffs to the ownership of the land occupied by the house in dispute, I direct the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Buldana, dated the 14th February 1922.

Mr. D. W. Kathalay, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sue stating that defendant No. 2 had sold to the 1st defendant sub-division 2 of S. No. 30 of Mouza Jamb under a sale-deed dated 12th June 1920, that plaintiffs are co-occupants in the same S. No., being holders of sub-division 1, and that no notice had been given to them as required by law. Plaintiffs contend that the real amount of the purchase is Rs. 400 and that Rs. 800 is falsely entered in the sale-deed in order to defeat plaintiffs' right of pre-emption. It seems that the 2nd defendant executed a mortgage-bond for Rs. 300 with interest at 2 per cent. per mensem on 10th July 1916, and another mortgage-bond for Rs. 400 carrying the same rate of interest on 31st July 1917. These two bonds were on two separate fields, that for Rs. 400 being on the field in suit. On 12th June 1920 accounts were made up and a total of Rs. 1,292 was found due. The defendant No. 1 advanced Rs. 8 to make a total of Rs. 1,300, and the other defendant executed a fresh mortgage-deed on other fields for Rs. 500 on 12th June 1920 and sold the property in dispute for the balance of Rs. 800.

The Courts below found that the price of Rs. 800 was not fixed in good faith, that the fair market-value of the land at the time of the sale was Rs. 400 and that the plaintiffs are entitled to pre-empt the land for Rs. 400.

It is here contended that the sum of Rs. 800 should have been fixed as the price at which plaintiffs were entitled to pre-empt, and that as Rs. 800 were due to the plaintiffs on the two mortgages and as the field was sold in satisfaction of a portion of the entire debt due by defendant No. 2, the sale cannot be said not to be in good faith. Sub-section (2) of section 211 of the Berar Land Revenue Code, 1896, reads,—

“ If in the case of a sale or relinquishment for valuable consideration, the Court finds that the price was not fixed in good faith, the Court shall fix such price as appears to it to be the fair market-value of the interest sold or relinquished ”.

Now, the other field is one of some 15 acres with a rental of Rs 12 while the one the suit is 2 acres with a rental of Rs 4. It is difficult to understand why the larger portion of the debt was not placed on the larger field and the smaller field sold for the balance. The fact that this was not done and that Rs. 800 was assigned as a price of the field in suit while Rs. 500 remained as a burden on the larger field points to mala fides and to a desire to get as much as possible from those entitled to pre-empt. Sufficient material exists to enable the Court to fix the fair market-value of the interest sold. What that market-value at the time of the sale was is proved to be Rs. 400, and the appellant-defendant has himself admitted that this was the case. But even if I had found that the circumstances did not point to mala fides, it seems to me that in cases where property is sold in lieu of old debts, and if the vendor sells to discharge the debts and the debts are wiped out, the consideration is not the nominal value of the debts i.e., their arithmetical total, but their present or market-value : see Phumman Mal v. Kiman (1) and in a case like the present where the sum fixed in the deed of transfer is twice that of the market-value, I do not think the buyer can burden the pre-emptor with the excess amount. On the finding that Rs. 400 was the correct market-value I am of opinion that the decrees of the Courts below are correct. This appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The appellant will pay the respondents' costs.

Babu Ganesh Chander Sen, with him Babu Prasanta Bhusan Gupta, for the Appellants.

Babu Jogesh Chander Roy, with him Babu Upendra Kumar Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under Clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Walmsley in a suit for recovery of possession of land on declaration of title, for establishment of a right of way and for other incidental reliefs. The suit was decreed in part in the trial Court. On appeal by the defendants their objections were overruled and the cross-objections of the plaintiffs were allowed with the result that the Subordinate Judge decreed the claim in full. That decree has been affirmed by Mr. Justice Walmsley on the present appeal, which has been preferred by three of the defendants, it has been urged that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge is based upon inadmissible evidence and cannot be supported. We are of opinion that this contention is well founded and must prevail.

It appears that in 1900 there was a litigation between the predecessors in interest of the parties to this suit. The first and second defendants in that suit were the predecessors in interest of the first seven defendants in this suit, and the third, fourth and fifth defendants in that suit, then minors, are now appellants. A consent decree was made in that suit as between parties other than the present appellants, and the suit was decreed ex parte against them. They have contended in the present litigation that they are not bound by that decree because they were not effectively represented for the purposes of that suit by their mother whose name appeared as their guardian ad litem, though she never consented to act in that capacity; as a matter of fact, she did not enter appearance on behalf of her minor children. This contention is supported by the decision of this Court in Narendra Chandra Mondal v. Jogendra Narain Roy (1), where the principle was enunciated that a Court is not competent to appoint the mother of the infant defendants as their guardian ad litem without her express consent.

In view of the difficulty mentioned, an attempt was made in the Court below to utilise the consent decree under the provisions of section, 32, clause (3), of the Indian Evidence Act. That section provides that statements, written or verbal, made by a person who is dead, are relevant facts, when the statements are against the pecuniary or proprietary interest of the person making them. The Subordinate Judge has held that the recitals in the consent decree are statements within the meaning of section 32 and he has relied upon those recitals in various portions of his judgment. We are of opinion that the recitals in the consent decree are not statements within the meaning of section 32. There are no recitals in the consent decree as to the previous rights of the respective parties in the subject-matter of the litigation. On the other hand, it is stated at the outset that, regardless of the rights of the parties, they had come to an arrangement that in future their rights would be regulated in the manner specified. In substance, the decree sets out the terms of the arrangement between the parties and does not embody statements of the parties as to their rights in the subject-matter of the litigation. Consequently, the recitals in the decree cannot be used as evidence under section 32.

JAGADISH CHANDRA v. HARIHAR

We may add that the respondent has urged that no objection was taken in the trial Court to the reception of the decree in evidence on the ground now formulated. This, however, is of no avail to the respondent. The question is not one of mode of proof, as in Gurindra Chandra v. Rajendra Nath, (2) Ali Mohammad Khan v. Maharaj Bepari (3) and Gopu Nataraju v. Rajammal (4) but of relevancy of evidence; and, as pointed out by Sir Richard Couch in Miller v. Babu Madho Das (5), an erroneous omission to object to evidence which is not admissible under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act does not make it admissible: Luchmiram v. Raulhacharan (6). It has further been urged that there is no substance in the objection taken, because the judgment of the Subordinate Judge is in essence based upon evidence other than the consent decree. We have carefully examined the judgment and we are unable to hold that the Subordinate Judge arrived at his conclusion independently of the recitals in the decree which are frequently mentioned in different parts of his judgment. Consequently, the case does not fall within the scope of the decision in Womes Chunder Chatterjee v. Chunder Churn Roy Chowdhury (7) where it was ruled that, on second appeal, though the High Court has, generally speaking, no right to look at the evidence to decide whether the remaining evidence, after exclusion of evidence erroneously admitted, is sufficient to warrant the finding of the Court below, the case may be disposed of by the High Court without a remand where the lower Court has arrived at its conclusion upon other grounds. Here, the judgment of the Subordinate Judge shows that his conclusion is based as much upon the recitals in the decree as upon the other evidence on the record.

We have been finally invited by the respondent to look at the evidence; but we are not in a position to do so, even under the terms of section 103 Civil Procedure Code. That section provides that, in any second appeal the High Court may, if the evidence on the record is sufficient, determine an issue of fact necessary for the disposal of the appeal, but not determined by the lower Appellate Court. Here the question has been determined by the lower Court, and that decision cannot be supported because it is based in part on evidence improperly admitted.

The respondent has contended, as a last resort, that, although recitals in the decree may not be admissible in evidence under section 32, the fact that there was a previous litigation between the predecessors in interest of the parties and that the litigation terminated in a consent decree, may be relevant for the determination of the present controversy. The distinction between the admissibility of the factum of a judgment and of the findings in a judgment has been frequently recognised; Kesinath v. Jagat Kisore (8), Baidyanath v. Alef Jan (9), Saroda Prasonna v. Umakant (10); Tripurana seethapati v. Rokkam Venkanna (11), but we need not at this stage consider the applicability of that doctrine to this case.

SAT NARAIN PRASAD v. RAM AUTER

We need only decide now that the recitals, in the decree are not admissible in evidence under section 32 of the Indian Evidence Act; and that the decree itself is not operative against the appellants.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the judgment of Mr. Justice Walmsley set aside and the case remanded to the Subordinate Judge for reconsideration in the light of the observations now made by this Court. The appellants are entitled to their costs in this appeal under the Letters Patent; but the costs of the hearing before Mr. Justice Walmsley will abide the result.

Appeal, under section 10 of the Letters Patent, from the judgment of Mr. Justice Stuart, dated the 12th January 1922.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for redemption of a mortgage. The plaintiffs pleaded that they were unable to produce any written instrument of mortgage. They tendered certain evidence to prove that, in the year 1869, in the District of Mirzapur, certain parties had mortgaged certain land with possession to certain other parties, in return for a payment of Rs. 200. Other points regarding the title of the plaintiffs to represent the interest of the original mortgagors, and also with regard to certain other charges on the land set up by the defendants in possession, were gone into. All questions in issue were decided by the trial Court in favour of the plaintiffs, and they got a decree for redemption on payment of Rs. 200. The defendants then went up in first appeal. Their first plea was that the plaintiffs had totally failed to prove their title to redeem the mortgage, and also the particular mortgage set up by them. There were other pleas taken with respect to the other transactions which the defendants had set up, and it was alleged that those transactions were fully proved. There was a general plea that the evidence produced by the plaintiffs in the trial Court was altogether worthless and unworthy of credit. All these pleas were carefully dealt with by the learned Subordinate Judge. He reviewed the evidence in detail and confirmed all the findings of the trial Court in favour of the plaintiffs.

The defendants then came to this Court in second appeal. By this time the record had been examined on their behalf by a legal practitioner competent to appreciate all the difficulties arising out of the pleadings and the evidence in the two Courts below. It now occurred to the defendants that the Registration Act of 1866 was in force in the Mirzapur District in the year 1869. In their memorandum of appeal to this Court, therefore, they laid hold of statements in the plaint and certain statements made by one of the plaintiffs' witnesses in the trial Court. They put these forward as establishing beyond doubt the fact that the transaction of mortgage set up by the plaintiffs was embodied in a written instrument. From this they went on to contend that this instrument, not having been registered, was inoperative and could not have been admitted in evidence. The further contention followed that, therefore, secondary evidence of the contents of this document was also inadmissible. They also took the point that the plaintiffs had failed to lay the foundation required by law for the admission of secondary evidence before they tendered such evidence in the trial Court, and, finally, they contended that the evidence which the plaintiffs did tender, which had been accepted and acted upon by two Courts, was not within the definition of admissible secondary evidence under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act. The learned Judge of this Court, who heard the appeal, has in substance refused to entertain these pleas, because they were not taken before the lower Appellate Court. It is true that in an earlier part of his judgment he discusses the question whether the plaintiffs had or had not laid a sufficient foundation for the production of secondary evidence of some sort or kind; but with regard to the remaining pleas, which we have set forth above, he frankly bases his decision on the ground that it would not be fair to the opposite party, under the circumstances, to permit these pleas to be taken for the first time in second appeal. In taking this line we are satisfied the learned Judge of this Court was within his discretion. We think it would be in the interests of the administration of justice in this Province if it were generally understood that questions of law of this nature, more particularly questions dealing with the admissibility and the legal effect of evidence, will not, as a general rule, be entertained in second appeal in this Court, if they have not been taken at least at the stage of first appeal in the Court below. We are not prepared to hold that the learned Judge of this Court was wrong in taking the line which he did. We dismiss this appeal with costs.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Mainpuri, dated the 5th February 1922.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Duha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Kanhaiya Lal, J.—The plaintiff seeks to set aside a deed of gift purporting to have been executed by her in favour of the defendant on the 11th of February 1914. Her allegation was that the defendant practised fraud on the plaintiff and caused her to execute the deed of gift by the exercise of undue influence over her. The precise nature of the fraud was not specified, but it was alleged that certain misrepresentations had been made by the defendant to obtain her consent. It was further alleged that, in spite of the deed of gift, the plaintiff had continued in possession of the house comprised in the gift.

The defendant denied that any fraud, undue influence or misrepresentation had been committed. He pleaded that he had been in possession of the house from the date of the gift and spent Rs. 150 in making improvements of the house in question and paid Rs. 150 to Bulagi Das who had purchased the rights of Musammât Aliman, the daughter of the plaintiff, who was found to be the joint owner of the said house with the plaintiff. There was a further defence that the deed in suit was really a sale for consideration cloaked in the form of a gift to defeat a claim for pre-emption.

The trial Court found that the deed in question was nothing more than a gift without consideration and that it was executed under a misapprehension arising out of false promises made by the defendant and gentle persuasion exercised by him and was not consequently binding on the plaintiff. In the course of its judgment it observed that the plaintiff might be said to have been duped or misled but she could not be said to have been put under undue influence, and that the plaintiff had given preference to the defendant, who was a very distant relation of her husband, in disregard of the claim of her own brother, because the latter had been neglecting her and the former had been attending to her wants and comforts in her old age. In regard to the question of possession the trial Court came to the conclusion that the rent of the house in dispute used to be paid to the plaintiff till very recently and that, as long as the defendant paid the rent realised from the house to her, she was quite pleased with the arrangement she had made, but when the defendant began to neglect her and stopped the payment of the rent to her, her eyes were opened and she sought the help of her brother in getting rid of the transaction. With reference to the other pleas raised by the defendant, the finding of the trial Court was that Rs. 150 had actually been spent in improvements and a similar sum in acquiring the rights of Bulaqi Das who had purchased the rights of Musammât Aliman, the daughter of the plaintiff. A decree was accordingly passed in favour of the plaintiff for the cancellation of the deed of gift and for the recovery of possession of her share of the house on condition of the plaintiffs paying Rs. 150 to the defendant on account of the improvements effected by the latter and Rs. 150 which the defendant had paid to Bulaqi Das for the share of her daughter Mussammât Aliman.

The defendant appealed and the plaintiff filed certain cross-objections. The whole of the suit was in effect before the lower Appellate Court for determination; but the Court confined itself to the question of limitation and without going into the various pleas raised on behalf of either side came to the conclusion that Article 91 of the Indian Limitation Act (No. IX of 1908) barred the claim.

It is not possible, however, to determine the question of limitation without going into many of the questions of fact which arise in the suit. The plaintiff had, for instance, alleged that she had remained in possession of the house in dispute in spite of the deed of gift, but that allegation was traversed by the defendant. The trial Court had recorded a finding on that point but the lower Appellate Court left it undetermined. Where a deed of gift is executed by a person governed by the Muhammadan Law and the possession of the property comprised in the gift has not been delivered, the gift would be void ab initio, and, as held in Saraful Haq v. Khudim Husain (1) and Meda Bibi v. Imaman Bibi (2), no question of limitation will arise in such circumstances. The right of the plaintiff to impeach such a gift can only accrue from the moment when by receipt of possession the gift becomes operative by law.

Article 91 of the Indian Limitation Act provides a period of three years from the date when the facts entitling the plaintiff to have the instrument cancelled or set aside become known to him. The lower Appellate Court has not determined when the facts entitling the plaintiff to have the instrument cancelled or set aside became known to her. In Singarappa v. Talari Sanjivappa (3) where the plaintiff executed a sham sale-deed in favour of the defendants, neither party intending that it should be acted upon, and four years later the defendants began to set up a claim to ownership on the strength of the deed, it was held that the suit was not barred by Article 91 of the Indian Limitation Act, having been brought within three years from the date when the plaintiff apprehended that the defendants had set up title under the instrument. In Petherpermal Chetty v. Munianandy Chetti (4), their Lordships of the Privy Council similarly held that where a deed was inoperative it was unnecessary for the plaintiff to have it set aside as a preliminary to his obtaining possession of the property. The plaintiff stated in her deposition that the payment of the rent of the house in dispute was stopped at or about the time when the suit was filed. That fact must, therefore, be determined.

It has also been urged that the deed of gift was in its very nature revocable under the Muhammadan Law, but that point also cannot be determined until the other questions raised in the appeal before the Court below are decided. The parties are Sunnis and, according to the Hanafi Law, a gift cannot be revoked after the subject of the gift has increased in value owing to some accession thereto made by the donee, which is inseparable from it.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and the suit remanded to that Court with a direction to reinstate it under its original number and to dispose of it after determining the other points involved in the appeal and the cross-objections. The costs of this appeal will abide the event including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Mukerji, J.—I agree that the appeal before the lower Court could not be decided merely on the point of limitation. The other points involved in the appeal required determination. I, therefore, agree with my learned brother that the appeal must be decreed and on terms stated by him.

The period of limitation fixed by section 181 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act for the execution of an appellate decree runs from the date on which the decree is signed and not from the date of the judgment.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—In these appeals the only question is whether the period of limitation fixed by section 181 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act for the execution of a rent decree runs from the date of the judgment or from the date on which the decree is signed. The Courts below held that time should run from the date when the decree is signed. The learned Vakil for the appellants argues that the ordinary rule contained in Order XX, rule 7 should apply, namely, that the date of the decree is the date of the judgment. It is true that these cases are cases of execution of appellate decrees. Clause (b) of section 181 is in these terms: "Where there has been an appeal the date of the final decree or order of the Appellate Court." But clause (a) which deals with original decrees is in these terms: "the date on which the decree or order is signed." This discrepancy in the language between two clauses makes the section somewhat difficult and uncertain to construe, but the words in clause (a) "is signed" must have some significance and the clause cannot be read as if they did not exist. If clause (a) means that time runs from the date of the actual signature of the decree then it would be unreasonable to suppose that the Legislature had intended one standard in the case of original decrees and another standard in the case of appellate decrees. On the whole, I agree with the decision of the Courts below and would dismiss these appeals with one set of costs.

Where a suit is adjourned for the purpose of appointing a guardian ad litem for a minor defendant and the plaintiff is absent on the adjourned date of hearing, the Court has no jurisdiction to dismiss the suit in default, as the suit is not ready for disposal and the adjourned date was not fixed for the hearing of the suit.

Application for revision of the order of the Munsif, First Court, Monghyr, dated the 19th September 1922.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and S. S. Bose, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Sambu Saran and S. N. Banerji, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—This application must succeed. The suit was instituted on the 28th July 1922 and the Court fixed the 23rd August 1922 for settlement of issues and for appointment of a guardian ad litem of the minor defendants. On the 23rd August 1922 the plaintiff applied for time and the suit was adjourned till the 14th September 1922 for appointment of a guardian. On the 14th September 1922 the plaintiff appeared but the defendants did not appear and the Court passed the following order: "Plaintiff to prove service of summons to deposit Rs. 24 towards the fee of the guardian to file copy of plaint. On plaintiff's petition for time the suit is adjourned to 19th September 1922 for appointment of guardian." It will be noticed that up to this time the Court was not in a position to dispose of the suit for the guardian to the minor defendants had not been appointed. On the 19th September 1922 the plaintiff did not appear and the learned Munsif dismissed the suit for default.

It is contended by Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick on behalf of the petitioner that this order passed on the 19th September 1922 was wholly without jurisdiction inasmuch as the 19th September 1922 was not a date fixed by the Court for the disposal of the suit. It appears to me that this contention is right and must prevail. The suit was not ready for disposal on that date nor did the learned Munsif fix that date for the disposal of the suit. I would accordingly allow this application, set aside the order of the 19th September 1922, and direct the learned Munsif to proceed with the suit. There will be no order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) s. 47—Mortgage decree, effect of—Execution of decree—Objection by defendant absolved from liability—Procedure.

A mortgage decree is passed against property standing in the name of a particular person and implies that the interests of that particular person in the specified property are to be sold. [p. 226, col. 1.]

In a suit on a mortgage against two mortgagors it was held that the mortgage was valid as against one of them only and the suit was decreed as against him and was dismissed as against the other. When the mortgaged properties were about to be sold the absolved mortgagor filed an objection that the properties belonged to him alone and should not be sold, and that if they were sold, it should be proclaimed at the time of the sale that the judgment-debtor had no right, title, or interest in the properties ;

Held, that the objector was a party to the suit in which the decree was passed and that the objection related to the satisfaction of the decree, within the meaning of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the objection should, therefore, be decided on the merits. [p. 226, col. 1]

Execution second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Allahabad, dated the 26th August 1922.

Mr. Damodar Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The litigation which has resulted in this appeal has taken a most unfortunate course. A woman called Mahadei, the widow of a Halwai called Mahadeo, on the death of her first husband married a certain Chunni Lal. Second marriages are permitted amongst Halwais. Mahadeo had owned two houses. On the 26th February 1907 a mortgage was executed for consideration in favour of Mahant Ishar Das by which these two houses were hypothecated. Ishar Das' successor-in-interest filed a suit upon this mortgage against Mahadei and Chunni Lal. The suit was decreed against both of them. Mahadei alone appealed. The District Judge found in appeal that there was an irregularity in the execution of the mortgage which vitiated it against both executants but as Chunni Lal had not appealed he allowed Mahadei's appeal only. It is quite clear that the effect of his judgment was in no way to absolve Chunni Lal from liability and that the preliminary decree remained a good decree as against Chunni Lal. The decree as it stood was against Chunni Lal personally with a lien declared upon the two houses but a final decree was subsequently prepared against Chunni Lal only ordering the sale of the two houses. This decree, as it stands, does not affect Mahadei in any way. She is not named in it and to read the decree it can only mean that Chunni Lal's interests in the two houses are to be brought to sale. That is all that a mortgage-decree can mean. It is passed against property standing in the name of a particular person and implies that the interests of that particular person in the specified property are brought to sale. When this decree was put into execution for the sale of the two houses Mahadei put in an objection in which she stated that the houses in question did not belong to Chunni Lal but belonged to her and that they should not be sold by auction. She contended that if they were sold at auction it should be proclaimed at the time of the sale that she owned these two houses, and that Chunni Lal had no right, title or interest therein. This objection appears to us not to be in any way an objection impugning the decree but an objection setting forth a desire to explain the decree. Mahadei was undoubtedly a party to the suit in which the decree was passed under the Explanation to section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and the question that she raised was clearly to our mind a question relating to the satisfaction of the decree. So section 47 is applicable to the matter and Mahadei's objection should have been decided upon the merits as was ordered by the late Mr. Shibendra Nath Benerji on the 7th November 1921. We cannot agree with the views taken by the late Mr. Banerji's successor and by the District Judge. We hear that, in the meanwhile, Mahadei has filed a suit for a declaration to the same effect, that she has succeeded in this suit and that the suit is now pending before the District Judge in appeal. The fact that she has done so renders the remainder of the proceedings somewhat academic. It is absolutely clear that what must be decided is to whom these houses belong and whether the question is decided under section 47 or by a regular suit appears to us not very material in the circumstances of the case. What appears to be desired is a correct decision and what seems to be less important is the method of arriving at it. Fortunately, the law now meets any difficulty in this matter for a proceeding under section 47 can be treated as a suit and a suit can be treated as a proceeding under section 47. We accordingly remit the matter to the learned District Judge for decision according to law. He will be seized both with the appeal in the regular suit and this present objection. Costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

SRI THAKUR KISHORI v. PANDIT DULEY RAM

It is the duty of a person who intends to take a transfer of a minor's property from his certificated guardian to see that the conditions laid down in the sanction granted by the District Judge for the transfer of the property are duly complied with. If the conditions are not complied with, the transfer will not be binding on the minor or on persons claiming through him. [p. 227, col. 2.]

Mr. N. P. Asthana and Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. K. Dar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by the plaintiffs who are the appellants in this Court.

SRI THAKUR KISHORI v. PANDIT DULEY RAM

It is based on a mortgage, dated the 21st of February 1910. It was executed by one Musammatt Sohan Dei as the certificated guardian of her minor son Naunit Lal. Naunit Lal, at the date of the mortgage, was about 19 years old. Subsequently, on attaining majority, he repudiated the mortgage and transferred a portion of the property mortgaged to the plaintiffs-appellants, to several persons including the respondent Duley Ram. The present plaintiffs then brought a suit in 1914 against Naunit Lal, his mother and her agent to obtain a declaration that the mortgage of the 21st of February 1910 was binding on Naunit Lal. The suit succeeded. The mortgage in question was executed on an alleged sanction given by the District Judge for the transfer. On the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, being instituted, 16 persons were impleaded as defendants. They were Naunit Lal, his son, Duley Ram, and some subsequent transferees. Six written statements were filed and the question was raised whether the mortgage in suit was binding on Naunit Lal and his transferees. It was urged that the mortgage was not executed in accordance with the sanction of the District Judge and hence was not binding on anybody. The Court of first instance held, inter alia, that the decree passed in the suit of 1914 operated as res judicata against all the transferees of Naunit Lal. The suit was decreed in toto by the Court of first instance. Duley Ram alone appealed and the point was taken before the lower Appellate Court that the mortgage was not executed in accordance with the sanction of the District Judge. The lower Appellate Court found that the contention was right and it held that the mortgage was not binding on the appellant (Duley Ram). The lower Appellate Court thought that it could proceed on a point which was common to all the defendants, and it accordingly dismissed the whole suit.

The plaintiffs have accordingly appealed. The points raised for our determination are, (1) whether the mortgage 'in suit substantially complies with the terms of the sanction granted' by the District Judge? (2) what is the effect of the decree made in the suit of 1914?, and (3) whether it is open to Duley Ram to raise an objection as to the validity of the mortgage?

The third point might be taken first. It is clear that the decree made in the suit of 1914 is not binding on Duley Ram. He had taken his mortgages prior to the institution of the suit of 1914. He had, therefore, acquired an interest in the property prior to the litigation and it cannot be said that Naunit Lal or his mother represented the interest which had been created in favour of Duley Ram. But the question is whether Duley Ram can repudiate the mortgage by taking advantage of the provisions of section 30 of the Guardians and Wards Act. We have already stated that Naunit Lal repudiated the mortgage in suit and granted certain mortgages in favour of Duley Ram. As Naunit Lal was certainly entitled to repudiate the mortgage of 1910, the mortgagee who claims under him is entitled to assert, in accordance with the assertion of Naunit Lal, that the mortgage of 1910 is not binding on him. This question, therefore, must be decided in favour of Duley Ram.

As to the first point it appears to us that the sanction granted by the District Judge has not been substantially complied with. The finding of the Court below, which is a finding of fact, is that at least a substantial portion of the mortgage-money did not find its way to the hand of the guardian or to the creditors of the minor. Apart from that finding, which is binding on us, it seems clear that the District Judge laid down as a condition precedent to the validity of the mortgage certain terms. They were that the satisfaction of the decrees were to be filed before him. An account of the expenditure of the sum sanctioned by him for the marriage of the minor should be submitted to him. He ordered that 40 acres out of the minor's property should be mortgaged. He fixed a date for the compliance of the conditions. That date expired and subsequently further time was granted for the compliance of the terms imposed by him. Finally, as the terms were not complied with, the District Judge revoked the sanction. Without entering into the question whether in all cases revocation of the sanction will affect or not a transfer made previously to the revocation, it seems to us to be clear on the facts of the present case that, the person who intended to take the transfer was bound to see that the terms imposed upon him were complied with. The District Judge was the guardian of the minor. The certificated guardian could not transfer the property of the minor without the sanction of the District Judge. If the District Judge laid down certain terms which could not be complied with by the intending transferee, his remedy was to go to the District Judge and to say that under the conditions imposed he could not take the transfer. The District Judge may or may not have varied the terms. But it is not open to the transferee to say that the conditions laid down were impossible for compliance and, therefore, he would take the minor's property without complying with the restrictive terms imposed. In this particular case, instead of 40 acres of the minor's property, the whole property which belonged to him, namely, 169 acres, was mortgaged. The transfer, therefore, made in favour of the appellants was not the transfer sanctioned by the District Judge. The result is that the mortgage is not binding on Naunit Lal and his transferees.

The second question is, what is the effect of the decree in the suit of 1914? It appears to us that the result of the decree was a declaration that the mortgage created in favour of the plaintiffs was binding on Naunit Lal or any person claiming under him after the said decree cannot now go behind it. The judgment operates as res judicata. Thus, any person who took transfer from Naunit Lal, after the suit of 1914 was instituted, could not contend that the mortgage of 1910 was not binding on Naunit Lal or themselves.

The result of all these findings seems to be this. The appellants are entitled to sell the property mortgaged to Duley Ram subject to the mortgages created in his favour. In other words, the property mortgaged to Duley Ram is liable to sale but the mortgage rights of Duley Ram will remain unaffected. The rest of the property in the hand of Naunit Lal and the remaining defendants, none of whom appealed against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, is also liable to be sold. We allow the appeal and modify the decree of the lower Appellate Court accordingly. The respondent Duley Ram will have his costs in this Court including fees on the higher scale. The appellants will have their costs of this appeal as against the remaining defendants but these costs will come out of the property. The costs allowed to the appellants will include fees in this Court on the higher scale. The decree of this Court will be drawn up in the terms of O. XXXIV, r. 4, Sch. I of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Possessory title—Dispossession—Suit to recover possession.

If a person is in possession of land even without title thereto, he cannot be successfully turned out by another person who also has no title, and if such a thing should happen the person first in possession is entitled to be put again in possession even if he should fail to prove that he has a title to the land. [p. 230, col. 1.]

Mr. A. K. Rai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Rai T. N. Sahi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—In this case the question is whether the plaintiffs have proved their occupancy right to the land in suit and whether they are entitled to recover possession from the contesting defendants 3 to 18. The plaintiffs' case is, that by a partition with one Khirodhar, with whom they were co-sharers in the holding to which the land belongs, the land fell to their share some years before the suit and that they were in peaceful possession till the 29th July 1918 when the defendants 3 to 18 dispossessed them. That dispossession is alleged to have followed an order made under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code on the 29th July 1918. The parties in that proceeding were the defendants 3 to 18 on the one hand and the defendants 1 and 2 on the other, and the allegations of defendants 3 to 18 were that the land in suit was a part of their occupancy holding, that it was mortgaged to Khirodhar, the father of defendants 1 and 2; that they had brought a redemption suit against the defendants 1 and 2, and that in execution of a decree obtained therein had taken possession by order of the Court. It was further alleged that the defendants 1 and 2, having resisted their possession after delivery of possession by the Court, it was necessary to have recourse to the Criminal Court in order that an order prohibiting the defendants 1 and 2 from interfering with their possession might be passed.

The plaintiffs were not parties to the redemption proceedings and are obviously not bound by the result, and in the present suit they ask for a declaration of their title on the ground that they had obtained title by virtue of a deed of gift from Khirodhar and that the decree in the redemption suit was not binding upon them. In addition to these declarations they seek for recovery of possession.

The Munsif found that, although the gift alleged to have been made by Khirodhar had not been made by a registered document, the plaintiffs were in fact in possession up to the time of the suit and that the case put forward by the defendants as to their title was entirely false. He found that the plaintiffs had, as alleged, been dispossessed on the 29th July 1918 and he gave them a decree for recovery of possession.

In appeal the Subordinate Judge has set aside that decree. He finds that the defendants, being admittedly in possession, the burden was upon the plaintiffs to prove that they had title to the land; that it was not sufficient to prove that they were dispossessed on the 29th July 1918, and that as they had failed to prove that they had obtained any valid title from Khirodhar the suit should be dismissed.

A second appeal was preferred to this Court and was heard by a learned Judge of this Court who agreed with the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the appeal.

The present appeal before us is made under the Letters Patent against the decree of the learned Judge of this Court.

It is quite clear that, although the plaintiffs have failed to prove that they derived title from Khirodhar by virtue of a deed of gift they are entitled to recover possession as against the defendants unless the defendants can show that they had a better title than the plaintiffs. In this connection it is necessary to observe that, in or about 1911, there was a Record of Rights made of the land in suit and that the plaintiffs were recorded as tenants in possession. There is also evidence, which apparently has been believed by the Munsif, that the plaintiffs have been paying rent to the superior landlord. Therefore, although it is open to the Subordinate Judge in appeal to say that whatever presumption as to title may have been created by the Record of Rights, it has been rebutted by the plaintiffs' failure to prove the title derived from Khirodhar, still the question whether the plaintiffs are entitled to recover possession on the strength of their previous peaceful possession has yet to be determined. From this point of view the learned Subordinate Judge has failed to approach the case. It is not sufficient to say that the plaintiffs have failed to prove their title. It is necessary to enquire whether the defendants have made an affirmative case that they had a good title to the land, or at least a better title than the plaintiffs when they dispossessed them. The defendants' case is that the land is theirs and that Khirodhar was the mortgagee. It is not sufficient for them to show that they were successful in the redemption suit against the defendants 1 and 2. They must prove their title as mortgagors and their right to remain in possession upon the strength of that title as against the plaintiffs also, and the learned Subordinate Judge in appeal should have come to a clear decision upon this point. The Munsif came to a decision against the defendants and the learned Subordinate Judge must either affirm that finding or set it aside. An attempt was made by the learned Vakil for the appellants to raise a case of adverse possession but it is quite clear that no such case was made in the pleadings and the learned Judge of this Court was right in declining to go into that point. A further attempt was made to found a title upon the fact that the landlord had received rent from the plaintiffs for some years previous to the suit, but mere receipt of rent would not be sufficient and, therefore, the question really at issue in this case is whether the defendants have proved that Khirodhar was their mortgagee and that they have redeemed the land. The case must, therefore, be remanded to the Subordinate

MADHORAM v. MITSUI BHUSHAN KAISHA

Judge for a clear finding upon this point. If he finds that the defendants 3 to 18 were the owners of the occupancy holding and that Khirodhar was their mortgagee then they will succeed, for the plaintiffs have failed to prove any title derived from Khirodhar. If the defendants fail in this then the plaintiffs will succeed. It has been found as a fact that the plaintiffs were in peaceful possession at the time of the suit and that finding cannot be assailed in second appeal. The result is that the case will be remanded to the Subordinate Judge for a finding on the question as to the title of the defendants which should be returned to this Court as soon as possible. The costs of this hearing will abide the ultimate result of the appeal. The parties will not be entitled to adduce further evidence.

Dawson Miller, C. J.—I agree. There is abundant authority for the proposition that if a person is in possession of land even without title thereto he cannot be successfully turned out by another person who also had no title, and if such a thing should happen the person first in possession is entitled to be put again in possession even if he should fail to prove that he had a title to the land.

An error of law which vitiates an award should be apparent on the face of the award itself or of any document so connected with the award as to form part of it. Application to set aside an award under the Indian Arbitration Act, IX of 1899.

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Applicants.

Mr. Dipchand Chandulmal, for the Opponents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to set aside an award on the ground of an error of law apparent on the face of the award. The applicants, Messrs Madhowram Hardevdas, agreed to purchase from the opponents, Messrs. Mitsui Bhushan Kaisha, Ltd., one hundred tons Continental Steel Bars to be shipped in January and, or February 1923 on C. I. F. terms. Sixty tons out of the lot were not shipped and by a reference dated 29th May 1923 and signed by both the parties, they agreed to refer their disputes to the arbitration of Messrs. Clayton and Houghton. The reference recites that disputes have arisen between the parties relating to sixty tons mild steel bars out of one hundred tons January-February 1923 shipment under contract No. 575, and that the parties refer the said disputes to arbitration. The award passed by the arbitrators, who were the chosen judges of the parties, declares that the contract to the extent of sixty tons stands cancelled, and that no amount is due from either party to the other on account of the said sixty tons.

There is no error of law apparent on the face of this award. Mr. Kimatrai, the learned pleader for the applicants, has, however, argued his case more or less on the same lines on which the judgment of the High Court of Bombay in Jivraj Baloo Spinning and Weaving Co. v. Chamsey Bhera (1) proceeded and which has been reversed in appeal by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the ruling reported in Chamsey Bhera Co., Ltd. v. Jivraj Baloo Spinning and Weaving Co., Ltd. (2). Mr. Kimatrai wishes me to look at the correspondence between the parties preceding the reference and to the contract, and particularly to clause 14 of the contract, which reads as under, —

"Should the goods or any portion thereof not be shipped by the specified time, the contract for the quantity so delayed shall at buyer's option be cancelled without any claim by the buyer. The buyer shall, in such a case, exercise his option of cancellation within three days of the coming to know that the shipment is delayed. Provided, however, that should the delay be due to occurrences such as storm, fire, war, tempests, frosts, floods, droughts, strikes, lockouts, accidents at mills, warehouses, railways, canals and the like, or any other causes beyond the control of sellers, the buyer shall not have the right to cancel the contract, but shall be bound to accept the goods on their arrival in terms of this agreement whenever the same arrive. If the goods are lost in transit or sunk the contract shall be cancelled in respect of such goods."

From the correspondence it appears that, owing to war conditions prevailing in Germany, the suppliers claimed the right to rescind the contract for supply of sixty tons out of the hundred tons contracted to be supplied by the opponents to the applicants. But on being pressed by the opponents, the suppliers were prepared to deliver the goods at their works on payment of the price less freight, in substitution of the original contract to ship the goods on C.I.F. terms. The opponents in their turn offered the same ultimatum to the applicants who refused to pay for the goods. The suppliers thereupon rescinded the contract to the extent of sixty tons which were consequently not shipped. The opponents declined to pay the damages and the parties referred their disputes to arbitration.

Mr. Kimatrai admits that all the differences between the parties were referred to arbitration. He, however, contends that as under clause 14 of the contract the buyers were bound to take delivery of the goods in the event of late shipment owing to force majeure and the buyers alone had the option to cancel the contract in the case of late shipment due to causes other than force majeure, the sellers had committed breach of the contract and, therefore, there was an error apparent on the face of the award in so far as the arbitrators had not awarded damages to the applicants.

As said by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Chamsey Bhera Co., Ltd. v. Jivraj

Baloo Spinning and Weaving Co., Ltd. (2), "an error in law on the face of the award..... does not mean that if in a narrative a reference is made to a contention of one party that opens the door to seeing, first, what that contention is, and then going to the contract on which the parties' rights depend to see if that contention is sound" Their Lordships have pointed out that an error of law which vitiates an award should be apparent on the face of the award itself or of any document so connected with the award as to form part of it, as, for instance, a note appended by the arbitrators stating reasons of their judgment some legal proposition which is the basis of the award and which the Court can say is erroneous. In the present case, it was open to the arbitrators to construe the contract as a whole and to read clause 14 along with the first part of the contract which provides that the buyer shall take delivery of the goods or such portion of the goods as are shipped, and to decide whether the opponents were justified in taking up the position they had taken and whether they were liable in damages.

The arbitrators were judges both of facts and of law. They may have erred in law but an error in law, if any, does not vitiate the award, Ghulam Jilani Khan v. Muhammad Hasan (3).

Mr. Kimatrai has referred me to a passage at p. 263 in London & North Western Railway v. Neilson (4), and has urged that where the arbitrators make a mistake on a question of law which has not been specifically referred to them, but which question is material in the decision of the matters which have been referred to them, such mistake may be made a ground of objection in Court. The passage referred to by the learned pleader, however, states in clear terms that such mistake of law must be apparent on the face of the award itself.

Where a specific question of law is specifically referred by the parties to the arbitrators who arrive at a wrong decision of law, their award cannot be challenged though the error of law is apparent on the face of the award itself. Where, however, a specific question of law is not so referred an erroneous decision of law may be attacked provided such error appears on the face of the award itself, or any document so closely connected as to form part of the award. There is no such error in the present case and the objections, therefore, fail. I dismiss the application to set aside award with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 60—Mortgage—Default in payment—Possession, suit for, by mortgagee—Redemption, whether can be allowed—Hindu Law—Joint family—Mortgage by manager—Interest—Necessity—Burden of proof.

A mortgage-deed provided that the mortgage-money would become payable at the expiry of ten years and that if it was not paid on the expiry of that period the mortgagees would be entitled to take possession of the mortgaged property for a period of twenty years. Default was made and the mortgagees brought a suit to recover possession of the mortgaged properties :

Held, that the only decree which could properly be passed in the suit would be one allowing the mortgagor to redeem the property on payment of the sum due within a time to be fixed by the Court and in default to direct that possession of the mortgaged property be delivered to the plaintiffs. Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge of Hardoi, dated the 22nd December 1922.

No one present.

JUDGMENT.—Dharam Singh, deceased, his brother, Bakhtawar Singh, defendant No. 1, and Jokha Singh, Gajraj Singh and Ram Singh, defendants Nos. 2 to 4, sons of Bakhtawar Singh, executed a deed of mortgage on the 7th June 1911 in favour of the plaintiffs in respect of the properties mentioned at the foot of the plaint for a sum of Rs. 8,000 with interest at the rate of 10 annas per cent. per mensem. The interest was to be paid six-monthly; in the event of default in payment the interest was made compoundable. The mortgage-money was to become payable after the expiry of ten years; in other words, the right to redeem the mortgaged properties on payment of the mortgage-money was given to the mortgagors. On the other hand, in the event of the mortgage-money not being paid at the end of the period stated above, the mortgagees were given the option to take possession of the mortgaged properties for a period of twenty years. On the 30th June 1911, the mortgagors borrowed another sum of Rs. 500 bearing interest at the same rate as was stipulated for in the earlier deed. On the 12th March 1920, they further borrowed a sum of Rs. 700 from the same mortgagees with interest at the rate of Re. 1 per cent. per mensem. The properties mortgaged under the deed of the 7th June 1911 were made security also for the two advances mentioned above and the conditions of the first deed were incorporated in the subsequent deeds. The mortgagors and the other defendants in the case constitute a joint Hindu family and the properties mortgaged belong to that family. The whole of the mortgage-money is still due to the mortgagees.

BAKHTAWAR SINGH v. BAKHTAWAR SINGH

The suit out of which this appeal arises was for the recovery of possession of the mortgaged properties. The Court below has granted a decree to the plaintiffs to the effect that the defendants were entitled to redeem the mortgage on payment of the principal sum with interest at 6 per cent. per annum calculated on the basis of six-monthly rests from the date of the execution of the deeds till the date of filing the suit and also further simple interest at the same rate till the date of payment, provided the entire sum is paid within one year from the date of the decree. In the event of such payment not being made, the plaintiffs will be entitled to enter into the possession of the mortgaged properties. The defendants shall thereafter be at liberty to redeem at any time they like on payment of the amount decreed. The plaintiffs are dissatisfied with this decree. Hence the appeal. Two points were urged on behalf of the appellants at the hearing of the appeal: (1) that the mortgagors should not have been given the right to redeem the mortgage in the present suit but that the plaintiffs-appellants should have been given a decree for possession at once, and (2) that the rate of interest should not have been reduced.

As regards the first point, we are of opinion that the decree passed by the Court below is not only perfectly proper in the circumstances of the case but it is also the only decree which could validly have been passed. On the terms of the mortgage of the 7th June 1911, the mortgagees' right to enter into the possession of the mortgaged properties arose at precisely the same moment when the mortgagors' right to redeem arose, that is, after the expiry of ten years from the date of the mortgage. It is conceded that a claim for redemption on the terms of the deed would be maintainable if a suit to enforce that claim were brought immediately on the expiration of the ten years mentioned above. Further, under the provisions of section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act of 1882, the mortgagors have an unqualified right to redeem the mortgage on payment of the mortgage-money due to the mortgagees at any time after the mortgage-money has become payable. That it has become payable is admitted. We, therefore, see no ground for postponing redemption and for relegating the mortgagors to a subsequent and separate suit for redemption. In our opinion, the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Muhammad Sher Khan v. Swami Dayal (1) covers the present suit.

It was argued by the learned Advocate for the appellants that the effect of the decree of the Court below has been the conversion of a suit of one into a suit of another character. We cannot accept this argument to be sound. The mortgagees' suit is founded on the deed of the 7th June 1911. The mortgagors' right to redeem also arises on the terms of the same instrument. The mortgagees can enforce their rights under that mortgage only consistently with, and not in derogation of, the rights of the mortgagors under the same transaction. The first point, therefore, fails.

On the second point, the ground of the decision of the Court below is that the mortgagors exceeded their authority in charging the family properties with such rate of interest as they agreed to give by the deeds in suit. The Court below pointed out that the rate of interest under the deed of mortgage dated the 28th April 1893 executed by Bakhtawar Singh, the head of the family, in favour of one Padam Singh was only six per cent. per annum. It may be mentioned that the bulk of the consideration of the deed of the 7th June 1911 was utilized towards the payment of the mortgage in favour of Padam Singh. The mortgagees have given no independent and satisfactory evidence to prove that there was necessity to borrow at the rate of interest contained in the mortgage-deeds. The principle applicable in a case of this character was laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Nawal Nazir Begam v. Rao Raghunath Singh (2). In delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee in that case, Lord Phillimore observed, - "It is incumbent on those who support a mortgage made by the manager of a joint Hindu family to show not only that there was necessity to borrow, but that it was not unreasonable to borrow at some such high rate and upon some such terms, and if it is not shown that there was necessity to borrow at the rate and upon the terms contained in the mortgage that rate and those terms cannot stand.....It remains, therefore, that there was necessity and in virtue of that necessity, authority to borrow upon reasonable commercial terms, and that the mortgage stands as good security to that extent, but that all terms of the mortgage in excess of this necessity are outside the scope of the authority." This principle was again affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ram Bujhawan Prasad Singh v. Nathu Ram (3).

As to the particular rate of interest which the learned Subordinate Judge has found to be reasonable to be allowed in the present case we, sitting as a Court of appeal, are not disposed to interfere with the decision of the Court below. This point also fails.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 17—Amendment—Discretion—Acknowledgment, maintain ability of suit on.

The powers of allowing amendments under the new Civil Procedure Code are much wider than those under the old Code. [p. 285, Col. 1]

The discretion that vests in Courts in the matter of allowing amendments of pleadings is always regulated by sound principles of law. It is to be exercised in a judicial manner and an amendment should not be arbitrarily refused.

To disclose further details of facts which support a cause of action already sued upon is not to introduce a new relief or a new cause of action in the plaint and no prejudice can result to the defendant especially when he has sought the disclosure or discovery.

As every acknowledgment implies a promise to pay, a suit based on an acknowledgment is maintainable.

Appeal from the order of the District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, dated the 5th July 1923.

Mr. R. R. Jaywant, for the Appellants.

Mr. V. V. Chitale, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises a question of amendment of the plaint. Mr. Jawahirlal, Subordinate Judge, Amraoti, dismissed a suit for the recovery of money due to plaintiff on the basis of certain transactions which the defendants had with his predecessor in interest and in respect of a portion of the amount due under which certain acknowledgments were passed. The plaintiff filed certain extracts of the account-books of his firm in support of his claim and also filed extracts from his Sarkat Bahis wherein the defendants had executed three acknowledgments, marked Exhibits P-1, P-2 and P-3. The acknowledgment marked Exhibit P-1 was stated to be for a cash loan of Rs. 700. It is dated 9th July 1914. The other acknowledgments are dated 21st March 1915 and 7th July 1917, the last one being for Rs. 1,026 only. After the date of the last acknowledgment, the parties continued their dealings and, according to the plaintiff, the account disclosed at the date of the suit that defendants were liable to plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 2,406.

The defence was that the suit was not maintainable on the basis of a mere acknowledgment. The defendants admitted all the acknowledgments but, so far as the acknowledgment dated 9th July, 1914 was concerned, it was contended on their behalf that it was not for cash paid but for a balance of the old debt due on previous transactions. The defendants naturally insisted upon their disclosure and called upon the plaintiff to give them inspection of the account-books prior to the date of

he said acknowledgment dated 9th July 1914. The books were produced in Court on 17th November 1920 and they disclosed that there were previous dealings between the parties and that the defendants' version was supportable. The plaintiff, who was not the original creditor, naturally thought that disclosure of the existing state of facts was very relevant for the purpose of making his suit all the more maintainable. This, no doubt, necessitated the withdrawal of the first assertion in the plaint that the acknowledgment dated 9th July 1914 (Exhibit P-1) was or cash paid on that occasion. He was, therefore, advised to make an application to the Court for amendment of the plaint by inserting therein a statement of the facts disclosed on inspection taken by the defendants. This was a very legitimate and straightforward request on plaintiff's part. The application was made on 2nd December 1920 to the Court presided over by the said Judge. The Court rejected the petition on several grounds, one of the grounds being that the prayer was mala fide. This order disallowing the application was followed by a wholesale dismissal of the suit on the ground that the suit was not maintainable on the basis of acknowledgments. The learned Subordinate Judge did not pause to see that the claim comprised several other items in respect of dealings subsequent to the date of the last acknowledgment dated 7th July 1917 and that the suit in respect of them could in no case be dismissed in the manner done by him. Against the dismissal plaintiff preferred an appeal to the District Judge who, differing from the trial Judge's findings on the question of the amendment of the plaint, remanded the case for trial on the merits. It is against this order of remand that the present appeal has been made.

"I am decidedly of opinion that the exercise of the discretion that vests in Courts in matters of allowing amendments is not to be arbitrarily refused as was done by the trial Judge and that the District Judge was perfectly justified in setting that Judge right. The discretion is always regulated by sound principles of law and is a discretion to be exercised in a judicial manner. The powers of allowing amendments under the new Civil Procedure Code are much wider than under the old Code; so it has been held that where a party who has an honest case has either through ignorance,—see Mukhola Soondury Dasi v. Ram Churn Karmokar (1) and Krishnaji v. Wamanaji (2),—bona fide mistake or some misapprehension not placed the real facts before the Court,—Bhyro Dutt v. Musammat Lekharanee Koor (3) and Lakshmi-bai v. Haribin Ravji (4),—or has misconceived his cause of action and form of suit,—Ragho Parashram v. Vishnu Govind (5), Shyam Chand Koondoo v. The Land Mortgage Bank of India, Ltd. (6) and Krishnaji Lakshman Rajvade v. Sitaram Murrarrav Jakhi (7),—should be allowed to amend, where this may be done without any prejudice to the defendant. In short, the object of the trial being to get at the rights of the parties, any amendment which may be required for that purpose, should, subject to well known general principles governing this matter, be allowed. It has been held that, apart from the question of limitation, it is unjust to a plaintiff to put him to the great expense of a new suit when a reasonable amendment not inconsistent with his case as it originally stood, might equally well answer his purpose as the new suit: R. and N. Modhe v. S. Dongre (8). Here, there is not merely a question of expense, for, if the amendment were refused, it might be that the plaintiff would be altogether debarred of his remedy in respect of the recovery of the debt in suit.

I dare say that this view finds ample support in the rulings of this Court also: see Mangal Prasad v. Chandramall (9), Shriram Sadasheo Balkrishna Joshi v. Ganpati Kunhi (10) and Nemasa v. Ramkrishna (11).

As to the question of prejudice on the point of limitation, I may mention that it may not arise at all in this case. To disclose further details of facts which support a cause of action already sued upon is not to introduce a new relief or a new cause of action in the plaint, and consequently no prejudice can result to the defendants who had in this particular case themselves sought the discovery or disclosure.

I may further observe that, in view of the observations of the Judicial Committee in Maniram v. Seth Rupchand (12), which has been followed by the Bombay High Court in a recent case, Chunilal v. Laxman (13), the objection that a suit is not maintainable on the basis of a Buju or acknowledgment is no longer available on the simple ground that every acknowledgment implies a promise to pay. With these remarks I dismiss the appeal and uphold the decision of the District Judge remanding the case for trial on the merits. I allow Rs. 40 as pleader's fee in this Court and direct that the appellants shall pay the costs of this Court. There is no necessity to pass any orders as to the costs of the lower Courts.

CIVIL RULE NO. 761 OF 1923.

January 15, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Suhrawardy.

JOYMANGALSEN—DECREE-HOLDER—PETITIONER
versus

SARAFAT ALI—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Bengal Tenancy Act. (VIII of 1885), s 159—"Has decided a question of title" whether qualify decree or order—Order passed in execution, what it must decide

The words "has decided a question relating to title, etc.," in s. 159 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, qualify both decree and order. Therefore, an order passed in execution of a decree, whether the decree is appealable or not, must be an order which itself decides a question relating to title or to some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereby.

Ganga Charan Bhattacharya v. Shashi Bhushan Roy 32C 572; 1 O. L. J. 255 followed

Civil Rule against the order of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Chittagong, dated the 5th April 1923.

Babu Narendra Kumar Das, for the Petitioner.

Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT—This Rule is directed against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Chittagong decreeing an appeal preferred by the opposite party from the decision of the Munsif and setting aside the sale of the disputed property. The facts of the case are that the petitioner who is a landlord obtained a decree in a rent suit against the tenant Nayan Khan. The suit was valued at Rs. 20 and odd annas. It was not disputed that the holding was a non-transferable occupancy holding. The petitioner attempted to execute the decree. The opposite party made an application for deposit of the decretal amount under section 170 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act on the ground that he was a purchaser of the holding from the tenant judgment-debtor. This application was summarily refused by the Munsif on the ground that he did not believe that the purchase made by him was a bona fide one. The opposite party, therefore, preferred an appeal, but before the appeal came on for hearing the holding in dispute was sold in execution of the decree obtained by the petitioner against the tenant. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that the appellant was a purchaser of a portion of the occupancy holding, that his purchase was bona fide and for consideration, and that he was entitled to make the necessary deposit under section 170, Bengal Tenancy Act. He allowed the appeal and further ordered that as the decretal amount had been deposited the sale should be set aside. I need not decide, in the view I take on other points, if the opposite party is entitled to make the deposit as purchaser of a portion of a non-transferable occupancy holding.

This Rule was obtained on the ground, first, that no appeal lay to the Court of appeal below from the order of the Munsif, and, secondly, that the lower Appellate Court has exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law in setting aside the execution-sale in the appeal. With regard to the first ground, it is contended that as the suit was valued at less than Rs. 50 and tried by a Munsif specially empowered under section 153, Bengal Tenancy Act, no appeal lay either from the decree or from any order passed in execution of that decree. It is also argued that, whether an appeal lay from the decree in the original suit or not, the order which was passed was not an order deciding a question relating to title to land or some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto with in the meaning of section 153, Bengal Tenancy Act. With regard to the first branch of this argument I may observe that the decree itself and the pleadings are not on the record and so there is no proof whether in the rent suit any such question was not raised which would make the decree appealable under the proviso to section 153, Bengal Tenancy Act. With reference to the second branch of the contention, I hold that the order appealed from must decide, irrespective of the character of the suit, a question of conflicting title in order to be open to appeal. For the purpose of this case I will assume that the decree was passed in a suit in which such a question was raised as to make it appealable. The question, therefore, remains as to whether any order passed in the execution of such a decree would by virtue of the decree being appealable be also appealable, whether it does or not decide any question of conflicting title. There is no authority directly in point; but it is evident from an examination of a number of cases which have dealt with this point that the law at present must be taken to be that the order passed in execution must itself decide in order to be appealable a question relating to title to land or to some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto. This point was considered in the case of Ganga Charan Bhattacharyjee v. Sashibhusan Roy (1), where it was laid down by Macleay, C. J., that in deciding whether an order is appealable under section 153, Bengal Tenancy Act, the point for consideration is not what the decree in the suit decided but what the order decided. This view was approved by a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Kali Mondal v. Ram-sarbaswa Chakrabarty (2). The result of this Full Bench decision was the addition to section 153, Bengal Tenancy Act, of the explanation by the Amending Act of 1907 which virtually nullified the effect of the decision of the Full Bench. The point which was decided in Ganga Charan Bhattacharyya v. Sashibhusan Roy (1), however, remained undisturbed; and it has further been held that the Explanation added to section 153 has not superseded the entire decision of the Full Bench in the case of Kali Mondal v. Ram Sarbaswa Chakrabarty (2). See the cases of Benimadhub v. Bisweswar (3), Nobin Chandra v. Bipin Chandra (4). Reference may in this connection be made to the case of Prafulla Krishna Deb v. Nasibunnessa Liti (5) decided by a Special Bench. There the order was passed by a District Judge and the amount claimed in the suit did not exceed Rs. 100 but the order did not decide any question relating to title to land. In these circumstances, the Special Bench held that the order was not appealable. This decision is attempted to be construed as laying down two conditions of the non-appealability of an order; first, that the suit must be one in which no appeal can lie under section 153, Bengal Tenancy Act; and, secondly, that the order must decide a question of title. I do not agree that both these conditions must be satisfied. In that particular case both the circumstances existed and both are referred to.

It is further maintained by the learned Vakil for the opposite party that where the suit is such in which an appeal would lie under section 153, Bengal Tenancy Act, any order passed in execution, whether such order decides a question of title or not should be appealable. No authority has been placed before me in support of this very broad proposition. The section is not confined to decrees only but makes an order that has decided a question relating to title to land or some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto appealable. The words "has decided a question relating to title, &c.," qualify both decree and order. I am, therefore, of opinion that an order passed in execution of a decree in which an appeal lies from the decree or not, must be an order deciding a question relating to title or some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto.

I now pass to the next contention of the learned Vakil for the opposite party, namely, that the order under consideration is one which has decided a question relating to title land. No doubt it does ; but it does not decide a question of title to land or some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto. At the time when the question of the opposite party was raised the petitioner landlord was not interested in the holding and there was, therefore, no conflicting claim to it between the petitioner and the opposite party on that basis. If this question had been raised after the sale and the opposite party had attempted to make the deposit under section 174, Bengal Tenancy Act, no doubt the order might have been taken to have decided a question of title as between parties having conflicting claims thereto. This is settled by authority : see the case of Benimadhub v. Biswas (3) and Situl Ray v. Nandlal (6) 1, therefore, hold that on the date when the opposite party applied to make the deposit under section 170 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, there was no conflict of interest or title to land between him and the decree-holder.

It has also been contended by the petitioner that the lower Court was not justified and had no jurisdiction to set aside the sale which had taken place subsequent to the filing of the appeal in that Court. I think that this contention should also prevail. It is argued, on the other hand, that the effect of the order of the lower Court was virtually to have the sale set aside, as it found that the opposite party had a right to make the deposit under section 170 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act and had already made the deposit. That may be so ; but the officer who set aside the sale was not the Munsif who had held it and I do not know whether an application was made to the Munsif for setting aside the sale in pursuance of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. On these grounds, in my judgment, this Rule should be made absolute, the order of the lower Appellate Court passed in appeal dated the 5th April 1923, as amended by his order dated the 16th April 1923, be set aside and the original order of the Munsif restored. Each party do bear his own costs of this Rule Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, Sch. II, Para 14 (c)—Arbitration—Hindu Law—Partition—Jeshtabhagam—Extra sum allowed to one party—Illegality—Revision, whether lies.

A dispute as to partition between Hindu brothers, was referred to arbitration. The arbitrator allowed the eldest brother a certain sum of money in excess of his share in consideration of his having to look after and educate his younger brothers for many years. He called this sum jeshatabhagam ;

Held (1) that the sum awarded to the eldest brother could not be described as "jeshatabhagam" under the Hindu Law ;

(2) that the award was not illegal within the meaning of the para 14 (c) of Schedule II to the Civil Procedure Code.

bhagam", and, therefore, under section, 14, cl. (c), of the Second Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, the award was illegal on the face of it. Though he uses the word "Jeshtabhagam" in para. 5 of his award, we do not think the arbitrator was applying any rule of Jeshtabhagam to the case, for, if he was doing so, he would have given a half share to the plaintiff of all the properties and only a one-fourth share to each of his brothers. He has only allowed the eldest brother to take the whole of the sum of Rs. 3,128 due to the family in consideration of his having looked after his brothers carefully for many years and by educating them enabled them to attain responsible positions in life. We do not think such an award can be said to be illegal. The lower Court has accepted the award and passed a decree in terms of it, and, in the circumstances, it is doubtful, if a revision lies at all: See Batcha Sahib v. Abdul Gunny (1). We decline to interfere and dismiss the Civil Revision Petition with costs.

Mr. A. C. Roy, for the Non-Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—On the 24th of July 1922 the defendant Mankuar Bai, who is the opponent of the application for revision here, executed a mortgage by conditional sale in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 1,500. Of the consideration she took away Rs. 186-6-5 only, placing the whole of the rest in deposit with the mortgagee for payment of debts due by her to various people. Thereafter, she refused to get the mortgage-bond registered, and the plaintiff instituted this suit for the enforcement of her personal liability arising out of the bond to the extent of Rs. 186-6-5, on which he also claimed interest. The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court has held that "as the only condition in the deed about the mode of recovery is by lahan gahan there is no personal liability to pay the money advanced, and no decree for the payment of money can be granted."

This decision purports to be based on two judgments of this Court reported in "12 Nagpur 12 and 5 Nag. L. R. 259." In Volume V of the Nagpur Law Reports, which contains only 193 pages, I can find no mention of the matter in question, and in Volume XII the only judgment dealing with it begins on page 19, not on page 12. There are also two judgments in Volume X which deal with the matter of the personal liability to pay the debt secured by a mortgage, one on page 9 and the other on page 185, but neither of them is applicable to the present case. It was found necessary in 1916 to call the attention of all Judges in these Provinces to the impropriety of citing judgments without having read them, though most ordinary persons might be expected to see that for themselves. That, however, is what the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court has done in this case.

In Govind v. Jagannath (1), Drake-Brockman, J. C., did lay down that there is no implied personal covenant to pay in a mortgage-deed in which the only remedy mentioned is foreclosure and the only statement of such a covenant is in the inference to be drawn from "the mere fixation of a date by which the mortgagor undertakes to pay the mortgage-money" on pain of foreclosure. That, however, was in 1915 and it was in 1917 that the Privy Council laid down a directly contrary rule in Ram Narayan Singh v. Adhindra Nath Mukerji (2) holding that in every mortgage there is a personal covenant to pay the mortgage-debt unless the contrary is expressly stated in the terms of the bond or appears by necessary implication from them. This was followed by a Bench of this Court, of which I was a member, D. B. Seth Jiwandas v. Mt. Janki (3).

A later judgment by Kotval, A. J. C., in Kunlammal v. Wasudeo (4) has been published the result of which appears to be a direct contradiction of the decision of the Privy Council. My learned brother has accepted the principle laid down in that decision but has, as I suggest with all respect, applied the direct opposite of that principle, relying on the ruling in Govind v. Jagannath (1) and the judgment of the Madras High Court delivered in 1881 in Ramasami Sasstrigal v. Samiyappanayakan (5), both of which must be regarded as overruled by the decision in Ram Narayan Singh v. Adhindra Nath Mukerji (2). The ruling of the Bench in D. B. Seth Jiwandas v. Mt. Janki (3) is not mentioned, but that after all merely reproduced the views of their Lordships of the Privy Council. It might further be pointed out that in the remarks quoted by my learned brother from the Madras case the learned Judges were discussing the liabilities arising out of a lahan gahan mortgage under the Hindu Law, not those implied in a mortgage by conditional sale; indeed, the decision of the whole case really amounted to this that there is no personal liability under a lahan gahan transaction only when there is no right of redemption after the date fixed for repayment, that is to say when the transaction is really a sale with an agreement to reconvey, but there is such a liability in what is really a mortgage by conditional sale with a right of redemption continuing after the date fixed for payment.

I am in any case bound to follow the ruling of the Privy Council, and even if that did not exist, I have to follow the published ruling of a Bench of this Court, and to hold that in the present case there was a personal covenant to pay the mortgage-debt unless the contrary was expressly stated in the terms of the bond or appears by necessary implication from them. So far is that from being the case that there is an agreement which very nearly amounts to an express agreement to pay, in the words: "and if I do not pay the full debt, principal and interest, within the fifteen months then I will go on paying interest at the same rate for as long as I remain responsible for payment of the debt, principal and interest." But the covenant would be there even if these words implying it were not there. It is an not express or even implied affirmation of the personal liability in the terms of the bond that is required. It arises out of the fact of the loan itself, and all that is wanted is the absence of any express or necessarily implied negation of it, of which there is no trace in the bond in this case.

There is at least one other way, and there are probably more, of looking at this obviously just claim in which it will be clearly seen that it ought to be decreed, but I need not discuss that matter. It will suffice to call attention once again to the necessity mentioned in Jairam v. Motilal (6) and Maharashtra Jnan Kosh Mandal Ltd. v. Bijjulal (7) of the astuteness and acumen of a Court of Justice being devoted to the advancement of a just claim, not to its defeat. The decree of the lower Court dismissing the suit will be set aside and in lieu thereof a decree will issue ordering the defendant to pay to the plaintiff the full amount claimed by him together with interest on that amount at 1 per cent. per mensem from the institution of the Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge, Ambala, dated the 3rd May 1922.

Lala Amar Nath Chona, for the Appellant.
Lala Har Gopal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a first appeal against an order in execution by the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ambala deciding that an application for execution of a decree presented on the 1st October 1921 was within time. The facts are these.

On the 9th December 1915 a decree was passed at Karnal in favour of Hira Lal-Anant Ram against Cheru Mal-China Mal for Rs. 4,340, the value of the original suit, being over Rs. 5,000.

On the 11th May 1916 the decree was sent for execution under section 89 of the Code of Civil Procedure to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Simla.

On the 8th June 1917 the decree-holder stated in the Simla Court that he had received Rs. 2,300 out of Court. He applied for attachment of certain property of the judgment-debtor but in consequence of his not paying the process-fee the proceedings were sent to record on the 27th July 1917.

On the 3rd May 1919 the decree-holders applied to the original Court at Karnal, which passed the decree, in the following terms:—

With reference to the decree specified above we have realised on the 16th July 1916 Rs. 1,500 and on the 19th September 1916 Rs. 800, total Rs. 2,300, from the judgment-debtor. For realisation of the balance and costs we ask for a certificate of transfer to Simla District, after service of notice upon the judgment-debtors.

As a result of this application a robkar was sent by the Karnal Court to the Simla Court asking what the result of the execution there had been.

On the 11th July 1919 both parties appeared before the Subordinate Judge, Simla, and agreed that Rs. 2,300 had been paid out of Court. The Subordinate Judge ordered that this partial satisfaction should be certified to the Karnal Court and that proceedings should be filed. A certificate accordingly was sent on the 14th July 1919.

Nothing further was done by the decree-holders until 1921 when they approached the Karnal Court again and the question is whether the application of the 3rd May 1919 was an application for execution or to take some step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Article 182 (5) of the Limitation Act. The reasons why the learned Senior Subordinate Judge held the subsequent application of 1st October 1921 to be within time are not very clearly expressed. He speaks of the certifying of the payment of Rs. 2,300 in the Simla Court on the 8th June 1917 but this date was not within three years of the 1st October 1921. He also mentions that notice was issued to the judgment-debtor by the Karnal Court on the 3rd May 1919. In the earlier part of his judgment he brushes aside the Privy Council decision in Maharaja of Bobbili v. Narasaraju Peda Baliara (1), as having been passed on different facts, but in my opinion this decision is clearly and absolutely fatal to the decree-holder's case.

This Privy Council decision came before the Bombay High Court in a case reported as Rangaswami Shetti v. Seshappa Manjappa Shimpi (2), where the facts were these:—The original decree was passed at Salem, in the Madras Presidency, in 1910. In 1914 it was transferred to the Subordinate Judge of Sirsi, in the Bombay Presidency, for execution. It was returned unexecuted in November 1918 and again was transferred to Sirsi in 1919. The question then arose whether an application filed on the 9th June 1919 was within time and depended for its answer upon whether an application to the Salem Court on the 4th August 1916, (that is to say, before the decree had been returned unexecuted by the Sirsi Court) praying that the decree might be sent to a Court in Mysore was an application for a step-in-aid of execution. The Bombay High Court held that by Explanation II to Article 182 the proper Court for the purpose of Article 182 (5) was the Court whose duty it was to execute the decree and that in Maharaja of Bobbili v. Narasaraju Peda Baliara (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council had ruled that, when the Court which has passed a decree sends it for execution to another Court, then the first Court ceases to be the proper Court within the meaning of that Explanation. The learned Counsel for the decree-holders-respondents admits that this Bombay judgment is completely against him but he submits that the decision is wrong and that the Privy Council decision has been misinterpreted.

In that case, viz., Maharaja of Bobbili v. Narasaraju Peda Baliara (1) the facts were that a decree dated the 5th April 1904 had been sent by the District Judge of Vizagapatam on the 30th September 1904 to the Court of the Munsif at Parvatipur. The Munsif attached certain immoveable property and afterwards dismissed the petition for execution. No further steps were taken in his Court. On the 13th December 1907 the decree-holder presented a petition in the original Court, i.e., that of the District Judge of Vizagapatam, stating that the Munsif had attached certain property but had retransferred the decree to the District Judge and praying that the property attached should be sold and that notice should be issued to the respondents. His application was returned for amendment and was presented again without amendment and nothing was done on it. The next thing that occurred was the presentation on the 27th April 1910 of another application to the District Judge. It was then ascertained that the decree had never been returned to his Court by the Munsif of Parvatipur and non-satisfaction was actually not certified by the Munsif until the 3rd August 1910. The question was whether the application of the 13th December 1907 saved limitation. Their Lordships of the Privy Council decided that it did not, because the copy of the decree with a non-satisfaction certificate was not returned to the District Judge until 3rd August, 1910, and because the petition of the 30th December 1907 was for execution of the decree by sale of the immoveable property of the respondents which was within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Munsif's Court.

I am asked to assume that the real reason why the District Judge's Court was held not to be the proper Court was that the application was for the sale of property not attached by the Court to which the application was made and not within its jurisdiction. Their Lordships, however, referred to sections 223, 224, 228, and 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 as satisfying them that the Court of the District Judge was not the proper Court and it has to be noticed also that the application of the 13th December 1907, prayed not only for sale of the property but also for the issue of notice to direct the judgment-debtor to appear before the District Judge. The present O. XXI, r. 10 was the first para. of old section 230 and this lays down that, "where the holder of a decree desires to execute it, he shall apply to the Court which passed the decree.....or if the decree has been sent under the provisions hereinbefore contained to another Court, then to such Court or to the proper officer thereof." The word then is of great significance and I think there is no doubt that the ratio decidendi of Maharaja of Bobbili v. Narasuraju Peda Baliara (1), was that the District Judge's Court was not the proper Court because it was not the duty of that Court to execute the decree when the decree had been transferred to another Court and had not been returned as provided for in present section 41, which was part of old section 223, one of the sections to which their Lordships of the Privy Council referred.

On these two authorities it must be held that the application of the 3rd May 1919 to the Karnal Court was not an application to the proper Court within the meaning of Article 182. The learned Counsel for the decree-holders-respondents has a subsidiary argument that notice was issued by the Karnal Court on the application of the 3rd May 1919 and that the issue of the notice saves limitation under Article 182 (6) in which sub-clause there is no mention of the proper Court. This argument has no force. It is clear that sub-clause (6) has to be read with sub-clause (5). The words in (6) are: "Date of issue of notice to the person against whom execution is applied for." Application is dealt with immediately above in (5) and there can be no doubt that the words 'applied for' mean 'applied for as provided in sub-clause (5)'; otherwise we might have the absurd claim that limitation is saved by the issue of notice to a judgment-debtor by some unauthorised functionary who does not preside over a Court at all. The proceedings before the Subordinate Judge at Simla on the 11th July 1919, cannot be brought under Article 182 (5) for there was no application made on that day to the Subordinate Judge either for execution or for the taking of some step-in-aid of execution. It is argued that to certify part-payment is a step-in-aid of execution but limitation is not saved by a step-in-aid of execution. It is saved only by an application to the proper Court to take a step-in-aid of execution.

For the above reasons, I must hold that the application for execution, dated the 1st October 1921, was barred by limitation. I accept the appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and dismiss the application accordingly.

The appellants will have their costs in this Court.

An executor derives his title from the Will and not from the probate; the probate is the only proper evidence of the executor's appointment, but the executor represents the estate of the testator from the time of his death and not from the date of the probate. [p. 245, col. 1.]

Once probate is taken out by an executor all intermediate acts which he has done in connection with the estate of the testator are validated. [p. 245, col. 2.]

Where an executor is substituted as the legal representative of the testator in a proceeding before probate is obtained, the estate of the testator is sufficiently represented and the result of the proceeding is binding on the estate, provided probate is, as a matter of fact, obtained by the executor.

Mr. Nihal Chand and Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants.

Messrs. P. L. Banerji and S. N. Mukerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These two cases are connected together. The earlier one, F. A. No. 433 of 1921, ought strictly speaking to be decided first, but in view of the facts we are about to set out we consider it expedient to dispose first of F. A. No. 86 of 1923. The record in that case has not been printed. We were of opinion that it was unnecessary to have this done in view of the decision at which we are about to arrive.

Before we proceed to deal with the questions which arise for determination before us, it is necessary to set out a number of facts which will have to be referred to hereafter.

We are concerned in these two cases with certain items of property which belonged to a Bengali gentleman named Kailash Chandar Bhattacharji.

This gentleman, on the 16th August 1910, in order to raise a loan of Rs. 25,000 mortgaged three items of property to a mortgagee named Lala Ram Das.

Those items of property were as follows:—

1. Mauza Sherpur.
2. Mauza Lalpur.
3. The Christy Cotton Bailing Press.

The Bank of Upper India, Limited, Meerut, which afterwards went into liquidation, had obtained in the year 1910 a simple money decree against Kailash Chandra Bhattacharji and in execution of this decree the Bank got Mauza Sherpur brought to sale and it was purchased on the 20th January 1913 by one Banarsi Das.

That sale was held subject to the mortgage which had been executed by Kailash Chandar in the month of August 1910,

In the month of June 1913 Banarsi Das, the auction-purchaser of Sherpur, redeemed the mortgage of the 16th August 1910 by paying a sum of Rs. 2,885 to the mortgagee L. Ram Das.

Kailash Chandar died on the 16th September 1912. He left a Will bearing date the 10th August 1911 and made bequests in favour of his widow and his four children.

One of these children was B. Krishna Chandar Bhattacharji who was appointed executor under the Will.

Krishna Chandar Bhattacharji took out probate of the Will on the 13th December 1913.

These are practically all the facts we have got to deal with in deciding the present cases.

To return to F. A. No. 86 of 1923. This appeal arose out of a suit brought by two sons and a daughter of the deceased Kailash Chandar in order to avoid the sale which took place in execution of the simple money decree obtained by the Bank of Upper India against their father Kailash Chandar.

The ground upon which these plaintiffs sought to avoid that sale was that the execution proceedings had been taken behind their backs and at the time the order for sale was made they had not been parties to the record.

The substantial defence which was set up by the defendants in that case, who included the Liquidators of the Bank of Upper India, was that the sale was perfectly valid and could not be set aside. It was pleaded that execution of the simple money decree against Kailash Chandar had begun in the latter's lifetime and it was pointed out that after his death his son Krishna Chandar was made a party to the execution proceedings in place of his deceased father.

It was claimed that Krishna Chandar, being the executor of his father's estate, completely represented that estate in the execution proceedings and that consequently there was no ground whatever upon which these plaintiffs were entitled to have the sale declared void.

The Subordinate Judge, who dealt with this suit, Mr. Abdul Halim, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. He was of opinion that in no way could the execution sale at which Banarsi Das purchased the property be deemed to be void. He was of opinion that in the execution proceedings leading up to the sale the estate of the deceased Kailash Chandar was fully represented by the executor.

The same question was in issue in the other suit out of which F. A. No. 334 of 1921 has arisen. That suit, with which we shall have to deal presently, was a suit brought to enforce certain rights under the mortgage executed in the month of August 1910.

The sons and daughter of Kailash Chandar, who were the plaintiffs in the suit which we have just been discussing, were impleaded as defendants in this mortgage-suit and they raised the plea that Banarsi Das, whose interest is now vested in all the plaintiffs in the mortgage-suit, could take no title under the purchase which he made in execution of the Bank's decree.

MEGHRAJ v. BHATTACHARJI

The Subordinate Judge, who decided this particular case, Mr. P. K. Ray, repelled the contention that Krishna Chandar fully represented the estate in the execution proceedings. Mr. Ray was of opinion that, although Krishna Chandar was without doubt the executor of his father's estate at the time these execution proceedings were going on, he had not taken out probate and for that reason Mr. Ray seems to have thought that he did not fully represent the estate.

On the other hand, Mr. Ray was of opinion that, notwithstanding this circumstance, it could not be declared that the sale in execution of the decree was void. It was pointed out that, at any rate, one of the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor was a party to those proceedings, namely, Krishna Chandar, and that the failure to cite as parties to the proceedings, the other representatives of Kailash Chandar amounted at most only to an irregularity whereby the sale in execution could not be treated as being void, but, at the best, voidable only.

In deciding this matter the learned Subordinate Judge relied upon the principles laid down in the Privy Council ruling in Malkarjun v. Narhari (1).

We are quite satisfied that both Courts were right in holding that this execution sale could not in any way be treated as a void sale. We prefer to follow the reasons given by Mr. Abdul Halim in his judgment and we have no hesitation in saying that in the execution proceedings anterior to the sale of the property the estate of the deceased judgment-debtor was fully represented. It seems to us nothing to the point to say that Krishna Chandar, who undoubtedly was his father's executor, could not fully represent the estate at the time these execution proceedings were going on because he had not at that time obtained probate of the Will. It is to be pointed out that every executor derives his title from the Will and not from the probate. The probate is indeed the only proper evidence of the executor's appointment, but notwithstanding this it is clear that the executor represents the estate of the testator from the time of his death.

(1) 25 B. 337 ; 5 C. W. N. 10 ; 2 Bom. L. R. 927 ; 27 I. A. 216 ; 10 M. L. J. 868 ; 7 Sar. P. O. J. 739, (P. O.).

There is clear provision to this effect in section 179 of the Indian Succession Act which declares that the executor is the legal representative of the deceased for all purposes, and all the property of the deceased person vests in him as such.

It is an admitted fact that probate of the Will was subsequently taken out and, that being so we, who are dealing with the case now, must take it that Krishna Chandar has conclusively been proved to be the executor of his father's estate, and that the estate of his father vested in him from the date of his father's death. The probate which was subsequently taken out established the Will from the date of the testator's death and is conclusive proof of the appointment of the executor ; and, further, it is provided by law, that once probate is taken out by the executor all intermediate acts which he has done in connection with the estate of the testator are validated.

It seems to us, therefore, to be impossible to say that the estate of the deceased judgment-debtor was not fully represented in these execution proceedings.

We may say here that we are not able to follow the view taken by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Lakhya Dasya v. Umakanto Chuckerbutty (2).

At the same time, we recognise that the judgment of the other Subordinate Judge, Mr. Ray, also proceeds upon a correct principle and that, even had our opinion regarding the nature of the executor's position been other than it is, we should have agreed with Mr. Ray's decision that the case ought to be dealt with upon the principles laid down in the Privy Council ruling to which we have referred. We take it, therefore, as being clear on all hands that the suit brought by the sons and daughter of Kailash Chandar for the purpose of having this sale set aside was bound to fail, and we hold definitely that the sale was not void but was a perfectly valid sale in favour of Banarsi Das.

As held by the learned Subordinate Judge Mr. Ray even if we were disposed to hold that the Will was voidable the suit brought by the sons and daughter was barred by limitation. The period of limitation to set aside a sale of this nature is one year and that period expired long ago.

This finding, therefore, disposes of F. A. 86 of 1923 which we must dismiss with costs to the respondent including in this Court fees on the higher scale, if any.

We have now to come to the other case, namely F. A. 334 of 1921.

We have already mentioned the fact that the plaintiffs in this case are said to represent the interest of Banarsi Das who purchased one of the items of the mortgaged property in the year 1913.

We have also mentioned the fact that on the 3rd June 1913 Banarsi Das redeemed the mortgage which had been executed by Kailash Chandar on the 16th August 1910.

The object of the present suit is to obtain the balance of this mortgage-money against the persons who have become subsequent transferees of the properties mortgaged other than the item of Sherpur which has come into the hands of the plaintiffs.

The village of Lalpur, which was one of the items of property mortgaged, was sold to one Kishori Lal who is now represented by the defendants Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9 in this suit.

The other item of the mortgaged property, namely, the Christy Cotton Baling Press, was sold to the defendant No. 5.

The plaintiffs are claiming as representatives of the original mortgagee to recover out of the items mortgaged the sums which they are liable to contribute under the mortgage.

One of the pleas which was raised on behalf of the 5th defendant, the present owner of that item of property known as the Christy Cotton Baling Press, was that the suit was time-barred. The validity of that plea depended upon the question whether this Baling Press was to be treated as moveable or immoveable property.

In the mortgage-deed which was executed by the deceased Kailash Chandar he described this particular item of property in the following words :—

"Ek manzil karkhana wa imarat mausuma Christy Cotton Baling Press Meerut mai jami saman mutaliqa uske."

So far as we understand the case, the 5th defendant who has been impleaded, purchased the Baling Press, i.e., the machinery which goes to make up the Press, and has removed it to some place in the Punjab.

The learned Judge of the Court below was of opinion that the machinery of this Baling Press had undoubtedly been mortgaged under the document in suit. But he was of opinion that the machinery was moveable property and that, consequently, Article 120 of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act would apply.

It is now argued before us that the decision of the Court below on this point was wrong and that the item of property described in the mortgage-deed in the language to which we have just referred ought to be treated as immoveable property and not moveable property. After a full consideration of the arguments we are unable to entertain this contention.

We would say, in the first place, that there is practically no evidence on the record which gives us any accurate idea as to how this Baling Press was set up at Meerut.

There is no doubt a reference in the mortgage-deed to a building or "imarat," but if we look to the evidence in the case all we can find is this. One of the plaintiffs' witnesses, Wasiyat Ali, says : "I saw the Christy Cotton Press for the first time at the end of 1913. The machinery was kept in the enclosure of Ganga General Mills."

The only other witness who speaks about this property is one Mr. Damodar Das, Vakil. This gentleman is the Director of the Ganga General Mills. He has deposed that the Mills held on lease the land on which their buildings were erected and it was stated by Mr. Damodar Das that his Company gave B. Kailash Chandar Bhattacharji a plot of land to keep his Cotton Baling Press on. Witness did not know the terms on which the ground had been given to Bhattacharji. He says he was treated as a sub-tenant. In cross-examination the witness said that K. C. Bhattacharji had erected some building but that this building had not been completed.

We are left, therefore, in doubt as to how this Press, which was set up in Meerut was located and, on such evidence as we have, do not see how we could possibly come to the conclusion that this Baling Press was immoveable property.

We have been referred to the definition of the expression "immoveable property" contained in the General Clauses Act of 1897. This definition has to be read along with the interpretation section of the Transfer of Property Act (section 3) and in particular we have to pay attention to the words in this latter section "attached to earth."

We have mentioned already that there was no clear evidence before us that any building intended to shelter the machinery of this Baling Press was ever completed. But even if we assume that there was such a building it would be difficult for us, in view of this definition, to hold that the machinery which has now been removed to the Punjab and which has been sought to be sold in order to satisfy the claim of those plaintiffs was in any sense immoveable property.

We cannot decide this question on the English Law relating to Fixtures. We have to pay attention to the definitions in the Indian Statutes.

If there was a building in existence inside which this machinery was sheltered it cannot be said that this machinery was attached to the building for the permanent beneficial enjoyment of the building itself as is contemplated in clause (c) of the definition in section 3 of the Transfer of Property Act.

It would be difficult in a case of this kind to speak of machinery being attached to a building embedded in the earth for the beneficial enjoyment of the building. On the other hand, it would seem more natural to suppose that the building is really put up for the purpose of sheltering the machinery and protecting it from the weather.

Nor, again, with reference to the definition of immoveable property contained in the General Clauses Act, is it possible to say that this machinery was permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth.

Having regard to this definition and to the state of the evidence in the case we have no hesitation in saying that the learned Subordinate Judge was quite correct.

It follows, therefore, that we cannot interfere with that portion of the decree which declares that the claim, in so far as it related to this machinery, was beyond time being barred by the six years' rule of limitation.

We come then to the other part of the case. We have it that some of the defendants are the transferees of another item of the mortgaged property named Lalpur.

The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that these plaintiffs could only sell up Lalpur to the extent to which that item was liable under the terms of the mortgage. In other words, the Subordinate Judge, in accordance with the provisions of section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act, distributed the liability of the three items of property as they stood at the time of the mortgage. He was of opinion that the value of Sherpur which the plaintiffs purchased was represented by the figure Rs. 6,000. Lalpur he found was of the value of Rs. 5,000 while the Christy Cotton Baling Press was of the value of Rs. 25,000.

Acting on this principle he has given plaintiffs a decree for a certain sum as principal and a further amount as interest and directed that this amount be realised by the sale of the portion of the village of Lalpur sufficiently to satisfy the decretal amount.

In appeal before us, however, the argument has been that the plaintiffs are entitled to throw the whole of the mortgage-debt upon Mauza Lalpur minus the share to which Sherpur is liable.

The suit in substance is a suit for contribution and the section which regulates the rights of the parties is section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act which lays down that, where several properties, whether of one or several owners, are mortgaged to secure one debt such properties are, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, liable to contribute rateably to the debt secured by the mortgage after deducting from the value of each property the amount of any other encumbrance to which it is subject at the date of the mortgage.

There is in this case no question of a contract to the contrary and, consequently, applying the principle laid down in section 82, it is evident that the three items of property which were mortgaged under the mortgage of 1910 were liable each to satisfy a rateable proportion of the mortgage-debt, the ratio being in proportion to their respective values. We have already indicated the values of these properties as they stood at the time of the mortgage. Sherpur was of the value of

LAXMICHAND v. BAJIRAO

Rs. 6,000. Lalpur was of the value of Rs. 5,000 and the Christy Cotton Baling Press was of the value of Rs. 25,000.

It is, therefore, on the basis of the ratio so indicated that the claim of the plaintiffs must be decided. A case in which this principle was laid down is reported in Bhagwan Singh v. Mazhar Ali Khan (3).

The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover from the present owners of Lalpur a share of the mortgage-debt calculated in accordance with the respective liabilities of the three items of property as defined in section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act. In our opinion this decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is perfectly correct and ought not to be disturbed. The only other ground which is mentioned in the grounds of appeal is one with regard to future interest. We imagine this plea has been taken under some misapprehension. It seems to us that the decree of the Court below provides for subsequent interest and subsequent costs in the manner which is usual in the case of decrees for sale under O. XXXIV, r. 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The cross-objection which has been filed in this case relates to the point which we have already decided in connection with F. A. No. 86 of 1923.

For the reasons already given, the cross-objection fails and is dismissed with costs.

This appeal fails too and is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 419 OF 1922.

October 3, 1923.

APPELLANT

versus

BAJIRAO AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—
RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art 97, 116—Lessee—Registered lease—Dispossession—Suit for damages—Limitation.

A suit by a lessee under a registered lease for damages for dispossession before the expiry of the period of lease, is governed by Article 116 and not Article 97 of the Limitation Act and the limitation runs from the date of dispossession.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Betul, dated 31st July 1922, in Civil Appeal No. 42 of 1922.

Mr. N. G. Bose, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question in this appeal is one of limitation.

The respondents who were malguzars had let their sir lands in 1912 for five years to appellant and during the continuance of that lease they executed another lease of the same lands for eleven years to plaintiff-appellant on 18th September 1913. By the terms of this lease possession was to be given in April 1917 on the expiry of the first lease. In the meanwhile, on 6th April, 1914, the defendants' village was sold in auction and they lost their proprietary rights and became occupancy tenants of the land and thus incompetent to lease it for more than one year.

The plaintiff remained in possession till 1st June 1917 when he was ejected by defendants and he sues to recover the premium paid for the lease with interest as damages. The suit filed on 17th January 1922 was dismissed by the first Court as time-barred, Article 97, Limitation Act, being held applicable. On appeal the decision was upheld by the Additional District Judge, Betul.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that Article 116 applies and that limitation runs from the date the appellant was dispossessed, 1st June 1917. The lease is registered, but being an agricultural lease is not governed by the Transfer of Property Act. There can be no doubt that the respondents had a title to convey at the date of the lease, which was prior to their losing their proprietary rights. Moreover, the appellant was actually in possession under the former lease till June 1917.

In view of the remarks of the Privy Council in Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (1) it would appear that limitation would run from the date of actual failure of consideration, which in the present case is the date of dispossession. As to whether the case falls under Article 97 or Article 116 there are a very large number of decisions on both Articles, some of which are rather difficult to distinguish. The case of Mammikkutti v. Puzhakkal Edom (2), quoted by the lower Appellate Court, is not a case of lease at all, but only of a license to cut trees. As a matter of fact, none of the numerous cases quoted are precisely similar to the present case.

In view of the fact that the lease is registered, I am disposed to hold that the case is governed by Article 116. There can be no doubt that the lease is a contract and though being an agricultural lease it is not within the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, it contains an express contract that the plaintiff shall remain in possession after the expiry of the present lease.

It has been held that Article 116 applies to all registered contracts whether there is not an express provision in the Act for similar contracts not registered, cf. Multanmal v. Budhumal (3) and cases quoted therein. I am also distinctly of opinion that the plaintiff's cause of action rests upon the registered contract and derives its vital force therefrom.

It has been held in several cases that a registered instrument of sale or lease operates also as an executory contract to deliver possession of the property to the vendee or lessee, such contract being deemed to be embodied in the sale or lease, and a suit for damages for breach of such contract is within Article

116: cf. Mul Kumar v. Chattarsingh (4) and Zamindar of Vizianagram v. Behara Suryanarayan (5). The question of the date from which limitation runs must be decided by reference to the Article under which the suit would have fallen if the contract had not been registered. That Article is of course Article 97 in the present case.

I rely on the remarks of Fawcett, J., in Multanmal v. Budhumal (3) supra, at page 334. I have already stated that, in view of the decision of the Privy Council in Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (1), limitation will run from the date of dispossession in June 1917. This being so, the limitation applicable being 6 years the suit brought in 1922 is not barred.

The decrees of the lower Courts are, therefore, set aside and the suit remanded to the first Court for determination of the other issues. Costs in appeal on respondents. Costs in the Courts below to abide the result.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for a declaration that the trusts created by the deceased Visram Oka by his Will, dated 29th January 1921, and by his subsequent codicil, dated 10th March 1912, in favour of "Dharmao Kama or Kam" is void for uncertainty and for an injunction restraining the trustee from applying the trust money to such objects.

The two plaintiffs are the daughters of the testator. Defendants Nos. 1 (a) to (c) and defendant No. 2 are his nephews, being the sons of his brother Tokersi who died shortly after the testator. Defendant No. 3 is the husband of plaintiff No. 2, and the brother of plaintiff No. 1's deceased husband. He is also one of the five trustees appointed as such under the Will of the testator and now in sole management of the estate, three of the five trustees being dead, and the fourth trustee being non compos mentis. The testator has no other heirs or near relations interested in the management of the estate.

The Will, which is written in the Sindhi language by a bond-writer and executed by the testator in Gujrati characters, contains inter alia the following directions :—

"I declare and make this Will that after my death Seth Haji Mahamed, Tokersi Uka, Jethalal Kalianji, Tulsidas Behar and Tikamji Bogha will take my immovable property described above as trustees (on trust) under their care and management.....Out of my half share in the property bearing S. No 37 Sheet E 26 the trustees will utilize Rs. 15 every month in any "Dharmao Kaman." They will give Rs. 10-0-0 every month to my elder daughter Javherbai and Rs. 10 every month to my younger daughter. The surplus if any will be paid by them to my wife Sakerbai during her lifetime out of which she will spend money on account of repairs to the said property and also pay taxes, etc., therefor. After my wife Sakarbai's death the trustees above-named will pay Rs. 20 to my daughter Jayherbai and Rs. 20 to my younger daughter Shambai every month. Out of the surplus of rent if any the trustees named above after defraying the expenses on account of repairs and paying the amount of taxes will utilize the whole balance in "Dharmao Kaman" in such manner as they deem fit."

The codicil, which is written in Gujrati in the handwriting of Tulsidas Behar one of the five trustees, referred to above, and is executed by the testator and attested by all the witnesses in Gujrati characters, inter alia provides as under:—

"Besides this, I have made a separate registered Will. According to its writing I have awarded to my wife share. If the persons of my family trouble the trustees or my wife in so doing, then the rent of my half share of the house to be distributed in three parts, one Jayherbai, one Shambai, one for my wife. If my wife dies, then her share to be utilized by the trustees in "Dharmao Kam."

It is in evidence that the father of the testator migrated to Karachi from Kathiawar and that the testator did not know how to read and write Sindhi, that he used to speak in Gujrati language, and that he did not know how to speak in Sindhi well : Jethalal, Ex. 5, lines 25 to 40.

The estate of the testator has been the subject-matter of previous litigation in this Court. In suit No. 96 of 1913 defendants Nos. 1 (a) to (c) claimed the whole property left by the testator by right of survivorship, contending that the deceased formed member of a joint Hindu family with his brother Tokersi and that the property left by him was joint family property which could not be disposed of by him by a Will. Both the Will and the codicil were expressly put in issue in this suit and were held to be valid, the deceased having been held to be separate from Tokersi. All the parties to the present suit were parties to that suit. An appeal was preferred by defendants Nos. 1 (a) to (c) against the decision of the lower Court but was subsequently withdrawn.

Another suit being suit No. 119 of 1916 was filed by the trustee defendant No. 3 against defendants Nos. 1 (a) to (c) for an account of the half share of the rents of plot No. 37 due to the estate of the deceased. This suit resulted in a compromise, by which the property was divided in two shares by metes and bounds and the trustee put in possession of his specific share.

In both suits, Nos. 96 of 1913 and 119 of 1916, the words "Dharmao Kaman" in the Sindhi Will and the words "Dharmao Kam" in the Gujrati codicil were translated by the Court Translator as "charitable purposes," "charitable" being used in the popular sense and not in the technical sense in which it is used in English law. The plaintiffs based their plaint on the English translation and asked for a declaration that the trusts being for charitable purposes were void for uncertainty. At the hearing, the plaintiffs were permitted by the Court to amend their plaint by substituting the words "Dharmao Kam" in place of the words "charitable purposes."

The chief contending defendants are defendants Nos. (a) to (c) and defendant No. 2, the sons of Tokersi, defendant No. 3, having adopted neutral position. The contentions raised by the parties are embodied in the following issues raised by the Court :—

1. Was the codicil executed by Visram Uka on 10th March 1912 ?

2. If so, is it valid under the Law ?

3. Are points referred to in issues 1 and 2 res judicata ?

4. Did Visram Uka make disposition of S. No. 37 S. S. A. 26 as shown in paras. 5 and 6 of the plaint ?

5. Is the bequest by Visram Uka for "Dharmao Kam" void for the want of certainty ?

6. Is the question of bequest for "Dharmao Kam" res judicata in view of decisions in suits Nos. 119 of 1916 and 96 of 1913, and 374 of 1916 ?

7. Are the plaintiffs estopped from contending that the bequest by Visram Uka for "Dharmao Kam" is void and unenforceable (covers para. 8 of the written statement) ?

8. Is the suit of the plaintiffs barred under Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code ?

9. Can the suit lie as framed for declaration and injunction only or should the plaintiffs sue for possession also ?

10. Is the plaint insufficiently stamped ?

11. Is the Advocate-General or the Collector of Karachi a necessary party to the suit ?

12. General.

Issue No. 5. The main issue in the suit is issue No 5, the point for decision of the Court being whether a bequest for the surplus rents being utilized in "Dharmao Kaman" in the Sindhi Will or the share being utilized in "Dharmao Kam" as the trustees may deem fit "in the Gujrati codicil is void for uncertainty."

There is no dispute that "Kaman" in Sindhi and "Kam" in Gujrati means objects or works.

"Dharmao" is the adjective of "Dharam" and is derived from Sanskrit.

Bequests in favour of "Dharam" have been the subject of judicial decisions from the year 1842, and, except for the solitary dissenting note of Mr. Justice Subramania Ayyar, a Hindu Judge, in Parthasarathy Pillai v

SHAMBAI v. GOVERDHAN

Thiruvengada Pillai (1), it has been consistently held by the different High Courts in India that a bequest to Dharam is void for uncertainty.

Reference may be made to Shibachander Mullick v. Sreemutty Treeporah Saondry Dossee (2) where a bequest to Dharam was translated as a gift for pious acts to procure future bliss; Advocate-General v. Damodhar (3), where 'Dharam Khate', was said not to be equivalent to the term "charity" as defined in the Courts of Equity, and to imply performance of acts considered meritorious in the Hindu religions many of which could by no latitude of construction be brought within the term "charity" as used in the English cases. Premji-van Tulsidas v. Den Kuverbai (1859) (4), where Dharma was said to include a greater number of objects which came within the meaning of the word "benevolent" as contradistinguished from "charitable" as used in English decisions. Devshankar Narainbhai v. Matiram Jageshwar (5), where Fulton, J., held that in a purely discretionary matter of this kind the earlier decisions must prevail in settling the Law, and set aside a bequest in favour of "Dharmada" as uncertain and the Privy Council ruling in Bunchoredas v. Parvatibai (6), where their Lordships referred to the definition of "Dharama" given in Wilson's Dictionary as meaning "Law, virtue, legal or moral duty" and held that the language of Lord Eldon in the leading case of Morice v. Bishop of Durham (7) applied as strongly, if not more so, to Dharam as to the words used in the English cases.

The remarks of Lord Eldon at p. 539 of the report, and referred to above, are as follows:—

"As it is a maxim, that the execution of a trust shall be under the control of the Court, it must be of such a nature, that it can be under that control; so that the administration of it can be reviewed by the Court; or, if the trustee dies, the Court itself can execute the trust. A trust, therefore, which in case of mal-administration could be reframed, and a due administration directed, and then, unless the subject and the objects can be ascertained; upon principles, familiar in other cases, it must be decided that the Court can neither reform mal-administration, nor direct a due administration."

According to this rule, the Court has to determine whether the objects of the trust are so certain as to make it possible for the Court to control the administration of the trust, if not the trust is ill-declared and must fail.

This rule is, however, subject to an exception, it being established that a trust for charity or for charitable objects shall not fail on account of the uncertainty of its objects being used not in its popular sense but in its technical sense as meaning objects which are either enumerated in the now repealed Statute of Elizabeth (43 Eliz. C. 4) or which fall within the spirit and intendment of that Act liberally construed.

In the Bishop of Durham's case (7), a bequest in trust for such objects of benevolence and liberality as the trustee in his own discretion should approve was held to be invalid for want of certainty of the objects of the trust. On the same principle, a bequest for charitable or philanthropic purposes Re-Madcouff (8), a trust for purposes "most conducive to the good of religion in this diocese" in Most Reverend Robert Dunne and James Byrne (9), a bequest for "patriotic purposes, objects and such charitable institutions as the trustees think fit," in National Provincial and Union Bank of England, Ltd. v. Tetley (10), have been held invalid under the English Law. A bequest to be disposed of in a righteous manner or in a pious and charitable way in Nanatal Lallubhoy v. Hurloohund Jagusha (11), a bequest for "Sarakam" in Bai Bapi v. Jannadas Hathising (12), a bequest for "popular or useful purposes" in Trikamdas v. Haridas (13), a bequest for "good words" in Gokoolnath Guha v. Issur Lochun Roy (14), a general endowment for the worship of God without specifying the Deity for whose benefit the endowment is to take effect, in Chandi Charan v. Haribola Das (15), a bequest for "spread of Hindu religion" in Venkata Narasimha Rai v. Subbarao (16) have been held to be invalid in Indian Courts.

On the strength of the translation made by the Court Translator in the previous proceedings, the learned pleader for the defendants Nos. 1 (a) to (c) and defendant No. 2 contended that the bequest being for charitable objects or purposes was valid. The words "charitable objects" have been used in the translations both of the Sindhi Will and the Gujrati codicil in their popular sense. In the English language the word "charity" in its popular widest sense is probably incapable of definition, In re Nottage Jones v. Palmer (17) and includes all good affections men ought to bear towards each other, as per Master of the Rolls in the Morrice v. Bishop of Durham (18). "Dharma" likewise includes all objects of charity or of religion in this wide sense, and perhaps something more. In Sarat Chandra Ghosh v. Pratap Chandra Ghosh (19) where the words "Dharma Kama Arthe" and "Dharama deshe" were officially translated as religious acts and religious purposes, Choudhary, J., a Hindu Judge, observed that in Bengali these words connoted more than religious acts or religious purposes. The objects of a bequest for Dharma are too vague and indefinite and would include every possible object of benevolence whether religious or otherwise. In the Sindhi dictionary, "Dharma" is said to mean "justice, piety, virtue, duty, religion, faith, honesty, the customary observances of caste, sect, etc., charity, alms." It has practically the same meaning as contained in Wilson's dictionary which was accepted by Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Runchoredas' case (6). Similarly, in the Gujrati dictionary "Dharama" is said to mean "a sacred obligation or duty; almsgiving, charitable acts and offices; alms, charities bestowed; virtue; moral or religious merit (resulting from good acts)."

The use of the words "Dharmao" or "Dharmada Kama" or "Dharmarthe" does not make the bequest less uncertain than a bequest for Dharma. In Gurdit Singh v. Sher Singh (20) the Punjab Chief Court held that there was no difference between "Dharma" and "Dharma Artha."

In Suit No. 195 of 1918 Lakiro Ramji v. Valabdas (21), recently decided by this Court in the exercise of its Original Jurisdiction, Aston, A. J. C., held that a bequest in favour of "Dharmada Kam" in a Will made in the Gujrati language was void for uncertainty. In the present case the testator who knew Gujrati has used the expression "Dharmao Kam" both in the Sindhi Will and in the Gujrathi codicil, and it may safely be considered that he intended to use the words in the Sindhi Will in the same sense as he used them in the subsequent Gujrati codicil, I hold that the bequests for "Dharmao Kam" in the Sindhi Will as also the Gujrati codicil are void for uncertainty.

Issues Nos. 1 and 2. It is now admitted that the Will and the codicil have been duly executed and that they were held proved in Suit No. 96 of 1913. It is, however, contended that the codicil is not valid as it purports to vary the terms of the Will which is a registered document. Reliance has been placed on Durga Prasad Singh v. Rajendranath Bagchi (22). There is no substance in this objection. The law does not require the compulsory registration of a Will by a Hindu. There is, therefore, no bar to its terms being varied by an unregistered document. I hold on issue No. 1 that the codicil was duly executed and on issue No. 2 that it is valid.

SHAMBAI v. GOVERDHAN

Issue No. 3. This issue has been given up.

Issue No. 4. The original Will has now been traced and is Ex. No. 9. There is now no dispute as to its terms. I hold on this issue in the affirmative.

Issue No. 6. Suit No. 119 of 1916 was filed by the trustee defendant No. 3 against defendants Nos. 1 (a) to (c) for recovery of rent. The plaintiffs were not even parties to that suit.

Though all the parties to the present suit were parties to suit No. 96 of 1913, the point at issue in that suit was the right of Visram to bequeath his property by a Will. It was contended that he was joint with his brother at the time of his death and that the property was joint family property. The Court held against the plaintiffs. The question whether any particular bequest contained in the Will or in the codicil was not put in issue either expressly or impliedly in either of the two suits. It cannot, therefore, operate as res judicata.

It is admitted that suit No. 374 of 1916 referred to in this issue has no bearing to the present case.

I, therefore, hold on this issue in the negative.

Issue No. 7. In his opening address the learned pleader for defendants Nos 1 (a) to (c) faintly urged that as the plaintiffs did not dispute the validity of the alleged charitable bequests, prior to the compromise in suit No. 119 of 1916 the defendants were induced to enter into the compromise. He, however, did not lead evidence on this point or press the issue. Plaintiff No. 1 was a minor at the time and, so far as she is concerned, she cannot be said to have stood by and thereby prejudiced the defendants by her silence. There is no substance in this issue. I hold on this issue in the negative.

Issue No. 8. This issue has been given up.

Issues Nos. 9 and 10. It is urged that the suit as framed for a declaration that the bequests are void, and for an injunction against the trustee restraining him from spending money for Dharmaoo objects is incompetent, and that the plaintiffs must sue for possession of the property also. There is no force in this contention. As pointed out by Mukerji, J., in Ramkamal v. Syam Sun- dar (23), section 42 of the Specific Relief Act forbids a suit for a pure declaration without further relief but it does not compel a plaintiff to sue for all the reliefs which could possibly be granted, or debar him from obtaining a relief which he wants, unless at the same time he asks for a relief which he does not want.

The property is in the possession of the trustee who holds it for the true owner. If the trust fails, the property, which is the subject of the trust, is undisposed of and, as said by Master of the Rolls in the Bishop of Durham's case (7): "The benefit of such trust must result to them to whom the law gives the ownership in default of disposition of the former owner." The plaintiffs are the heirs of the deceased Visram being his only daughters. The trustee is prepared to hand over the property to the plaintiffs if it be held that the bequest for "Dharmaoo Kam" is void. Under the Will and the bequest the plaintiffs have been given certain limited interest in the rents of the property in question, and are said to be in joint possession of the property. The estate has not yet been administered (Jethalal, Ex. 5, line 12). The trustee could himself have applied for the construction of the clause in question. He having failed to do so, it was open to the plaintiffs, who are the persons affected by the clause, to ask for the necessary declaration or for construction of the relative clause in the Will.

So long as the estate is in the hands of the executor and the administration of the estate has not been completed, a party affected by the Will has a recurring right to move the Court for the construction of the Will.

The plaintiffs have a right to ask for a declaration that the bequest to Dharmaoo purposes is void. They are content with this declaration and the injunction which they have claimed.

It is not necessary for the plaintiffs to sue for possession of the property. I hold that the suit can lie as framed and is properly stamped.

Issue No. 11. It appears that the point whether the Advocate-General is a necessary party or a proper party to a suit of this nature has not been decided in any reported Indian decisions. He was made (23) 75 Ind. Cas. 41; 37 C. L. J. 482.

SHAMBHAI v. GOVERDHAN

a party in Cursondas Govindji v. Vundhra Vandas (24), which went up to the Privy Council, the Privy Council decision being reported in Runchoredas v. Parvatibai (6). He has also been made a party in two or three other reported cases, the last case cited at the bar being the case of Santanor Roy v. The Advocate-General of Bengal (25).

In the majority of the Indian decisions cited at the bar the Advocate-General has not been made a party. In India the Advocate-General corresponds to the Attorney-General in England, cf. Advocate-General of Bombay v. Adamji (26). Like the Attorney-General in England, the Advocate-General, is the protector of all the persons interested in a charity fund. As such, he is no doubt a proper party to a suit of this nature, and where he applies to be made a party, the Court would join him as such, and provide for his costs out of the estate. It does not, however, follow that he is a necessary party to such a suit or that the suit must fail unless he is made a party to the suit. The trustee represents the estate and it is his primary duty to represent the case of charity before the Court. The next of kin who are interested in the wishes of the testator being carried out, are also parties to the action and the learned pleaders appearing for them have very ably placed the case of charity before the Court.

The only authority which I am able to find on the point at issue is a passage in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 4, paragraph 672, where it is said that the Attorney-General is "similarly a necessary party when the question is whether a particular bequest is charitable" and the reference relied on in support is Cook v. Duckenfield (27). The ruling not being available in the Birdwood Law Library the learned pleaders for the plaintiffs have supplied me with a transcript of the ruling which does not, however, show that the Attorney-General was held to be a necessary party to the proceedings, though he was a party to the proceedings. In several subsequent reported English rulings the Attorney-General does not appear to have been made a party. Any decision to which he is not a party will not bind him, and it is open to him to have the question reagitated again either in a suit instituted by him or in a suit filed by any two members of the public interested in the alleged charity, under his sanction. I am of opinion that though he is a proper party, he is not a necessary party to such an action. The Court would, in the exercise of its discretion, no doubt join him as a party in proper cases. I am further of opinion that the present case is, however, not a fit case for exercising that discretion and ordering that the Advocate-General be joined as a proper party.

The question now at issue was litigated in the Bombay High Court seventy years ago, and the decision then given has been consistently followed in the Bombay Presidency. It has been accepted by their Lordships of the Privy Council and adopted by other High Courts, in Fakiro Ramji v. Valabdas (21), of this Court which was instituted with the sanction of the Collector of Karachi in the exercise of his delegated powers as Advocate-General, the same view has been adopted by Aston, A. J. C.

Issue No. 12. I hold on this issue in the negative.

I hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to a declaration that the bequests for Dharmaoo objects are void and an injunction restraining the trustee from spending any money for such objects.

It is usual to award costs out of the estate of the testator where the litigation owes its origin to the fault of the testator by reason of the testamentary directions being vague or uncertain in Law or fact: Charter v. Charter (28), Srinibada Das v. Manmohini Dasi (29), Aghore Nath Mukerji v. Kamini Dasi (30). Suit No. 82 of 1914 Dinbai v. Nusserwanjee (31). I order that the costs of all the parties as taxed by the Clerk of the Court do come out of the estate.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 31st January 1921.

Messrs. A. P. Sen, G. N. Misra, Niamat Ullah, Ali Zaheer, and Har Gobind Dayal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants were the plaintiffs in the Court below. Their suit for the recovery of possession of certain properties, moveable and immovable, has been dismissed by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad by his decree, dated the 31st January 1921. Mt. Rachhpali, plaintiff No. 1, claims a half share in the properties in suit on the ground that that share in the property belonged to her husband, Anand Bahadur, who died on the 24th June 1911 and on his death it devolved upon her by right of inheritance. The chief defence to this suit was, that Anand Bahadur was a member of a joint family at the time of his death and the properties in their entirety devolved by right of survivorship on Rameshar Prasad, nephew of Anand Bahadur. Mt. Chandesardei, defendant No. 1, is the mother of Rameshar Prasad and is the chief defendant to the suit. The other defendants are transferees. Rameshar Prasad died on the 24th December 1911. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that Anand Bahadur was not a separated member of the family and that, on the other hand, he died in a state of jointness and, consequently, Rameshar Prasad succeeded to the properties in suit by right of survivorship.

The main question in the appeal is, was Anand Bahadur a separated member of the family at the time of his death? Our conclusion is that he was. On this part of the case there are hardly any facts in controversy. The chief question argued at the hearing of the appeal is one of the legal inference to be drawn from those facts. On the 3rd April 1911 Anand Bahadur instituted a suit for partition of the joint family properties against his minor nephew Rameshar Prasad. Rameshar Prasad's mother, Mt. Chandessardei, was his guardian appointed by the District Judge of Fyzabad in 1903 (Ex. A-64). She was consequently the guardian of her minor son in the suit brought by Anand Bahadur. In paragraph 6 of his plaint, Anand Bahadur stated: "that he asked the defendant and his mother, Mt. Chandessardei, several times to partition the share of the plaintiff but to no effect." In paragraph 8 he said that in the properties mentioned in the lists attached to the plaint he had a moiety of share and the other half belonged to the defendant. In paragraph 9 he said that the parties were equally liable for the debts due from the joint family given in list A. The relief for which he prayed was, "that a decree for recovery of the half share of the joint property in list A attached to the plaint be passed in his favour." Several dates for the hearing of this suit seem to have been fixed. Anand Bahadur, however, died before any written statement was filed on behalf of Rameshar Prasad. Anand Bahadur also executed a Will on the 11th May 1911. In this Will he stated that all the moveable and immovable property in his and in his nephew's possession belonged to them in equal shares. He further stated that he had asked his nephew and his mother to make a partition and that he had filed a suit against Rameshar Prasad for the partition of his share. He also stated as an accomplished fact that he had separated from Rameshar Prasad after the filing of the suit. By this Will he makes a gift of his entire share in these properties to his wife Mt. Rachhpali, the plaintiff of the present suit, and he also authorises her to prosecute her suit for partition and to obtain a decree therein (Ex. 1). Mt. Rachhpali applied to be made a plaintiff in that suit in place of her deceased husband. Her application was rejected finally by this Court on the ground that there had been no partition at the date of the suit and that, consequently, there was nothing which could devolve upon her on the death of her husband. On these facts it is difficult for us to understand how the learned Additional Subordinate Judge could have come to the conclusion that Anand Bahadur died in a state of jointness. His view seems to be that there could be no separation in status unless the intention to separate is also intimated to the other co-parceners. He holds that the notice of the plaint of Anand Bahadur is not proved to have reached Rameshar Prasad or his guardian, Mt. Chandesardei. We are clearly of opinion that, for the severance of interest, notice to other co-parceners of the intention to separate unequivocally expressed is not a condition precedent. It is true, that in most of the cases decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council, other coparceners had notice as a matter of fact, but the authorities clearly lay down that the separation is an act of individual volition and does not depend for its effect on the consent or agreement of the other co-parceners. Recent decisions of the Privy Council on the point under consideration are Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundhiraj (1), Kawal Nain v. Parbhu Lal (2), Ramalinga

Annabi v. Narayana Annabi (3), and Syed Kasam v. Jorawar Singh (4). The decision in the case of Kawal Nain v. Parbhu Lal (2), seems to us to support the view which we are taking in this case in its entirety. In that case the date of the institution of the plaint was regarded as the date of separation. In Mayne's Hindu Law, 9th edition, at page 688, we find it clearly stated that a separation may take place even in the absence of other co-parceners.

The question of absence of notice does not seem to have been raised by the defendant No. 1 in her pleadings. On the contrary, paragraph 27 of her written statement clearly implies that the notice was as a matter of fact received. No issue was framed on the point. At the hearing of the arguments in the Court below, it appears to have been urged on behalf of the defendant No. 1, that the notice of the institution of the suit was not served either on Rameshar Prasad or on his guardian. The plaintiffs, therefore, applied on the 14th January 1921 that they were in possession of certified copies showing the service of the notice on the guardian of Rameshar Prasad and asked that the copies be received in evidence. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge, for reasons wholly insufficient, refused to accept them in evidence. In the circumstances stated above, we think that he ought to have received them. We are now asked in appeal to admit them in evidence. We are of opinion that they should be admitted in evidence and we accordingly do so. In support of our action we rely on a recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Indrajit Pratap Sahi v. Amar Singh (5). This evidence conclusively establishes that a copy of the plaint of Anand Bahadur was served on Rameshar Prasad's guardian and mother, Mt. Chandesardei, on the 9th April 1911. We are, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiff No. 1 is entitled to the decree for which she has brought the present suit.

There is a good deal of controversy with regard to the items of properties stated in the lists attached to the plaint as to whether they are joint family properties and liable to be partitioned or not. There are three lists A., B., and C., attached to the plaint in respect of which the relief for possession and partition was sought. These lists have been incorporated in the decree under appeal. The claim in respect of list C has been expressly abandoned by the learned Counsel for the appellants before us. In list B there are six items. Items 1, 2, 4, and 5 have also been abandoned. As regards item 3 no proof has been advanced to support the title for possession or partition of that property. The suit, therefore, fails with regard to that item also. As regards item 6 the learned Additional Subordinate Judge has found that the decree to which it relates was joint family property. The respondents have not contested this finding. This disposes of list B.

In list A there are 62 items in all. Items 15, 26, 28, 30, 31, 47, 61, and 38 pieces in item 62 have been abandoned. The suit with regard to them, therefore, must fail. In the same list the following items have either been admitted to be joint family property liable to be partitioned or found to be so by the lower Court and the finding has been accepted by both sides before us:—1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, 19, 21, 24, 25, 34, 35, 37, 40, 42, 43, 44, 46, 48, 55, 56, 58 and 59. The controversy, therefore, relates to the following items in that list:—6, 7, 18, 20, 22, 23, 27, 29, 32, 33, 36, 38, 39, 41, 45, 49 to 54, 57 and 60.

Item 6 consists of four parts, the last three of which have been both found and admitted before us as properties liable to be partitioned. The dispute, therefore, relates only to the first part of it, that is, No. 807. Item 18 also consists of three parts the last of which, that is, No. 967, only is in dispute. The other two portions admittedly fall within the plaintiffs' claim. Item 36 is in dispute in its entirety. The case of the respondents with regard to the disputed portion of items 6 and 18 and in respect of the whole item 36 is that these plots originally belonged to Nazul, that is, the Crown, and were transferred under leases to persons for building purposes and one of the conditions of the lease was that on their becoming vacant they would revert to the Crown, that they did become vacant, reverted to the Crown and the Crown gave them to the respondent No. 1 under the lease, dated the 13th March 1918 (Exhibit A 1)). Neither the previous leases nor the condition that on the happening of a certain contingency it would revert to the grantor, for the fact that the contingency did happen, have been proved. On the other hand, these properties were admitted in the pleadings to be joint family property. We do not think that the respondents should be allowed to go behind the admission nor have any facts been proved which would induce us to allow them to do so. With regard to these items, therefore, we hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree.

Items 7, 20 and 22. The respondents' case with regard to these items is that they are endowed properties. Exhibits 33 and 34 show that these properties originally belonged to one Mt. Lakhpatdei, and that she appointed Lal Bahadur a trustee in respect of those properties for the purpose of carrying out the trust. It appears, however, that as amongst the members of the family these properties have always been treated as joint family property. In a previous litigation on a claim by Anand Bahadur and Rameshar Prasad against Mt. Raj Dulari for possession of the joint family properties these items were accepted as belonging to the joint family and a decree was passed in favour of Anand Bahadur and Rameshar Prasad in respect of these properties on that footing (Exhibits 5, 8, 13 and 14). Some of the respondents in the present suit, for instance, respondent No. 4, admitted in the pleadings that these items are joint family property. We are, therefore, of opinion that in the present suit they should be treated as joint family property and the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree in respect of them.

Items 23, 32 and 33. These items originally belonged to one Mt. Tota Dei. She transferred them to Ram Bahadur by a deed of gift for consideration. The consideration stated in the deed (Exhibit 48) is the sum of Rs. 900 and services rendered. The learned

Additional Subordinate Judge is of opinion that the property so acquired is the self-acquired property of the donee in so far as the consideration consisted of the services rendered by him. But, inasmuch as the consideration of Rs. 900 was concerned, there was no evidence that the amount paid was the separate property of Ram Bahadur. In result he has held that the plaintiffs are entitled to a moiety share in the sum of Rs. 900 but not in the house which was the subject-matter of the gift. We cannot agree with him. "Services rendered" was merely an expression of euphemism for the motive of the gift and not the real consideration of the transfer. We are of opinion that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree in these items also.

Item 27. With regard to this item the learned Additional Subordinate Judge thinks that the description of it given in the plaint is too vague and the plaintiffs cannot be given a decree in respect of this property with reference to that description but he is prepared to give a decree to the plaintiffs if the decree in respect of the houses covered by this item describes it by Nos. 834 to 837. Both sides are agreed before us that the plaintiffs may be allowed a decree in respect of that item by describing it as consisting of the houses denoted by Nos. 834 to 837. We, therefore, order accordingly.

Item 29. This property originally belonged to Mt. Lakhpat Dei. On the 24th June 1884 she made a gift of it to her son-in-law Ram Bahadur, the deceased husband of the defendant No. 1. This is proved by Exhibit A-83. In 1904 Lal Bahadur, brother of Ram Bahadur, brought a claim in the Court of Assistant Settlement Officer of Fyzabad against the Government for the settlement of certain properties with him. In the list of the properties with respect to which this claim was brought he included the item now under consideration describing it as the property which was gifted by Mt. Lakhpat Dei to Ram Bahadur as a dowry to her daughter, the wife of Ram Bahadur, and that since then he has been in possession of it. Lal Bahadur's statement that he has been in possession of this property the title to which he himself admitted to have vested in his brother, Ram Bahadur, cannot make it joint family property. We are, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiffs' suit fails in respect of this item.

Items 38, 49 and 50. In these items the only interest held by the joint family is that of a mortgagee. To that extent the learned Additional Subordinate Judge has granted a decree to the plaintiffs. The learned Advocate for the respondent No. 1 has argued before us that his client is also the representative of the mortgagor. He is, therefore, anxious that her proprietary rights in these items may be safeguarded in the decree. This can be easily done by indicating in the decree that the plaintiffs are entitled to a half share in mortgagee's rights only.

Item 39. This item consists of 5 pieces Nos. 52 to 56. The claim is admitted in respect of three of them. The dispute relates to two only. The admitted portions are shown in list A of the written statement of the defendant as three chaukis at Gaughat. The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to a decree in these three chaukis only and their claim with respect to the other two must be dismissed.

Item No. 41. As regards this item we are of opinion that the plaintiffs' right is established by Exhibit 52 and that they should get a decree with respect to it.

Items 45 and 51. These items are covered by the gift (Ex. 48) which relates also to items 23, 32 and 33 already disposed of. On the grounds stated before, we are of opinion that the plaintiffs are entitled to a half share in these items also.

Items 52, 53, 54 and 60. The plaintiffs' claim in respect of these items rests on Exhibit 52. A reference to the entries in that Exhibit in relation to these items will show that only one-half of them belonged to the ancestor of the parties and the other half was the property of a stranger. The learned Counsel for the appellants now admits that his right in these items must be limited to one-fourth only. We order accordingly.

Item 57. We think that the plaintiffs' case is established in respect of this item by Exhibit 52. They will, therefore, get a decree in respect of that property.

A general plea was taken in respect of all the items described in the lists attached to the plaint as chaukis to the effect that they were not property liable to be partitioned. The plea was elaborated in paragraph 29 of the written statement of defendant No. 1. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge has upheld that plea. Our opinion is to the contrary. These chaukis are well understood spots on the banks of the river where one or the other members of this family used to sit, receive his clients and help them in the observance of their religious ceremonies connected with the river such as bathing, offering flowers, etc. For these services remuneration is paid by the clients who chose to avail themselves of those services. Ordinarily, the spots are marked by placing a takht on them. We think that the gains made by the performance of services at these spots are property in law and a suit for a share in the business resulting in such gains is maintainable as a claim of a civil nature within the meaning of section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Our opinion is fortified by the decisions in Beni Madho Pragwal v. Ilira Lal (6), Ram Chander v. Chhabhu Lal (7) and Suraj Prasad v. Ganesh Ram (8). Finally, we may refer to a learned and exhaustive judgment of Mr. Justice Mookerjee in the case of Narayan Lal Gupta v. Chulhan Lal Gupta (9). The learned Additional Subordinate Judge has relied on Bhagwan Din v. Mani Ram (10), Baddu v. Babu Lal (11). The principle of those cases if wholly inapplicable to the present case.

The defendant No. 1 pleaded that, in case the plaintiffs be given a decree, they should be held liable proportionately for certain valid debts. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge has decided the plea in favour of the defendant. The finding is not disputed before us by the appellants. The matter is covered by issue No. 11 and the debts are mentioned in list F, attached to the written statement. The plaintiffs will, therefore, be liable to pay half the amount of these debts.

Separate argument was addressed to us on behalf of the respondents 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 10, 11, 12 and 13. The argument is that in case the plaintiffs' claim succeeds the properties transferred to these respondents should be allotted to the share of the respondent No. 1 in carrying out the partition of the joint family property and that this Court should embody in the preliminary decree a direction to that effect. It is only but fair that on a partition now being effected subsequent to the transfers the alienated properties should be debited to the share of the alienor but this can be done only so far as it is consistent with justice to all concerned. We, therefore, order that the decree shall contain a direction that in making the partition the properties held by the respondents mentioned above shall be allotted to the share of the transferor in all cases where it can be done without causing any prejudice or injustice to others.

As regards respondent No. 13, we may mention that, at a previous hearing of the appeal proceedings were taken ex parte against him. An application has now been made for permission to appear. We have heard the learned pleader for that respondent and have given our judgment in respect of his case already.

We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of the lower Court and decree the plaintiff's suit in respect of the properties admitted to be joint family property or held by us in this judgment to be such property. The rest of the claim will stand dismissed. The plaintiffs will get their costs in both the Courts in proportion to their success.

MAN SINGH v. KARAN SINGH

A Hindu son cannot object to an alienation validly made by his father before he was born or at least conceived. This principle, however, does not apply to the case of an invalid alienation as an after-born son has a right to a share in such property on account of the property being joint family property at the date of his birth, not having been validly transferred.

Where a Hindu father mortgages property of which he is sole owner, the transaction cannot be attacked by his sons on the ground that the mortgage-debt was incurred for immoral purposes. [p. 262, col. 2.]

Where a Hindu father improperly alienates family property any one of his sons can recover not only his share in, but the whole of the property, to be held for the benefit of the joint family. [p. 268, col. 2.]

Where the owner of a property transfers it to another for an illegal purpose and such purpose is not carried into execution, neither the vendor nor his heirs can succeed in a suit to eject the vendee in possession without proving that the purpose never got beyond the stage of intention. In such a case the burden of proof lies on the plaintiff and the maxim in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis applies. [p. 263, col. 2.]

Messrs. G. L. Subhedar and J. K. R. Cama, K. B. for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals are companion appeals and may be disposed of in one judgment. They raise a most important point of law, on which the rulings of the various High Courts appear at first sight to be conflicting. It is necessary to go into the facts and law in detail.

The facts are that one Nanhe, alias Lachman Singh, had two sons by his first wife, named Bhujbal and Hazari. They died in 1917 and 1919 respectively. By his second wife he had a son Karan Singh, who is the plaintiff, and a daughter who was married to Nanhe, son of Mohan Singh, defendant No. 1. Nanhe died in 1918 leaving two minor sons Kirat Singh and Raghunath Singh, who are defendants 2 and 3. On 29th September 1911 Nanhe, alias Lachhman Singh sold the property in dispute to Mohan Singh, defendant No. 1. This was admittedly before the plaintiff was born. Bhujbal and Hazari, the two sons of Nanhe by his first wife, did not join in the sale and there is no evidence as to their consent. Nanhe, alias Lachhman Singh, died on 9th November 1918. On 3rd September 1919 Mohan Singh, defendant No. 1, sold the property to Man Singh, defendant No. 4, the present appellant, who is the first cousin of the plaintiff, being the son of Behari who was Lachhman Singh's brother.

The plaintiff sues to set aside the alienation by Lachhman Singh to Mohan Singh on the ground that it was bogus and without consideration. The most important point in this case is one of law, viz., whether the plaintiff can sue to set aside an alienation made by his father before he was born or even conceived. The lower Courts have awarded the plaintiff's claim and held that the sale was bogus and without consideration and that he can sue to set aside the alienation, relying on the cases of Sobharam Teli v. Makdu (1) and Tulsi Ram v. Babu Lal (2). A large number of rulings have been quoted on both sides on the subject, some of which are apparently conflicting. It will be necessary to examine these rulings to see whether any consistent principle underlies them all. The basis of the law on the subject will be found in Mayne's Hindu Law, 9th edition, page 468, section 342, where it is stated: "Dispositions of property by a father can, of course, only be objected to by those who have a joint interest with him in the property, either by joint acquisition, or by birth. Where the objection is based on the latter ground, it is necessary to show that such an interest vested in the objector at his birth, or by his birth. Therefore, a son cannot object to alienations validly made by his father before he was born or begotten, because he could only by birth obtain an interest in property which was then existing in his ancestor.... On the other hand, if the alienation was made by a father without necessity, and without the consent of sons then living, it would not only be invalid against them, but also against any son born before they had ratified the transaction; and no consent given by them after his birth would render it binding upon him: Tulsi Ram v. Babu Lal (2), and Hurdool Narain Singh v. Beer Narain Singh. (3). The reason of the thing is not of course that the unborn son has any right in the family property at the time of the alienation, but that on his birth he acquired a share in the family property as it then stands. If a previous alienation of any portion of the family property was validated by consent or failure to set it aside in time on the part of the other members of the family then in existence, the property in which he acquires a share at birth is diminished to the extent of the portion thus alienated. If the alienation was invalid, he acquires a share in the whole property including the portion purported to be alienated—not because the alienation was an invasion of his rights, for he had none, but because it was bad in itself and did not diminish the corpus of the joint family property: cf. Lachmi Narain Prasad v. Kishan Kishore Chand (4).

It will thus appear that the basis of the law on the subject is the validity of the alienation, because if the alienation was invalid, it does not affect the family property and the son subsequently born is entitled to that property undiminished. If this theory be applied to the cases which have been quoted by the learned Counsel for the appellant, it will be found that the underlying principle of all decisions is the same. This principle has been recognised by this Court in the case quoted above. Sobharam Teli v. Makdu (1) in which it is stated that a son cannot object to an alienation validly made by his father before he was born or, at all events, before he was in gremio matris (Sabapati v. Soma Sundaram). (5) Sobharam Teli v. Makdu (1). But in Sobharam Teli v. Makdu (1) the alienation was not a valid alienation. It was not shown to have been assented to by the sons then in existence, and, therefore, as laid down in the case of Hurodool Narain Singh v. Beer Narain Singh (3), the rights of the after-born sons attached. Moreover, it was held that it was clear upon the authorities that any one son, whose claim is not barred by time, could recover the whole of the property to be held for the benefit of the joint family.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has relied on Narayan Das v. Hardiyal (6) in which it was held that an after-born son can not in a suit on a mortgage made by his father set up the defence of the immoral nature of the debt on account of which the mortgage was executed; but in that case, at the time when the mortgage was made, the father was the sole owner, and it is now settled law that the defence that the debt was incurred for immoral purposes cannot be set up where the mortgage was made whilst the mortgagor was the sole owner. This case is, therefore, not inconsistent with the principle already laid down that the test is the validity of the transaction sought to be impeached.

The same principle has been laid down in a recent case by the Patna High Court in Bishwanath Prasad Sahu v. Ganjadhhar Prasad (7) which is a case on a mortgage, where it was held that as the mortgage-bond was executed prior to the birth of both the appellants, the interest of the appellants' father, the mortgagor, was completely transferred to the mortgagee subject to the right of redemption in the mortgagor. The appellants obtained a vested interest in the equity of redemption only, which was left in their father at the time of their birth. It also appears from the head-note that the property had been inherited by the appellants' father from their mother's father and it was held that the sons of a Hindu do not by their birth acquire any interest in the property. Again in Bholanath Khettry v. Kartick Kissen Das Khettry (8) it was held that under the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law a member of a joint family can contest the validity of the alienation by his father or grandfather only of such an interest in the ancestral property as existed at his birth and vested in him by his birth. Where there is a complete transfer of property by mortgage by the father or grandfather prior to the birth of such member, the only interest that may vest on birth is the equity of redemption. In Soundararajan v. Saravana (9) a suit by a subsequently born son to set aside the sale by his father before his birth of the whole family property was dismissed; it was held that the entire family property having been sold, there was no property left in which the plaintiff could take an interest by his birth. In Sardar Singh v. Ajit Singh (10) it was held that the plaintiff having come into existence after the sale of the ancestral estate took by his birth no interest therein and could not bring a suit against the purchaser from his grand-father; but the same case lays down that a son takes an interest in ancestral property by birth and, therefore, if there is no ancestral property when he is born, there is nothing in which he can take an interest. The principle, therefore, underlying all these decisions is that if the alienation is valid, the subsequently born son cannot sue to set it aside, but if the alienation is invalid the subsequently born son can sue not because the alienation was an invasion of his rights for he had none, but because it was bad in itself and did not diminish the corpus of the joint family property. This has been laid down in the case quoted above and followed in Sobharam Teli v. Makdu (1) and in Bunwarilal v. Daya Sunler (11) where it was held that an alienation, if invalid, because made without the consent of all the co-parceners then in existence, can be set aside even at the instance of another co-parcener who was born subsequent to the alienation.

The only remaining case to which I need refer is Lachmi Narain Prasad v. Kishan Kishore Chand (4), which has been relied on by the learned Counsel for the appellant, but which lays down the same principle, namely, that the only person who could contest the alienation did not do so and his right became extinct in 1898. The property ceased to be the property of the joint family and passed absolutely to the purchasers. The minor plaintiffs who were born subsequently did not acquire any interest in the property, as it had, at the date of their birth, ceased to be joint ancestral property in which they might have acquired a right by birth.

The first question, therefore, on which the decisions of these appeals will depend is whether at the date of the plaintiff's birth the property in suit had ceased to be joint ancestral property in which he acquired a share by his birth. If the alienation was valid and the property had passed, he acquired no share in it, but if the alienation was invalid the plaintiff can contest it as he has a right to a share in it as it constituted the joint family property at the date of his birth. It has been found by both the Courts below that, as a matter of fact the interest in the property never passed to the purchaser. This is a finding of fact with which this Court cannot interfere in second appeal.

It is contended that, assuming the sale to be to defraud creditors the plaintiff has only a right to his own share and cannot impugn the transaction as a whole. It appears that the plaintiff is now the sole survivor, and it was held in Sobharam Teli v. Makdu (1), quoted above, that any one son whose claim is not barred by time could recover the whole of the property to be held for the benefit of the joint family. It has also been contended on behalf of the appellant that if the transaction was intended to defeat the creditors, the heirs cannot succeed in a suit to eject the vendee in possession without proving that the purpose never got beyond the stage of intention. He relied on Ragho Atmaram v. Purshotam (12) in which it was held that, where the owner of property transfers it to another for an illegal purpose and such purpose is not carried into execution neither the vendor nor his heirs can succeed in a suit to eject the vendee in possession without proving that the purpose never got beyond the stage of intention. In such a case section 84 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, throws the burden of proof upon the plaintiff and the maxim in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis applies. It is pointed out that the general rule is, that the Court will not actually interpose in favour of a man, who is particeps criminis in a fraudulent transaction and no reason is apparent why the plaintiff should be regarded as in a better position than the vendor whose heir he is. This was approved in Maniram v. Ganesh (13), where, at page 150, a quotation from Mr. Justice Story's commentaries on Equity Jurisprudence (p. 191, 2nd English edition) is reproduced:—

"In general, where parties are concerned in illegal agreements or other transactions, whether they are mala prohibita or mala in se Courts of Equity following the rule of law as to participators in a common crime, will not interpose to grant any relief."

MAN SINGH v. KARAN SINGH

It is replied on behalf of the respondents that the plaintiff's case is not based on the fact that the plaintiff's father intended to defraud his creditors, but on the bogus character of the sale, there being no transfer and no intention to transfer.

It is difficult to see what object the plaintiff's father could have had in executing a sale-deed of his property if he had no intention to transfer it, unless he wanted to defraud his creditors.

The plaint is quite clear on the point, paragraph 2 says: "Nanhe Singh, alias Lachhman Singh, was heavily involved in debt. To save the patti he executed a sale-deed in respect thereof." In paragraph 6 (a) the plaint says: "This sale-deed was executed as a safeguard." The defendants denied that there was any intention to defeat the creditors. The first issue framed by the first Court was, "Whether the sale-deed of 29th September 1911 was executed bogus and with a view to save the property from the hands of creditors as alleged by plaintiff? The finding is in the affirmative, but, as a matter of fact, the point of law now raised was not raised before the Courts below at all. It appears to me that the debts of the plaintiff's father were not such as could not be paid by him. It also appears from the evidence that, subsequently to the transfer, the plaintiff's father's share was actually attached and sold by creditors in spite of the transfer whereupon the plaintiff's father paid up the decretal amount: see the evidence of Munnalal (P. W. 2), Gulzarilal (P. W. 8), and Munnalal (P. W. 9). It would appear, therefore, that the alleged intention of defrauding the creditors was never carried into effect.

The defendants emphatically denied that the sale in question was intended to save the property from creditors. It was not their case that the claim was barred by reason of the transfer being made for an illegal purpose. It is denied that Nanhe, alias Lachhman Singh, had any debts, and, as I have said, the evidence shows that the creditors were not defeated by the transaction. They attached the share and afterwards the plaintiff's father paid up his debts. The illegal purpose, therefore, never got beyond the stage of intention, and the plaintiff's case does not fail on this ground.

There is, however, another aspect of the case. The defendant No. 4 claims to be a bona fide purchaser for value. The point does not seem to have been considered by the Courts below. The first Court framed issue No. 5 as follows: "Whether the sale to defendant No. 4 is nominal and intended to defeat plaintiff's right or whether defendant No. 4 is a bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration?"

The first Court framed issue No. 5 in an alternative form and found on it in the affirmative, without stating to which of the alternatives the finding applies. There is no discussion on the point and the finding is meaningless. The lower Appellate Court states in paragraph 7 of its judgment: "A few months later respondent No. 4, Mohan Singh, sold the patti to appellant Man Singh. Although there is proof that the sale was executed and that consideration passed, I believe that the sale was collusive and bogus and the consideration was returned." The lower Appellate Court has not referred to any evidence in support of this view and there does not seem to be any on record. The case must, therefore, go back to the lower Appellate Court for decision on the issue whether the defendant No. 4 is a bona fide purchaser for value without notice and, if so, what is his legal position.

Costs to be costs in the case.

The other appeal depends on the result of this appeal. It arises out of a suit brought by the appellant against the respondent for rent based on the sale-deed. It will abide the final disposal of this appeal. Findings to be returned by the 15th October 1923.

PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS*' Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 28—Place of registration—Property fictitious, included for purposes of registration—Registration, validity of—Fraud.*

Section 28 of the Registration Act lays down that to give a Sub-Registrar jurisdiction to register a deed, the property included in the deed or a part of it must be within the jurisdiction of that officer. No question of fraud by one party or the other enters into the language of the section. Where it is found that, as a matter of fact, no part of the property included in a mortgage-deed was situate within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar who registered the deed, the registration is void irrespective of the fact whether the mortgagee was or was not aware of the fact. [p. 266, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Allahabad, dated the 8th February 1922.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellants.

Nemo., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts which have given rise to this appeal are these. Two persons Someshwar and Drigbijai executed the mortgage on which the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, was brought. The deed was executed on the 4th of June 1907. Someshwar is dead and the mortgagee, Kandhai Lal, is also dead. Kandhai Lal's sons sued Someshwar's sons and Drigbijai for recovery of money on foot of the bond. The defences taken, inter alia, were that the deed had not been properly attested and that it was not properly registered. The lower Appellate Court found that the deed had been properly attested and as to the registration it found that the properties mortgaged included a house in village Ghauspur Khathola, Pargana Chail, which never in fact existed. It is common ground that it was owing to the inclusion of this house in the mortgage-deed that the Sub-Registrar of Chail alias Allahabad had the jurisdiction to register it. The learned District Judge also found, or purported to find, that the mortgagee was no party to the fraud committed on the Law of Registration and that it was the mortgagors who were solely to blame in the matter.

In this Court it has been urged that the deed was not properly attested, that the property which was found to be fictitious was never intended to be security for the money and, that it must be inferred, therefore, that it was included simply for the sake of registration. Further, it is urged that, whatever the intention of the mortgagee may have been, the law has been infringed and the registration cannot be held to be good. One more point was taken in the grounds of appeal, namely, ground No. 5. But it has not been pressed.

As to the attestation, it is clear that the learned District Judge believed the marginal witness who swore that the executants signed the deed before him. The finding, therefore, of the Court below must be upheld.

On the question of registration, it appears to me that it is difficult to hold with the Court below that the mortgagee was an entirely innocent person in the matter. It being an admitted fact that the property did not exist, it follows that the mortgagee never had a look at the property in order to ascertain whether it should form an adequate security, or it should form with the other properties mortgaged an adequate security, for the money he was going to advance. So far, therefore, as he himself was concerned he was indifferent as to the value or nature of the property. In this state of things, the only legitimate inference to be drawn is that the property was included for the purposes of registration and not for the purposes of security. It has been urged by the learned Counsel for the respondents that this is really going against the finding of fact by the lower Appellate Court. But the so-called finding of the learned District Judge is really an inference to be drawn from the proved facts. There is no direct evidence referred to by the Court below that the mortgagee acted on a particular representation and what that representation was. The defendant Drigbijai Singh gave evidence to the effect that the mortgagee had requested that the property should be included in the mortgage, but that evidence was disbelieved by both the Courts below. The discarding of that evidence does not give the result that it was proved by any positive evidence that the mortgagee was unaware of the fact that the property did not exist. As I have said, he was perfectly indifferent as to whether the property existed or not. If that was the case, the only object with which the property could have been included was the obtaining of registration in the office of Sub-Registrar of Allahabad. It may be (but there is no evidence to prove it) that the mortgagor said that they had a property within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar of Allahabad and if that was included the registration could be effected at Allahabad and, further, it may be the case that, the mortgagee accepted those words and agreed that for the purposes of registration that property might be included. This is the utmost view that may be surmised in favour of the mortgagee. But the question is, does it absolve him from his responsibility in the matter?

It is conceded that if the mortgagee was aware of the fact that the property alleged to be in Chail did not exist, the registration would be void. Now, assuming that the mortgagee believed that the property really existed but he allowed it to be included with the other property in the deed, in order that the Sub-Registrar of Allahabad might have jurisdiction, the question would be whether the registration is valid. In my opinion the law on the point is very clearly stated in section 28 of the Registration Act and it simply says that to give the Sub-Registrar jurisdiction the property included in the deed or a part of it must be situated within the jurisdiction of that officer. No question of fraud by one party or the other enters into the language of the law. The question of fraud may be pleaded only to stop a party from raising a plea, but the jurisdiction of a registering officer cannot come into play simply because one of the parties to a transaction has been guilty of fraud. There was no property within the jurisdiction of the Sub Registrar of Allahabad and in my opinion it follows as clearly as possible that he had no jurisdiction to register the deed. There is no case law which deals directly with the point. In every case that has been brought to my notice, the inference was that the mortgagee was more or less culpable. Such an inference is really irresistible and the case which I am asked to suppose is practically impossible to accept. I am, however, of opinion that assuming even that the mortgagee was absolutely innocent in the matter that fact would not give the Sub-Registrar of Allahabad jurisdiction to register the deed. The result must follow, namely, that the deed is inoperative. It may be that the mortgagors have laid themselves open to prosecution or a suit for damages, but that is a different matter.

The result is that the appeal succeeds. I set aside the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the suit of the plaintiffs-respondents with costs throughout.

Hindu Law—Gift—Widow, power of, to make gift for spiritual benefit of herself.

A gift by a Hindu widow of a moderate portion of her deceased husband's estate can only be valid if it is expressly made for the spiritual welfare of the deceased. A gift, however pious or meritorious, cannot be enforced against the reversioners unless it is proved to be made with that object, and unless that purpose is deemed by the Hindu religion to be fulfilled by the character of the gift in question. [p. 269, col. 2.]

Case-law discussed.

A one-fourth share of an estate cannot be described as a "moderate" or "small" share of the estate within the meaning of the above rule. [p. 268, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 28th July 1919.

Mr. J. G. Sethi, for the Appellant.

MUNSHI LAL v. SHIV DEVI

JUDGMENT.

Fforde, J.—The main question for our consideration is whether a gift made by a Hindu widow to a charitable institution of a portion of her deceased husband's estate is valid as against the reversioners.

The gift, admittedly, amounts to a little more than one-fourth of the whole estate of the deceased and it is admittedly made for a charitable purpose.

The Court of first instance in a very clear and well-reasoned judgment held the gift to be invalid for two reasons. Firstly, because it was not made for the spiritual benefit of the deceased husband but for her own good, and, secondly, because it comprised too large a portion of the entire estate.

The first Appellate Court reversed this decision, holding that as the widow had done a virtuous act according to her personal notions, "there was nothing in the eye of the law to stand in her way provided it is ascertained that she has not behaved recklessly and has gifted a reasonable portion of her husband's estate."

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi for the appellant contends that a gift by a Hindu widow of a portion of her husband's estate is only valid in law if it is made:

- (1) for necessity;
- (2) for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the obsequial rites, etc., of the deceased;
- (3) it is given for recognised charitable purposes, for the spiritual benefit of the deceased, and then only if it comprises a small portion of his estate.

In the first two cases the entire estate may be alienated if only by so doing the necessary funds can be obtained.

Dr. Gopal Chand Narang for the respondents, on the other hand, advances the bold proposition that any gift by a widow for a pious purpose, recognized as such by Hindu Law, is valid even though admittedly made for the widow's own spiritual benefit alone. He argues that such a gift, having regard to the Hindu view of the relationship of husband and wife, must necessarily be for the husband's spiritual benefit. He agrees, however, that only a reasonable portion of the deceased's estate can be alienated for this purpose.

The power of a Hindu widow to alienate for necessity, whether the necessity be her own or to defray the obsequial expenses arising out of her husband's death, need not be considered here. It is true that the respondent pleaded necessity in her answer to the plaint but that plea is not relied upon.

The only questions we need consider are:—

- (1) Can the proportion of the estate alienated, viz., one-fourth of the whole, be held to be justifiable?
- (2) Was it alienated for the spiritual benefit of the deceased?
- (3) Is the alienation valid though made for the spiritual welfare of the alienor alone?

The first question, though it has arisen in the course of argument, has not been pressed upon us. In fact Counsel on both sides seem to have assumed that if the gift is valid in law in other respects, it cannot be deemed to be excessive in proportion to the estate. This view appears to me to be very doubtful. The Hindu authorities on the point are all agreed in holding that a gift of a moderate portion of the property only is valid. The difficulty lies in the practical application of this principle. How is a Court to decide what is a moderate portion? In the case of Ram Chunder Surmah v. Gunga Govind Bhunoojiah (1), referred to in the Tagore Law Lectures of 1899, at page 307, the Pandits gave it as their opinion that the widow has the power of alienating from one to three-sixteenths of her husband's property for the "benefit of his soul," but I can find no case in which as large a portion as 3/16ths has been held valid in this respect. It is true that in Churaman Sahu v. Gopi Sahu (2), cited with approval in Khub Lal Singh v. Ajodhya Misser (3), the Court held that between 1/6th and 1/3rd of an estate was a reasonable amount to expend on the occasion of a daughter's Crown ceremony but the principles upon which that case was decided can hardly be held to be exactly analogous to those under consideration here.

MUNSHI LAL v. SHIV DEVI

In Sardar Singh v. Kunj Behari Lal (4), which came before the Privy Council in June of last year, Mr. Ameer Ali, who delivered the judgment of the Board, says as follows:—

"In their Lordship's opinion the Hindu Law recognizes the validity of the dedication or alienation of a small fraction of the property by a Hindu female for the continuous benefit of the soul of the deceased owner. It is clear in this case that the act which the Rani did was fully in accordance with Hindu religious sentiment and religious belief, and was not, therefore, in excess of her powers, having regard to the fact that the dedication related to one-seventy-fifth of the property; and was made specially for the creation of a permanent benefit."

The Hindu authorities are all agreed that a gift of a "moderate portion," or a "small portion" may be valid when made for the husband's spiritual benefit, but the difficulty is to fix the limit at which the portion gifted ceases to be moderate or small. It must, of course, depend largely upon the facts of each particular case, but I very much doubt if any Court could reasonably hold that a gift amounting to 1/4th of an inheritance could be fairly regarded as "a small fraction of the property."

As we do not intend to decide the present case on the question of the validity of the amount of the alienation, I need not discuss this aspect of the case further. I have only dwelt on it to the extent I have done, so that it may not be said that this Court has acquiesced in the view that an alienation of 1/4th of an inheritance is valid so far as quantum is concerned.

The second question is largely one of fact. The Court of first instance has decided it in favour of the appellant, holding that the gift was not made for the spiritual benefit of the husband, who had, at the time of the alienation, been dead for nearly eleven years, but for the alienor's own good.

In my opinion this finding is wholly in accordance with the facts of this case.

(4) 69 Ind. Cas. 86; 44 A. 508, (1922) A. I. R. (P. C.) 261; 16 I. W. 71; 81 M. L. J. 258; 37 C. L. J. 338, 44 M. L. J. 766; 27 C. W. N. 683; 25 Bom. L. R. 648; 2 I. W. R. 1928.

The deed of gift itself nowhere suggests that its object is in any way referable to the spiritual benefit of the husband. It in fact rebuts such a suggestion. The donor declares that the property in question is owned and possessed by herself absolutely and she recites that the donees "have been declared absolute owners of the gifted property like myself."

In her answer to the plaint she makes the case that the alienations in question were for consideration and lawful necessity, and further pleads that the land in question and the houses are not ancestral but were in fact purchased by the father-in-law Gobind Ram. It must be conceded, however, that there were other alienations referred to in the plaint in addition to the one in question, and, moreover, a litigant in this country should not be too strictly bound by pleadings, but the fact remains that in her final defence the case now made, namely, that the alienation was for her husband's spiritual benefit, is nowhere even suggested.

In the defence to the amended plaint, it is true that she does suggest this plea, but in her statement in Court, made on the 25th June 1918, she definitely declares that her two sons, one of whom died at the age of 14 and the other at the age of 11 years, told her that the property should be given in charity and directed that it be given "in the name of the Granth Sahib."

In a further statement made on the 24th of August she appears to have re-considered her position and expressed her reasons as follows:—

"I am a Sikh woman. I believe in Granth Sahib. My husband gave me instructions to give the land and the site in charity. He was not a Sikh. This house, i. e., stable, is haunted. My sons used to say that I should get the land and the site entered in papers in the name of the Pujari of the Granth Sahib."

This is the first time she makes any suggestion that the gift is in any way referable to her husband, and I have no doubt that the improvement in her statement is due to the progressive legal enlightenment which she received in the course of the suit.

The lower Appellate Court's view that her present contention that the gift was intended to spiritually benefit her husband "can very well be inferred from the virtuous way in which she has made use of this portion of her husband's estate," is in my opinion inconsistent with the facts and unsound in law.

I am quite satisfied that, until the present suit was instituted, it had never even occurred to the widow to consider whether or not the gift might promote her dead husband's spiritual welfare.

It remains to be considered whether such a gift, which is admittedly for a pious and charitable purpose approved of by the Hindu religion, is valid merely for that reason. Dr. Narang in his able argument has relied strongly upon certain observations in the judgment in Khub Lal Singh v. Ajodhya Misser (2), which undoubtedly favours his contention that if a gift is of a recognized pious nature it must be deemed to accrue to the spiritual benefit of the departed husband. This view, however, has been expressly dissented from in a very recent case on the subject, Sham Devi v. Barbhaura Prasad (5). That case not only bears a close resemblance to the present one on the facts, but the very proposition advanced by Dr. Narang was discussed in the course of the judgment, where the learned Judges expressed themselves as follows:—

"We are not, however, in accord with the view pressed by the learned Counsel for Sham Dei that an act supposed to conduce to the spiritual benefit of the widow is necessarily an act supposed to conduce to the spiritual benefit of the husband. This proposition appears to have been looked at not with disfavour by the learned Judges who decided Khub Lal Singh v. Ajodhya Misser (3). We should not go so far as to say that they accepted it. Whatever be its application to persons governed by the Dayabhaga Law, it would not appear to be a doctrine applicable to persons governed by the Mitakshara Law. It is obvious that an act done by a widow supposed to conduce to the spiritual benefit of her husband would confer spiritual benefit on herself, but the converse does not appear to follow. An act done by the widow supposed to conduce to the spiritual benefit of herself would not confer spiritual benefit on her husband. In any circumstances we should have been precluded from accepting this view, in face of the decision in Puran Devi v. Jai Narain (6).

"The decision in Khub Lal Singh v. Ajodhya Misser (2) was recently discussed by a Bench of this Court in Kunj Behari Lal v. Latta Singh (7). That Bench derived similar assistance to the assistance which we have derived from the exposition of the law therein.

"The conclusion at which we arrive is this, that, unless it can be established that the alienation in question was for the performance of religious acts which were supposed (in this case intended) to be for the spiritual benefit of Bal Kishon, the alienation cannot operate to the prejudice of the reversioners, even if the portion of the property alienated be not excessive."

This judgment, which is in agreement with the views expressed in the Privy Council decision already referred to, finally disposes of the last argument of the respondent. I have no doubt that it must now be held to be the law that a gift by a Hindu widow of a moderate portion of her deceased husband's estate can only be valid if it is expressly made for the spiritual welfare of the deceased. A gift, however pious or meritorious, cannot be enforced against the reversioners unless it is proved to be made with that object and unless that purpose is deemed by the Hindu religion to be fulfilled by the character of the gift in question.

For these reasons, I think the appeal succeeds. The result is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored, the appellant to have his costs throughout.

Raoof, J.—I entirely agree. The judgment of my learned colleague is so full and exhaustive that I have very little to add to it. The rule enunciated in the judgment was clearly and authoritatively stated so far back as the year 1882 in the decision of a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Puran Devi v. Jai Narain (6), Mr. Justice Tyrell, who delivered the judgment, following the decision in the case of The Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavalry Venkata Narranupah (8) made the following observation at page 483 :—

BALLABHDAS v. SOBHA SINGH

"The point is now covered by authority that acts of alienation calculated to be of religious benefit and efficacy to the widow, or to any persons other than the deceased owner, will not justify an alienation of any part of the property in the hands of the widow. It has been justly pleaded in the second and third grounds of appeal that there is nothing on the record sufficient to show, nor other good reason for believing, that the gift of the house in suit, made some sixteen months after the death of Ram Kishen, without any reference to him or his funeral celebrations, and specifically declared to be 'Bishenpriti', or to the honour of Vishnu, was a gift made to benefit Ram Kishen in his after state, and was not, on the contrary, as indeed from the terms of the deed of gift in this case it plainly appears to be, an offering by the widow to a favoured idol for her own special credit and spiritual advantage."

Every word of this observation is peculiarly applicable to the facts of this case. Here, too, in the deed of gift no mention is made of the name of the husband, nor is it stated that the gift is made for his spiritual benefit. Similarly, the gift in this case was also made after a very long time, namely, 14 years after the death of the husband. Another significant fact is that, while the husband was an Arya Samajist, the gift had been made to Kukas. The rule laid down in the Allahabad case has been firmly established by the later decisions of the High Courts in this country as well as by the decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council to which my learned colleague has referred in his judgment. I accordingly concur in the order made by my learned colleague.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 89, Sch. III, Para 11—Collector—Satisfaction of decree—Termination of powers—Deposit of 5 per cent, not made—Auction-sale whether can be set aside—Auction-sale wrongly set aside by Collector—Private sale by judgment-debtor, validity of.

The powers of a Collector under Schedule III of the Civil Procedure Code terminates when the decree transferred to him for execution is satisfied and the incompetency under para. 11 of the Schedule to transfer the property ceases. [p. 272, col. 1.]

A failure to observe the provisions of O. XXI, r. 89, Civil Procedure Code, is not a mere irregularity and an auction-sale cannot be set aside when the full amount of 5 per cent. of the purchase-money has not been deposited. No allowance has been made by the law for any miscalculation, even though it is based on a wrong information supplied by the Court. [p. 272, col. 1.]

The proceedings for the execution of decrees by a Collector should be regarded, for the purposes of transfers of the property in his hands, as continuing till their final disposal on appeal. So long as such proceedings are liable to revision or appeal, it is open to the Collector to set aside the sale or to order the property to be sold or take such other action as he is empowered to do by the Third Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code. Mr. C. B. Parakh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises a rather difficult question of law, on which, so far as I am aware, no direct ruling exists. The facts are that the plaintiff Sobhasingh, defendant No. 5, Bhaironsingh and one Devisingh are brothers. The defendants Nos. 1-3 got a decree in suit No. 25 of 1918 for Rs. 3,310-9-6 against defendant No. 5, Bhaironsingh, and in execution of that decree they attached his 2-annas 8-pies share in the village of Parsona, Tahsil Khurai. The decree was sent for execution to the Collector, the actual execution proceedings being conducted by one of his Assistants. The property was put to sale and purchased by the decree-holders for Rs. 4,150 on 15th March 1919. Shortly afterwards, the plaintiff and his brother Devisingh borrowed Rs. 6,499 by mortgaging their share of the village to one Pannalal, out of which the plaintiff says he gave Rs. 3,500 to defendant No. 5 to save his share of the family property. The mortgage is dated 16th April 1919. On 17th April 1919 the defendant No. 5 deposited Rs. 3,344-6 0 in Court, being the amount of the decree and something extra for commission. This purports to be a payment under O. XXI, r. 89, Civil Procedure Code, but it does not include 5 per cent. payable to the auction-purchasers under that rule. On 22nd April 1919 the Sub-Divisional Officer held that the decree was fully satisfied and struck off the proceedings by Exhibit P-12. On 24th April 1919 the plaintiff took a sale-deed for Rs. 3,344 from Bhaironsingh of his 2-annas 8-pies share in the village. On 18th July 1919 on appeal by the decree-holders the Collector reopened the proceedings as the full amount due under O. XXI, r. 89, of the Civil Procedure Code, had not been realized, the judgment-debtor having failed to pay the 5 per cent. due to the auction-purchasers. An order was consequently made by the Collector for its payment.

Meanwhile, on 12th February 1919, the decree-holders, the present appellants, filed suit No. 7 of 1919 against all the three brothers—plaintiff, Bhaironsingh and Devisingh—and on 24th March 1919 they applied for attachment before judgment of certain money due under the decree. On 20th August 1919 a decree was passed against defendant No. 5 alone, the other two defendants being discharged. The decree-holders then attached the same patti as had been attached in the previous execution proceedings as belonging to Bhaironsingh. The plaintiff objected that he had purchased his brother's interest. His objection was disallowed and he, therefore, brought the present suit under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code, to establish his right to the property.

The first Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit, but on appeal the District Judge, Saugor, set aside the decree and awarded the plaintiff's claim, hence the present appeal by the decree-holders.

The principal point raised on behalf of the appellants is that the sale-deed of Bhaironsingh and his brother, the plaintiff, is void under paragraph 11 of Schedule III, Code of Civil Procedure, as it was made during the period in which the Collector alone was competent to deal with the property.

The point which arises in this case for decision is, whether the sale is void under Schedule III, paragraph 11, Civil Procedure Code, in view of the fact that the Sub-Divisional Officer had struck off the proceedings, holding that the decree was satisfied, although the provisions of O. XXI, r. 89, Civil Procedure Code, had not been complied with. In other words, the question is, whether on the date of this sale, which is 24th April 1919, the Collector was competent to perform any of the duties imposed on him by that Schedule with regard to the judgment-debtor's property. Paragraph 11 of Schedule III of the Code of Civil Procedure is as follows: "So long as the Collector can exercise or perform in respect of the judgment-debtor's immoveable property, or any part thereof, any of the powers or duties conferred or imposed on him by paragraphs 1 to 10, the judgment-debtor or his representative in interest shall be incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease or alienate such property or part except with the written permission of the Collector, * * * *". This rule is based on the doctrine of lis pendens and is on the same principle as section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act. It has been laid down that the powers of the Collector terminate when the decree is satisfied. In Khushalchand v. Nandram (1) it was held that sections 323-325 of the old Code, which correspond to schedule III of the present Code, presuppose a decree which has to be satisfied and which is, therefore, capable of execution. In Sonba v. Ganesha (2) it was held that the incompetency created by section 325-A exists only for the period during which the execution of the decree remains in the Collector's hands. The moment the decree is satisfied, in or out of Court, the Collector's power is at an end, and the incompetency to transfer created by section 325-A of the 1882 Code, which is now paragraph 11 of Schedule III of the new Code, ceases. The whole case, therefore, turns on the determination of the point whether, on the date of this sale the decree was satisfied.

Now, it is quite true that in this case there is an order of the Sub-Divisional Officer, to whom the decree had been transferred for execution by the Collector, to the following effect: " (Exhibit P-12). Judgment-debtor has deposited a sum of Rs. 3,301-1-6 on account of principal and Rs. 42-8-0 on account of commission within thirty days of the sale. The amount be transferred to the Civil Court concerned. The sale is set aside and the case be struck off as fully satisfied. The Court concerned and Treasury Officer be informed. Commission and the purchase-money be refunded. "

When, however, we come to examine the law on the point, as laid down in various decisions of the High Courts, it will appear that any failure to observe the provisions of Order XXI rule 89, Civil Procedure Code, is not a mere irregularity. It has been practically admitted in the present case that the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer referred to above is wrong. It was held by the Calcutta High Court in Chundi Charan Mandal v. Banke Behary Lal Mandal (3) that the provisions of law regarding the deposit of the 5 per cent. commission in addition to the amount specified in the proclamation of sale must be strictly complied with, and when the full amount of 5 per cent. on the purchase-money has not been deposited the sale should not be set aside. This has been followed in Sarjoo Prasad Missir v. Nannoo Rai (4), and it has to be observed that these cases make no allowance for any miscalculation even if the judgment-debtor is misinformed by the Court as to the amount which he has to pay. The law imposes the obligation upon the defendant himself to ascertain for himself, by whatever means he likes, the amount he has to pay into Court; hence it would appear that there has not been accomplishment in the present case with the provisions of O. XXI, r. 89 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the sale ought not to have been set aside. Hence I hold that the decree was not satisfied on the date of the sale by defendant No. 5 to plaintiffs.

It appears that the appeal by the auction-purchasers, who are also the decree-holders, was not made on the ground that the sale ought not to have been set aside as there was failure to pay the 5 per cent., but only on the ground that the 5 per cent. should be paid to them, and an order was made for its payment by the Collector to whom an appeal was preferred from the decision of the Sub-Divisional Officer. The execution of decrees by Collectors is governed by the rules made by the Local Government under sections 38 72 of the Civil Procedure Code. Section 70 (1) (c) provides for orders made by any gazetted subordinate Officer, being subject to appeal to and revision by superior revenue authorities as may be as the orders made by the Court would be subject to appeal to and revision by Appellate or Revisional Courts. The rules in the Central Provinces are contained in Notification No. 287 of the 12th February 1912, published in the Central Provinces Gazette of February 24th, 1912. Rule No 12 provides for the making over by the Deputy Commissioner of any case sent to him to an Assistant or Extra Assistant Commissioner subordinate to him, and rule 13 provides for appeals from such officers to the Deputy Commissioner. On reading section 68 and the following sections of the Civil Procedure Code it will appear that the provisions with respect to appeals is intended to follow, as nearly as possible, the procedure with regard to appeals from the decisions of ordinary Courts, and the question, therefore, arises as to whether the decisions of the Sub-Divisional Officer cancelling the sale and holding the decree as satisfied can be regarded as a final decision in view of the fact that it was subject to an appeal and that an appeal was actually preferred.

With regard to suits, it has been held by the High Courts that the proceedings must be held to continue till their final disposal on appeal; cf. Settappa v. Muthia (5), in which it was held that, for the purposes of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, proceedings in appeal must be treated as a continuation of the proceedings in the lower Court, and a transfer of property, which is the subject-matter of contentious litigation, by a party thereto after the date of the decree of the lower Court and before an appeal is preferred against such decree, will be affected by the principle of lis pendens under section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is pointed out at page 270 of that ruling that it is not open to a defeated suitor to file an appeal immediately, as he has to obtain copies of decree and judgment and he ought not to suffer for the delay imposed by law. On this analogy it would appear that the proceedings for the execution of decrees by a Collector should be regarded as continuing till their final disposal on appeal. It would appear, therefore, that, so long as the proceedings are liable to revision or appeal, it would be open to the Collector to set aside the sale or to order the property to be sold or take such other action as he is empowered to do by the third Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code.

It is quite true that in this case the Collector, on appeal from the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer, only directed the recovery of Rs. 200 odd which represented the 5 per cent. of the purchase-money, but it would have been open to him to set aside the order declaring the decree satisfied and to direct the execution proceedings to be reopened and to confirm the sale. It has been held by this Court in Mahuleo v. Krishnaji (6) that the Collector's powers under paragraph 11 of Schedule III of the Civil Procedure Code do not come to an end as soon as the property is sold by auction and fetches more than the decretal amount. They exist at least till the confirmation of the sale. In that case it was pointed out that even after the sale had taken place the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor could have applied under O. XXI r. 90 to have the sale set aside on the ground of material irregularity in conducting or publishing the sale which might necessitate a fresh sale. The fact that no such application was made and a resale became unnecessary would not entitle us to hold that the Collector's powers and duties had ceased.

The result of all these decisions is, to show that the powers and duties of the Collector continue until the execution of the decree is finally disposed of. In the present case it is clear that the provisions of O. XXI r. 89, had not been followed and that, therefore, under the Calcutta case quoted above, the sale ought not to have been set aside and the decree was not satisfied. Consequently, whenever an appeal was preferred against that order, it would have been perfectly open to the Collector to set aside that order and direct the sale to take place on the ground that the judgment-debtor had not complied with the provision of the law as continued in O. XXI, r. 89 of the Civil Procedure Code. I am aware that this was not the ground pleaded by the decree-holders, who are also the auction-purchasers, in their appeal and it might perhaps be contended that the judgment-creditors themselves considered that the decree had been satisfied. The matter is somewhat complicated by the auction-purchasers and the decree-holders being the same persons. In spite of this, I am of opinion that the decree was not satisfied because the provisions of O. XXI, r. 89, were not complied with and that it was, therefore, open to the Collector on appeal to order the property to be sold in execution. I am also of opinion that the proceedings must be held to continue till their final disposal on appeal. The order of the Collector was merely to recover Rs. 207-80, but it would have been open to him to order that the sale should not be set aside without the payment of this amount. So long as the Collector had the power of making this order his duties under paragraph 11 of Schedule III of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be held to have ceased, and, therefore, I am of opinion that the sale by defendant No. 5 made before the order of the Assistant Commissioner has been finally confirmed on appeal, is affected by the doctrine of lis pendens and is prohibited by paragraph 11 of Schedule III, Civil Procedure Code, and the alienation having been made without the written permission of the Collector, is void. This point does not seem to have been argued before the lower Appellate Court.

It is not necessary to go into the question of the payment of consideration or of the genuineness of the sale. The plaintiff's suit must fail. I set aside the decree of the lower Appellate

Will—Construction—Earlier clause clear and unambiguous—Later clause ambiguous—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1888), s. 85—Devise of property belonging to legatee—Legatee retaining his property in his own title—Election—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), ss. 128, 130—Demonstrative Legacy—Interest—Suit for account by residuary legatee against other legatee—Defendant suppressing account-books—Burden of proof.

The principle that the later clause of a Will should have preference over the earlier is inapplicable to a case where the earlier clause is clear and unambiguous and can be read in such manner as not to interfere with the later one. [p. 275, col. 2]

A testator has no right to devise property belonging to another person, but if he does devise such property and at the same time leaves a legacy for that person the latter must acquiesce in the devise if he wishes to receive the legacy. But if he chooses to retain his property by virtue of his own title, under the doctrine of election he is not entitled to the legacy under the Will. [p. 275, col. 2]

A demonstrative legacy which partakes partly of the nature of a specific legacy and partly of a general legacy and which is directed to be paid out of a certain specified property bears interest from one year after the testator's death even in cases where no provision for interest is made in the Will, notwithstanding that the Probate and Administration Act does not deal with interest on demonstrative legacies. [p. 275, col. 2.]

Chinnam Rajamannar v. Tandikandu Ramchandra Rao, 29Mad. 155, followed.

In a suit for accounts by a residuary legatee against other legatees if it appears that the defendants had seized a large portion of the testator's property, were in possession of the accounts kept by the testator and were suppressing the same, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove each item of property he claims beyond the possibility of doubt, but if he makes a prima facie case the burden is cast upon the defendants to show that the property did not belong to the testator or was subsequently accounted for. JUDGMENT.

Phillips, J.—In this case the parties will be styled according to their designation in appeal No. 332 of 1920 presented against the decree in O. S. No. 25 of 1919. The plaintiff is the minor natural brother of one Raghavayya who was adopted by one Guruvarayudu and his wife Pitchamma, the 1st defendant. The 2nd defendant is Raghavayya's widow and the 3rd defendant is her father, the 4th defendant being the minor son of the 3rd defendant. This Raghavayya died on the 20th of November 1915 leaving a Will, Ex. A, which was executed on the 17th November 1915 and registered on the 20th. Under this Will he left certain properties to his mother, his wife and his father-in-law respectively and also the family house to the plaintiff and made the plaintiff his residuary legatee. Shortly after his death, disputes arose between the plaintiff's father and guardian and defendants 1 to 3, and a criminal complaint was filed by plaintiff's guardian against defendants 1 and 3 and their gumastah under section 404 of the Indian Penal Code, on the 6th of March 1916. Search warrants were issued and a large quantity of property was found in the 1st defendant's house and also in the house of one Sitamma. This property consisted of cash, jewels, house-hold utensils, promissory notes and account-books and other papers. When Sitamma was examined, she said that the property so found did not belong to her but had been deposited with her by the 1st defendant for safe custody and among the properties found in Sitamma's house were a number of promissory-notes executed in favour of the testator Raghavayya. No satisfactory explanation has been given as to why these properties were secreted in Sitamma's house and it can only have been with a view to evade the claims of the plaintiff who was entitled to the property under Raghavayya's Will. The Criminal case was eventually dismissed and the properties found at the search were returned either to the defendants or to their agent. Subsequently, there seems to have been some mediation, but in 1917 a notice was sent on behalf of the plaintiff to the defendants claiming the testator's property and, finally, in November 1918, these three suits were filed.

The plaintiff sues to recover the properties specified in his plaint schedules from the defendants, whereas the 1st defendant and the 2nd defendant have each filed a suit for the recovery of the legacy of Rs. 4,000 left to her by Raghavayya's Will. The minor plaintiff starts at some disadvantage because the defendants 1 to 3 have been residing in the testator's house since his death and were in possession of his properties from the time of his death. The testator besides owning considerable immoveable property had money-lending dealings and, according to the plaintiff, left outstandings of the value of Rs. 80,000, whereas the 3rd defendant only admits outstandings of Rs. 20,000. Admittedly, the plaintiff has obtained possession of the immoveable property and a considerable part of the promissory-notes, etc., left by his brother, and he now brings this suit for certain specified moveables detailed in schedule A to the plaint, for the promissory-notes specified in schedule B, and also for the family house schedule C.

Before dealing with the first two schedules I will deal with the third schedule C. The house referred to was given to the 1st defendant by her husband under Ex. I in 1907, but in his Will Raghavayya leaves expressly this to the plaintiff. No doubt later on in the Will he does say that, "defendants 1 to 3 shall enjoy the property as mentioned above after deducting the property executed and registered by my father in favour of my mother." It is contended for the 1st defendant that this clause nullifies the express devise of the family house to the plaintiff. It is, however, clear that the bequest to the plaintiff is expressed in unambiguous terms, whereas the restriction mentioned afterwards would seem to refer to a certain site specifically mentioned in the previous clause which was also included in the gift-deed, Ex. I, and, consequently, there is no occasion to apply the principle that the later clause of a Will should have preference over the earlier, for in this case the earlier clause is clear and unambiguous, whereas the later is ambiguous and can be read in such a manner as not to interfere with the earlier one. I, therefore, think that the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that this house was devised to the plaintiff. The testator had no right to make this devise as the property really belonged to his mother, but he has made a devise of Rs. 4,000 in favour of his mother. If, therefore, the mother wishes to receive the legacy of Rs. 4,000 she is bound to acquiesce in the devise of the family house. She has chosen to retain the house by virtue of her own title and, therefore, under the doctrine of election, she is not entitled to the legacy under the Will. This disposes of Appeal No. 156 which must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal No. 157 relates only to the question of interest. Raghavayya's minor wife, the 2nd defendant, obtained a decree in the lower Court for the payment to her of the legacy of Rs. 4,000 but interest was disallowed on the ground that no provision for interest was made in the Will and that, in view of the conduct of the defendants, interest could not be equitably awarded as damages. Section 123 of the Probate and Administration Act prescribes that "the legatee of a specific legacy is entitled to the clear produce thereof, if any, from the testator's death," and section 130 states that, "where no time has been fixed for the payment of a general legacy, interest begins to run from the expiration of one year from the testator's death." In the present case the legacy is a demonstrative legacy and has been directed to be paid out of certain specified property and the Probate and Administration Act makes no specific provision for the payment of interest on demonstrative legacies. In England, however, it has always been held that demonstrative legacies, like general legacies, bear interest from one year after the testator's death, and this law has been applied in this Presidency in Chinnam Rajamannar v. Tadikonda Ramachandra Rao (1). It is argued that, as the Indian Act makes no provision for interest on demonstrative legacies, it must be deemed to have excluded them from the provisions as to payment of interest on general legacies and that, as the law has been codified by the Probate and Administration Act, it is not open to the Courts in India to apply the provisions of the English Common Law. A demonstrative legacy partakes partly of the nature of a specific legacy and partly of a general legacy and in legacies of both these kinds, provision is made either for payment of interest or for the receipt of the produce of the legacy. It is possible that, in some cases, hardship would be entailed upon the executor in being compelled to pay interest on a demonstrative legacy when the fund out of which it has to be paid does not come into his hands for some years after the testator's death, but these cases would be exceptional and I am not prepared to say that the decision in Chinnam Rajamannar v. Tadikonda Ramachandra Rao (1), is wrong and would, therefore, adopt it. Appeal No. 157 must, therefore, be allowed with proportionate costs in so far as interest from one year after the date of the testator's death is concerned.

I will now proceed to deal with the main appeal by the plaintiff in O. S. No. 25 of 1919. He has obtained a decree for part of item 1, item 2, part of items 4 to 10 and such of the items 11 to 53 as have been admitted by the 1st defendant and also for item 15 in schedule B, and the rest of his claim has been dismissed. This appeal relates to the items disallowed.

Before dealing with the evidence in the case, I may make a few remarks on the question of the amount of proof which should be required from either party. It is quite clear that defendants 1 and 3 seized a large portion of the testator's estate and attempted to make away with it. It is also clear that the property which was seized at the time of the criminal case was handed back to their possession and it is incumbent on them to show what has happened to the property in their hands. Among the properties so handed back were six bound account-books and a number of caljan accounts, but neither these nor any other accounts have been produced in this suit. It is admitted by plaintiff's guardian as P. W. 3 that the bound account books did not contain the latest account of Raghavayya but it is, however, possible that they would contain information which would satisfactorily establish the details of the property of which the testator died possessed. The only witness examined for the defendants is the 3rd defendant himself and he has not attempted to explain the non-production of these accounts; in fact, he states that the testator's father who is his own father-in-law never kept any accounts, and would have it that the testator had no accounts to show what his estate was. Apart from the fact that certain accounts were found at the search, we have the recital in Exhibit M (18), a promissory-note executed to the 1st defendant in renewal of a note executed in favour of her son Raghavayya, that the amount was made up of an amount due according to the subsequent rough book. This recital shows clearly that Raghavayya did keep some accounts and it is also shown by the finding of account-books and caljan accounts at the search. The 1st defendant has not chosen to go into the witness-box, whereas the plaintiff has been called upon to prove beyond doubt each and every item of property which he claims: and the Subordinate Judge has not dealt with the evidence in the case as if the burden of proof was wholly on the plaintiff but has not attached any weight to the inference to be drawn from the non-production of the accounts by the 3rd defendant and the absence of any independent evidence on his behalf. Considering the conduct of defendants 1 and 3 and the suppression by them of the testator's accounts, I think it is not necessary that the plaintiff should prove each item he claims beyond the possibility of doubt, but that, if he adduces a prima facie case of the existence of certain property, the burden is cast upon the defendants to show that property did not belong to Raghavayya or has been subsequently accounted for. With these preliminary remarks, I will proceed to discuss the evidence as regards the several items claimed by the plaintiff. The defendants have also filed a memorandum of objections in respect of the items decreed to the plaintiff, and, consequently, all the items in A and B schedules must now be dealt with.

His Lordship then dealt with the items in detail and, after discussing the evidence, concluded as follows:—

The Subordinate Judge's decree will, therefore, be modified in accordance with the above findings and the plaintiff will get his proportionate costs throughout from the defendants. The memo. of objections is dismissed with costs.

—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Occupancy holding—Lands allotted to several villages—Rent, separate suits for, in respect of lands in each village, maintainability of.

Where lands comprised in one occupancy holding are distributed among several villages, the occupancy holding is split up into as many holdings as there are villages among which the lands are distributed and a separate suit for rent is maintainable in respect of the lands in each village.

Second appeals against the decrees of the District Judge of Ghazipur, dated the 20th April 1922.

Mr. K. N. Laghate, for the Appellants.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These nine connected appeals arise out of nine suits for arrears of rent brought against the appellants. It appears that, as far back as 1868, certain Zemindars in what was known as the Taluka Birpur in the Ghazipur District agreed that the predecessors-in-interest of the present appellants should cultivate 96 bighas 19 biswas in the taluka at a certain rent. At the next Settlement the area and the rent were increased. As time has gone on, the fields held in tenure by these persons have been distributed amongst no less than nine villages and the fields in each village have been amalgamated into a separate area held in occupancy tenure. These appeals arise out of suits for arrears of rent in respect of these nine areas. The main point pressed in appeal by the learned Counsel for the defendants-appellants is that the suits should be dismissed in toto because nine suits have been brought instead of one. His argument is that all these nine areas are one holding and that under the law one suit should have been brought for the arrears of rent of one holding. The first point to consider is, whether these areas are one holding or nine holdings. Now, there might be some force in an argument to the effect that originally 96 bighas and 19 biswas were one holding because the whole area at that time consisted of parcels of land held under one tenure and one engagement, and it might be argued that, when the area increased at the time of Settlement it still remained one holding. But once the nine villages were formed (whenever they were formed) it seems to me impossible to hold that the area held in each village under occupancy rights was not a separate occupancy holding. I do not understand how there could be one occupancy holding consisting of fields which lay in nine different villages and nothing could be worse from the point of view of the appellants than deciding in their favour upon this point, for, if it were held that all this land was included in one holding, a decree for arrears of rent in respect of an occupancy holding in one village would suffice to eject them from all nine villages under the provisions of section 57, Local Act II of 1901. It certainly is true that in the past they were sued in single cases in respect of all the areas and that the areas were treated as one holding. But I think the Courts in the past were wrong, and that the Courts which decided these present cases have taken the right view of the subject. I rely in support of these views on the decision in Jaganmath Prasad v. Tere (1). The facts there were certainly not the same as here, for in that case there was not the slightest doubt as to the separation of the holdings and here the point, at any rate, is arguable. But the argument derived from the provisions of section 57 is the same here as it was there. For the above reasons, I consider that nine separate suits were rightly instituted.

(1) 3 A. L. J. 611; A. W. N. (1906) 258; 29 A 18.

I now come to the last point. There are a large number of defendants and some were impleaded so late in the day that the recovery of a small portion of the arrears against them was time-barred. The Courts below have awarded this amount against the remainder on the ground that they shared in the cultivation. I accept this view as correct.

I accordingly dismiss these nine appeals with costs on the higher scale.

Bina Pujari v. Biraj Mohan, 3 C. P. L. R. 126, followed.

The assignment by a co-sharer of the right to profits (arrears of rent) is an assignment of a mere right to sue and the transfer of such a right is unlawful under section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 278, col. 2.]

Lakhpat Sahai v. Tikaram, 47 Ind. Cas. 158 N. L. J. 17, followed.

Section 24 of the Contract Act applies where the whole contract is one and the legal part cannot be separated from the illegal, otherwise the legal part can be enforced.

A suit on a bond which formed a part of consideration for the sale of 2-annas malgusari and lambardari rights cannot be maintained as it is covered by section 24 of the Contract Act.

Revision against the decree of the Small Cause Court, Khandwa, dated the 8th January 1923 in Civil suit No. 2679 of 1922.

ORDER.—The facts of this case are peculiar and raise an important point of law.

The applicant held a 2-annas share in a village and was also Lambardar. He sold his share in the village to the non-applicants, including the lambardari rights and the right to recover arrears of rent. The consideration was partly previous advances and partly a bond for Rs. 475 passed by defendants. As defendants did not pay the amount of the bond, the plaintiff sued them upon it and the defendants pleaded that it was passed for the lambardari rights and the arrears of rent which could not be sold, so there was no consideration for the bond.

The Small Cause Court, Khandwa, allowed evidence on this point and, finding that there was a failure of consideration, dismissed the suit. The plaintiff applies for revision.

Admittedly, the lambardari rights cannot be transferred, but as the applicant's pleader appears disposed to argue that the arrears of rent can be transferred, I may commence by saying that it has been held by this Court that the assignment by a co-sharer of the right to profits prior to the sale is an assignment of a mere right to sue: of Lakhpat Sahai v. Tikaram (1), disposed of on 19th March 1917. It is clear, therefore, that the sale of the lambardari rights and the rental arrears is unlawful.

Section 21 of the Contract Act quoted by the applicant does not seem to me to apply. It is not a question of a mistake of law, but of a contract part of the consideration of which is forbidden by law. The transfer of a mere right to sue is expressly forbidden by section 6, Transfer of Property Act, and it was decided as long ago as 1889 in Bina Pujari v. Biraj Mohan (2) that the rights of a Lambardar cannot be transferred. Under section 24 of the Contract Act if any part of a single consideration for one or more objects, or any one r any part of several considerations for a single object is unlawful, the agreement is void.

This applies where the whole contract is one and the legal part cannot be separated from the illegal. Where the legal and the illegal parts can be separated the legal part can be enforced.

It has been contended on behalf of the applicant that the whole transaction evidenced by Exhibits D. 1 and P. 1, the sale-deed and bond is one, and that the present bond forms part of the consideration of Rs. 3,275 for the sale of the 2-annas share including the lamhardari rights and the right to the arrears.

If the whole agreement is treated as one the plaintiff must fail, because the promises made by plaintiff constitute a single consideration or defendants' promise to pay and there is no possibility of apportioning the amount payable for the legal and illegal promises. The case will be covered by the very similar English case of Hopkins v. Prescott (3), where a man agreed to buy for a lump sum a private business which of course may be sold, and a public office which is not lawfully saleable.

So also where the parties lumped together two debts, a lawful and an unlawful one, and treated them as one, Davlatasing v. Pandu (4) or where the agreement to pay rent was void because the amount fixed exceeded the legal limit, Laxmantal v. Mulshankur (5) the agreement could not be enforced in part, since that would mean making a new agreement for the parties. But if in the cases mentioned above the lawful and unlawful parts could be separated, the lawful promise could be enforced.

In the present case I have not the least doubt that the plaintiff's suit must fail. If, as has been contended on his behalf, the whole transaction is to be treated as one and the bond in suit is part of the consideration for the whole sale, then, on the authorities above cited, the whole agreement being void no part of it can be enforced. If, on the other hand, evidence is admissible to show that this bond was a separate consideration for the sale of the lamhardari rights and the arrears of rent, then the consideration for it is unlawful and the agreement is void.

In this view of the case it is unnecessary to go into the question of whether oral evidence was admissible to add to the terms of the documents. As a matter of fact the bond (Exh. P. 1) on which the suit is brought recites that Rs. 475 are due out of the price of the 2-annas malguzari share and lamhardari rights purchased from plaintiff, for which the bond is executed. It appears, therefore, to be clearly covered by section 24, Indian Contract Act.

The decree of the Small Cause Court dismissing the plaintiff's suit is, therefore, correct, although it proceeds on a different ground to that taken by me. As a matter of fact, this aspect of the case was not argued at all. The application is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are simple.

One Khanusing and his two sons, members of a joint undivided Hindu family, borrowed in October 1912 certain sums of moneys from the Sind Bank on hundis, and as security for repayment granted the Bank an equitable mortgage over ten jirebs of land by depositing with it the title-deeds to the property. The moneys not being repaid within the stipulated time, in August 1916, the Bank sued them for the amount due and prayed for sale of the mortgaged property. The usual mortgage-decree was passed in favour of the Sind Bank on the 31st August 1916. The final decree followed on the 1st February 1918. On the 3rd May 1914 Khanusing and his sons had sold the property equitably mortgaged with the Bank to one Jamila and she in turn sold it to Haji Haroon. Both the conveyances were effected by registered sale-deeds. The property since the sale to Haji Haroon has been in his possession.

Neither Jamila nor Haji Haroon were parties to the suit filed by the Sind Bank against Khanusing and his sons, as apparently the Sind Bank was not aware of the sales nor, as the decree was ex parte, was the sale brought to the notice of the Court.

The decree was assigned by the Sind Bank to one Kalumal Tolaram and on the 21st August 1919 he applied for his name to be brought on the record as the transferee of the decree and for sale of the mortgaged property specified in the decree. The sale proclamation that was issued by the Court in March 1920 described the sale to be of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor (Khanusing and his two sons) in the ten jirebs of land. It was on the 17th April 1920 that Haji Haroon notified by a public notice that the land in question had been sold to them and that they were not aware of the mortgage with the Sind Bank. At the auction-sale held by the Court the property was purchased by the Respondent Amersi Dyal, for the sum of Rs. 8,250-0-0. The auction-sale was held on the 17th April 1920.

On the 15th May 1920 the auction-purchaser, being made aware of the sale of the mortgaged property subsequent to the mortgage, applied under O. XXI, r. 91, Civil Procedure Code for sale to be set aside on the ground that the judgment-debtors had no saleable interest in the property as the time of the auction-sale by the Court and the sale proclamation did not disclose that the property had been sold subsequent to the mortgage.

The Learned Additional Judicial Commissioner, Mr. Kemp, set aside the auction-sale on the ground that the mortgagors-judgment-debtors had no saleable interest in the property and directed the refund of the purchase-money to the auction-purchaser.

The Sind Bank by their assignee appeal against this order. The main point raised in appeal is that the lower Court was in error in regarding the position of the mortgagors-judgment-debtors at the time of the auction-sale, whereas the Court should have considered their interest in the property at the time of the mortgage. O. XIX, r. 91, Civil Procedure Code as follows:—“The purchaser at any such sale in execution of a decree may apply to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold.” It is obviously the intention of the Legislature that if the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest in the property sold the sale should be declared null and void. And, according to the plain reading of the rule, it contemplates the interest of judgment-debtor in the property at the time of the sale by the Court. Now, after the execution of the mortgage with the Sind Bank, the only interest that the mortgagors retained in the mortgaged property was their equity of redemption which they disposed of and, consequently, at the time of the sale by the Court it was not that the mortgagors-judgment-debtors had no appreciable interest in the property sold but they had absolutely none, and it is on this ground that the application was made to set aside the sale. Now, Mr. Kimatrai for the appellants contends that what was sold at the auction-sale by the Court was the right, title and interest of the mortgagors subsisting at the time of the mortgage and that the auction-purchaser was not bound by the sales subsequent to the mortgage. In support of his contention he relies on the authority of Shaukh Abdulla Saiba v. Haji Abdulla (1) and on the following remarks in the judgment, at p. 15: "In fact the intention of the Court is (in mortgage-decrees) to pass to the purchaser the right, title and interest both of the mortgagor and mortgagee. And, in order to surmount the difficulty caused by the form of sale in mortgage-suits, this Court has ruled that the 'right, title and interest' of the mortgagor as it stood when he was making the mortgage (and not merely as it stood at the time of the Court-sale) is what passes under the certificate of sale to the purchaser." He also relies on Dadoba Arjunji v. Damodar Rughnath (2), "where it was observed in the judgment that, the authorities are clear that he (purchaser) acquires the estate of the mortgagor as it existed when he executed the mortgage." This ruling was followed in Kanyaram v. Tirathsing (3), where it was held that, what is sold at the sale in execution of the first mortgagee's decree is the right, title and interest of the mortgagor as it existed at the time of the first mortgage.

Now, in the present case, it cannot be overlooked that in the suit by the Sind Bank against the mortgagors for sale of the mortgaged property neither of the purchasers was a party to it as they should have been in a regularly constituted suit. Neither of them, therefore, was bound by the decree passed in the mortgage-suit. As stated by Ghose on Mortgages 3rd Ed., p. 733, if a suit has been properly constituted, that is, if the mortgagor and all subsequent assignees are parties to it, the title of the purchaser will be absolute relating back to the time of the execution of the mortgage. He will not, therefore, be bound by any subsequent dispositions made by the mortgagor as the sale will cut off all such interests.

In Muthammal v. Razu Pillay (4) the following observations appear in the body of the judgment, at p. 515: "A mortgagee who sues for the sale of the secured properties, if he succeeds, gets the title of the mortgagor as it stood on the date of the mortgage, or transfers that title to the purchaser, free from all interests and liens subsequently created by the mortgagor, provided he makes the owner of such interests or liens parties to the suit, but if he omits to make any of them parties, their rights or liabilities are not affected;" and at p. 516 it is said: "If the mortgagor or owner of the final equity of redemption is not made a party to the suit the purchaser at the sale at the best acquired only the interest of the mortgagee."

Now, it has been established that the possession of the property mortgaged is with Haji Haroon, who had purchased it from the mortgagor prior to the suit by the mortgagee. To this suit, as I have already observed, Haji Haroon was not impleaded as a party and consequently was not bound by the decree for sale of the mortgaged property. At the Court auction-sale, therefore, what the respondent purchased was only the right of the mortgagee, the whole of the equity of redemption being vested in Haji Haroon. A suit for possession of the mortgaged property by the respondent would not be entertainable as held by the Full Bench in Hargulal Singh v. Gobind Rai (5) on facts identical with the present case. This decision was followed in Entholy Kizakik v. Vallath Koyilil (6). In both these cases there was a sale by the mortgagor subsequent to the mortgage and after the sale the mortgagee instituted a suit for the sale of the mortgaged property without impleading the purchaser as a party to it, and obtained a decree for sale. The purchaser at the sale in execution of the decree brought a suit for possession and it was held that he was not entitled to possession as all that passed to him at the sale was the right of the mortgagee on a simple mortgage.

This is all that the respondent in the present case can be deemed to have acquired by his purchase at the sale held in execution of the decree, for at the sale of the mortgaged property the mortgagors-judgment-debtors had no interest in the property as they had parted with the only interest that they retained after the mortgage, viz., the equity of redemption, and, as observed, the decree for sale of the mortgaged property was not binding on the purchasers from the mortgagors as they were not parties to it. The result, therefore, is that the judgment-debtors had no saleable interest in the property at time of the Court auction-sale and the appeal must stand dismissed with costs.

Adverse possession—Muhammadan Law—Succession—Co-heirs, possession of, whether adverse—Exclusive enjoyment of profits.

The possession of some co-heirs of a deceased Muhammadan over the undivided estate of the deceased is the possession of all the co-heirs who are co-sharers in the estate. [p. 283, col. 1.]

The mere fact that the co-heirs who are not in possession have not been in the enjoyment of the rents and profits of the property is not sufficient to establish a title by adverse possession in the co-heirs who have been in possession and have enjoyed such profits. [p. 283, col. 2.]

ORDER.—The plaintiffs-appellants claim a 7/40ths share in the inheritance of Mt. Amina Bibi, who died on the 3rd June 1919. Plaintiff No. 1 is her husband. The other plaintiffs are her sons and one daughter. The estate of Mt. Amina Bibi, with regard to which this claim is preferred, consisted of her share in the inheritance of her father, Ahmad Ali Khan, who died in April 1907. Ahmad Ali Khan was married twice. Mt. Amina Bibi, deceased, and Muhammad Ali Khan, defendant No. 1, were his children born of the first wife. The second wife is Mt. Naima Bibi, who is defendant No. 3 in the present litigation. Her son Mahmud Ali Khan, is defendant No. 2. Muhammad Ali Khan, defendant No. 1, sold a half share in a certain grove to defendant No. 4. This grove admittedly belonged to Ahmad Ali Khan and is item No. 6 in the list of properties mentioned in paragraph 3 of the plaint of the present suit. That Mt. Amina Bibi was one of the heirs of Ahmad Ali Khan under the Hanafi Muhammadan Law is admitted. It is also admitted that her share of inheritance in the estate of her father was 7/40ths. It is further admitted that the plaintiffs, the husband and the children of Mt. Amina Bibi, respectively, are the heirs under the same law of Mt. Amina Bibi. It follows that if Mt. Amina Bibi had a title to the property to the suit, as it is admitted she had, that title devolved on the present plaintiffs. It is again a common ground that defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are the other heirs of Ahmad Ali Khan and entitled to his estate less than the share of Mt. Amina Bibi. On this state of pleadings it is perfectly clear that this is a dispute with regard to a share in an estate in which all the parties to the suit have title as co-sharers. Amongst the pleas raised in defence the only plea tried by the lower Appellate Court is one of limitation. That plea has been found by that Court in favour of the defendants with the result that the suit has been dismissed. This was done in agreement with the decision of the Court of first instance on the same plea. Other issues which arose in the case have not been decided by the lower Appellate Court though they were all decided by the Court of first instance.

The only point, therefore, in second appeal urged on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants is one of limitation and the finding of the lower Courts on that point is challenged. The lower Appellate Court has found that the plaintiffs have failed to prove their possession within limitation and that the defendants have succeeded in proving adverse possession.

The first finding can be disposed of in a few words. It is a well accepted principle of law, to which no attention seems to have been given by the learned Judge in the Court below, that the possession of one co-sharer is in law the possession of the other, unless it is shown to be otherwise. The defendant's possession, therefore, in the circumstances of this case, must be deemed to have been not only exclusively in their own interest but also for and on behalf of the other co-sharers in the common estate. The title being with the plaintiffs, as is shown above, it subsists certainly in a case where the opposite party in possession is a co-owner. In the case of Hardat Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (1), Lord Buckmaster, in delivering the judgment of His Majesty's Privy Council, made the following observation:—"Possession may be either lawful or unlawful, in the absence of evidence, it must be assumed to be the former." Further, in the case of Kennedy v. De Trafford (2), Lord Herschell, in speaking of the character of the possession of a co-owner, made the following observation:—"Dodson was an owner of this property—the owner of an undivided moiety, it is true, but each owner of an undivided moiety is none the less truly an owner." It must, therefore, be held that the possession of the defendants over the undivided estate of the common ancestor of the parties is the possession of all the co-sharers in that estate.

The second question is one of adverse possession. The Court below has found that mutation of names in the Revenue Registers on the death of Ahmad Ali Khan was made in favour of his sons only, though this was done with the knowledge and with the consent of their sister, Mt. Amina Bibi. It has further found that neither Mt. Amina Bibi nor the plaintiffs in the present case ever lived together with the defendants. It has also found that neither she nor her heirs ever enjoyed the fruits of the common estate. These are the findings of fact and must be accepted as conclusive in second appeal. The question of law which now arises for determination is, whether, in the circumstances of this case, these facts found by the lower Appellate Court constitute adverse possession as understood in law in a case between co-sharers. Here, again, the finding of the Court below that adverse possession has been proved must be set aside.

It is clear beyond any shadow of doubt that the fact that the plaintiffs have not been in the enjoyment of the rents and profits of the property is not sufficient to establish a title by adverse possession in the defendants who have enjoyed such profits. The simple reason for this view of law is that the fact is consistent with the legal title in the co-tenant in possession; but having the title to possession his act of exclusive enjoyment of the profits cannot amount to a hostile assertion on his part as against the title of the co-tenant not in possession. See the decision of Mr. Justice Mookerjee in the case of Jaganmath Marwari v. Sm. Chandin Bih (3). The fact that mutation in the name of the sons of Ahmad Ali Khan was made with the knowledge and with the consent of Mt. Amina Bibi is tending more in the direction of negating the plea of adverse possession rather than in support of it.

I, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and, as the appeal in the Court below was disposed of upon a preliminary point, the case is remanded to that Court with direction that it shall be restored to its original number in the Register of Appeals in that Court and tried according to law. The costs shall abide the event.

JUDGMENT.—One Shankar Rao Patel of Ghuikhed, Taluq Chandur, District Amraoti, died in February 1908 leaving behind him two widows, Ambu Bai and Annapurna Bai. Ambu Bai is the elder of the two. The plaintiff, Ruprao, claims to have been adopted by Ambu Bai on the 12th January 1912 when he was a minor. He states that he attained majority in October 1915. He sues for possession of certain property belonging to the deceased Shankar Rao. The defendants are (1) Annapurna Bai and (2) Kashinath, a minor. Kashinath claims to have been adopted by Annapurna Bai with Ambu Bai's consent in June 1908 in Benares where the widows had gone to immerse the deceased Shankar Rao's bones in the holy waters. It is said that Shankar Rao had given express authority to both his wives to adopt. The defendants contend that the suit is barred as the plaintiff and his guardian Ambu Bai had knowledge of his adoption more than six years before suit and the suit was not brought within six years from the date of the knowledge or three years after the plaintiff attained majority. They denied the plaintiff's adoption by Ambu Bai. Defendant Annapurna Bai claims maintenance in case Kashinath's adoption is not proved. These are the pleadings material to this appeal.

* * * * *

The question to be next dealt with is that of limitation. It is urged on behalf of the appellants that the main object of the suit was to have it declared that plaintiff is, and defendant No. 2 is not, the adopted son of Shankar Rao; that there is evidence that defendant No. 2 has been treated as the adopted son since about 11 years before suit; that the plaintiff and Ambu Bai must have known of the allegation of adoption during all those years, and that as the suit is brought admittedly more than three years after the plaintiff attained majority it is time-barred. It is further urged that the knowledge of Ambu Bai must be attributed to the plaintiff. In the plaint the only reliefs asked are possession and profits of the property of Shankar Rao. In the course of the statement of his case the plaintiff mentions the fact that in Patelki proceedings in 1913 Annapurna Bai alleged that Kashinath was adopted by her. He denies the adoption by defendant No. 1 or defendant No. 1's power to adopt and states that defendant No. 2 has been joined only to have a full decision of the plaintiff's right in connection with the property in suit. It is said that this constitutes an implied prayer for the relief of declaration that defendant No. 2's adoption is invalid and never in fact took place. There are a number of witnesses who say that defendant No. 2 was said to be or known as Shankar Rao's adopted son, but from the conduct of Annapurna Bai with regard to Patelki and mutation proceedings after Shankar Rao's death, the partition of the property of Shankar Rao, the suits filed by Annapurna Bai and Ambu Bai, and the failure to mention the adoption in Exhibit P-36, any allegation of the adoption is not very likely. The first time that the allegation of the adoption appears to have been definitely made is on the 8th November 1913 in the Patelki proceedings, Exhibit P-37.

COURT OF WARDS v. ABRAR ALI

Assuming that Ambu Bai knew before 1913 that defendant No. 2 was alleged to be adopted and, further, that Ambu Bai's knowledge can be attributed to the plaintiff, so far as this Court is concerned, it has always been held that Article 118 has no application in a suit like the present, where the relief sought is possession of property and the validity or factum of adoption is incidentally in issue: vide Chintaman v. Seth Mohanlal (1), Deorao Zamindar v. Mt. Saku Bai (2) and Soni Bai v. Dhanraj (3), (Bench) dissenting from the Bombay ruling Shrinivasa Sarjerao v. Balwant Venkatesh (4) which follows Shrinivas v. Hanmant (5) on which the appellants rely. The view in this Court is in consonance with that of the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts in Nathu Singh v. Gulab Singh (6) and Ram Chandra Mukerjee v. Ranjit Singh (7). Velaga Mangamma v. Bandlamudi Veerayya (8) was a case under Article 119. The Bombay High Court has in Doddawa Purshya v. Yellawa Mallappa Beni (9) taken the same view as the other High Courts: see also Rudha Dulaiya v. Bushik Lal (10). We hold that the suit is not barred by limitation.

Another point argued is this. It is said that an adopted son has the right to set aside such acts of the widow as were beyond her power but not such as were within it; that in the present case since the widows quarrelled and it was necessary that they should have separate maintenance the allotment of a share to Annapurna Bai was a prudent act within the power of the widows and the adopted son had no right to take away the property allotted to Annapurna Bai. It is said that the income of this property was not more than an adequate maintenance of her. Reference is made to Mayne's Hindu Law, page 270, paragraph 197, where it is said that any encumbrances or alienations created or made by the widow are binding on the adopted son if they are within the widow's powers. These remarks do not, in our opinion, apply to a case like the present of a partition between the widows. All co-widows must in law be treated as one person and the adopted son divests that person. The partition between the co-widows was a mode of separate enjoyment binding on themselves and cannot enlarge their legal rights so as to affect the adopted son. As to the argument that the partition should be maintained on the ground that the income of the moiety allotted to Annapurna Bai under it represents not more than an adequate maintenance, the answer is that, what was a fair arrangement as regards the amount and form of maintenance when the rights of only the two widows were to be considered, cannot possibly be fair when the rights of the adopted son have come into existence. The widows are no doubt entitled to maintenance but it cannot be in consonance with the rights of the adopted son to hold that each of them is entitled to keep a portion of the family lands in lieu of maintenance, and we think that there is no justification for allowing Annapurna Bai to be in possession of the property in her hands which is half of Shankar Rao's property or any part thereof in lieu of maintenance.

Muhammadian Law—Guardianship—Uncle, whether guardian of nephew's property.

Where one of two joint execution creditors is a minor, the other execution-creditor who is sui juris is not competent to grant a valid discharge so as to bind the interest of the minor within the meaning of section 7 of the Limitation Act. [p. 286, col. 1.]

Jagannath Singh v. Mohabir Das, 15 I. C. 664, followed.

Case law discussed

Under the Muhammadan Law the uncle is neither the legal nor the natural guardian of the property of his minor nephew, and where he obtains a decree jointly with his nephew he is not competent to grant a valid discharge of the decree within the meaning of section 7 of the Limitation Act, and limitation for execution of such a decree does not, therefore, begin to run till the disability of the minor decree-holder ceases. [p. 237, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the order of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 4th April 1923.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Appellant

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question for determination in this appeal is, whether an application for execution of a decree is or is not barred by limitation. The decree was made on the 20th of December 1916 in favour of three persons of whom two, Sajid Ali, and Zahid Ali, were minors represented by their next friend, Mst. Kazimi Begam and the third, Syaid Abrar Ali, was sui juris. The present application for execution was presented on the 9th of May 1922 when more than three years from the date the decree was passed had expired. It was contended on behalf of the judgment-debtor, who is now the appellant before me, that a valid discharge could be given by the adult decree-holder without the concurrence of the other decree-holders, and that the application was, therefore, time-barred. The learned Judges of the Courts below have held that as two of the decree-holders were minors, the application of the 9th of May 1922 was in time by reason of section 7 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1908. That section lays down that where one of several persons jointly entitled to make an application for the execution of a decree is under any such disability, and a discharge can be given without the concurrence of such person, time will run against them all; but, where no such discharge can be given, time will not run as against any of them until one of them becomes capable of giving such discharge without the concurrence of the others or until the disability has ceased. The only question, therefore, that arises for consideration is whether in the present case the adult decree-holder could or could not have given a discharge without the concurrence of the minor decree-holders.

It is argued by Mr. M. L. Puri, who appears on behalf of the appellant, that Sayyid Abrar Ali, the adult decree-holder, was competent to give a valid discharge and relies in support of this contention upon the cases reported as Daulat Ram v. Syad Abdul Kasim (1) and Challagundalla Varamma v. Madala Gopaladasayya (2). Now the first case was considered in a recent Full-Bench judgment of this Court reported as Mathura Das v. Nizam Din (3) but not approved of. The second case is a Madras case and it is well known the Madras High Court has always taken a view in relation to this question which has not been accepted by any of the other High Courts in India, see Ghulam Gous Mia Khat v. Shriram Pandurang Jairamrao (4), Zamir Hasan v. Sunder (5), Surja Kumar v. Arunachunder Roy, (6), Mathura Das v. Nizam Din (3). In Jagannath Singh v. Mohabir Das (7) it was held that "where one of two joint execution-creditors is a minor, the other execution-creditor who is sui juris is not competent to grant a valid discharge so as to bind the interest of the minor." This view was based mainly on the provisions of section 461 of the Code of 1882, which corresponds to Order XXXII, rule 6, of the present Code of Civil Procedure. This rule lays down that, "where there is a decree for money or other moveable property for the benefit of a minor, the next friend for the suit, who is other than a statutory guardian, cannot receive the money unless the Court grants him leave to receive the property." It is also clear that under the Muhammadan Law the uncle is neither the legal nor the natural guardian of the property of a minor, and it is difficult to understand how, in these circumstances, the adult decree-holder could have given a valid discharge so as to bind the interest of the other decree-holders. In my opinion the first contention of the appellant cannot, therefore, be supported.

Next, it was argued that, at any rate, Abrar Ali's application should be regarded as time barred, especially as in the plaint individual shares were specified. This contention, in my opinion, is equally untenable. The decree was a joint decree in favour of the plaintiffs for possession of 153 bighas of land on payment of Rs. 974 to the defendant and no shares were specified in the decree to which, according to the judgment-debtor, the decree holders were entitled under Muhammadan Law. Moreover, the limitation was clearly saved by the operation of section 7 of the Indian Limitation Act and the contention cannot possibly, therefore, have any force. In my opinion the case is completely covered by the above section and the order of the District Judge must be affirmed.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal against the orders of the Subordinate Judge, Bezwada.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Appellants.

Messrs. P. Narayanamurthi and V. Suryanaryana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals arise out of two suits filed by the plaintiff in the District Munsif's Court of Nuzvid, to eject the defendants who are alleged to be his tenants.

The land in dispute is situate in Arugolanu Mokhasa within the ambit of the Nuzvid Zemindari. It is alleged to have been exchanged for patta lands held under Government pattas. The defendants pleaded inter alia that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suits as the land forms part of the estate within the meaning of the Estates Land Act. The District Munsif found the 5th issue, namely, whether the suit village is an estate, in favour of the defendants, and dismissed the plaintiffs' suits on the ground that the land in question was part of an estate within the meaning of the Estates Land Act. On appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the village in which the suit land is situate forms part of the Nuzvid Zemindari and is an 'estate' as defined in section 3, cl 2 (e) of the Estates Land Act, that the character of the land has not changed by reason of the exchange referred to in the plaint, and that the plaintiff is, therefore, a landholder. He returned the plaints for presentation to the Revenue Court and against those orders the plaintiff has filed the present appeals.

The land in dispute was admittedly part of the Nuzvid Zemindari. The village of Arugolam in which the land is situate appears to have been granted as Mokhasa in 1747 by the then holder of the Zemindari Jaggannatha Appa Rao. The original grant has not been produced but the terms of the grant can be gathered from Ex. I which is an extract from the Inam Register. The Inam is classed as personal Inam. The Ayakal is said to be 1781-85, Poramboke 542-54 and the Inams 50 acres, 91 cents. Under the column of the description of Inam, the entry is Bhata Vritti. The original grantees were Desapandayas. It is admitted before us that Desapandayas were the persons who were doing the duty of collecting the revenue. Under the heading of tenure, the entry is : "The tenure is Chaturbhagam now also settled on the same tenure on produce 450-0-0." The grant is said to be hereditary by prescription and is said to have been granted by Jaggannatha Appa Rao in Fasli 1156 or A. D. 1747. The East India Company acquired the Government of the Circars in 1768 and the grant, therefore, was one made not only before the Permanent Settlement but before the acquisition by the Company of the Government of the Circars. "Chatur Bhagam" is defined in Wilson's Glossary as the fourth part of the annual crop received by Government from the holders of certain alienated lands. In Sri Rajah Sobhanadhri Appa Rao Bahadur v. Sri Rajah Venkatanarasimha Appa Rao Bahadur (1) the tenure known as 'Mokhasa' has been defined as one which is created by an assignment of village or land to an individual either rent free or at a low quit rent on condition of service.

It is argued for the appellant that the grant was on favourable quit rent which means something less than the actual melvaram which the landlord would be entitled to but for the grant and that in case of Chatur Bhagam Mokhasas, the grant was on condition that only a fourth of the produce was paid to the Zemindar, that the very fact that the Mokhasa was granted for Bhata Vritti, that is, service, and that the grantees were Desapandayas or Collectors of Revenue shows that the benefit to the grantees by reason of the grant of the Mokhasa was the difference between the rent which would ordinarily have been paid and the fourth which the grantees have to pay. It seems to us to be clear that the grant being a pre-Settlement grant, it would not form part of the Zemindari unless it can be brought under any of the clauses of section 3, clause (2) of the Estates Land Act, and for this purpose it is necessary to see whether at the time of the Permanent Settlement, this pre-Settlement Inam was treated as part of the Zemindari assets and the income taken into account for the purpose of the grant of the samail. In this connection, reference has to be made to Regulation XXV of 1802. Section 4 of the Regulation runs as follows :—"The Government having reserved to itself the entire exercise of its discretion of continuing or abolishing, temporarily or permanently, the articles of revenue included, according to the custom and practice of the country, under the several heads of salt and saltpetre of the Sayar, or duties by sea or land—of the abkari, or tax on the sale of spirituous liquors and intoxicating drugs—of the excise on articles of consumption—of all taxes personal and professional, as well as those derived from markets, fairs or bazaars—of lakhiraj lands (or lands exempt from the payment of public revenue), and of all other lands paying only favourable quit rents, the permanent assessment of the land-tax shall be made exclusively of the said articles now recited."

The contention of Mr. Ramadoss is that the Mokhasa being a pre-Settlement inam granted on favourable quit rent, it must have been excluded by section 4 at the time when the revenue of the zemindari was taken into account for the purpose of the Permanent Settlement and that, even if it was included, it could not affect the rights of the Mokhassadars as such inclusion would be opposed to the provisions of the Permanent Settlement Regulation. Reliance has been placed on Kuppu Reddi Nookayya v. Dheemanna (2). In that case the Zemindar of Pittapur granted in 1880 an Inam of certain lands in the Zemindari. It was made free of Kattubadi and purported to be sarva dumbala or absolute. It was held that the Inam was not part of the Pittapur Zemindari as it was a pre-Settlement Inam excluded from the assessment of the Zemindari. Oldfield and Ramesam, JJ., after referring to Regulation XXV of 1802, were of opinion that in view of the unqualified terms of section 4 there was no relevancy in the enquiry whether the Inam was in fact included in the assets of the Zemindari on which the peishwash was fixed with regard to the Circuit Committee's accounts prepared before 1786. In another Second Appeal, Varhaliah v. Venkatasuryanarayana (3), Ayling and Odgers, JJ., held that though the fact of an Inam having been granted prior to 1802 raised a presumption that the lands granted were excluded from the Permanent Settlement, that presumption was capable of being rebutted. As pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Secretary of State for India v. Rajah of Venkatagiri (1), the draft of section 4 can by no means be commended for preciseness or lucidity. Objection is now taken by Mr. Ramadoss that, even assuming that the income from this Mokhasa was taken into account for the Permanent Settlement, it should be ignored because of the express provisions of the Regulation. The effect of section 4 was considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council at p. 875 of the report. After pointing out that, so far as the actual settlement of the Venkatagiri Zemindari was concerned, the Government fixed a definite specific assessment on the whole Zemindari irrespective of the particular assets derived from each particular unit of property within the estate, their Lordships observe: "The question now is whether the action of the Government was, in view of the provisions of Regulation XXV of 1802, valid or otherwise. As already stated, Counsel for the appellant have strongly argued that, in view of the provisions of section 4 of that Regulation, excluding Lakhiraj lands (or lands exempt from the payment of public revenue) and all other lands paying only favourable quit rents from the permanent assessment of the land tax, it was not competent for the Governor-in-Council to grant sanad of the character that is in issue in this case." Their Lordships of the Privy Council were of opinion that the question had to be decided with reference to sections 3 and 4 of the Act and the conditions of the sanad and that where the sanad contained no reference to Lakhiraj lands, section 4 could have no application and the assessment fixed upon the Zemindari by virtue of the arrangements adopted in 1802 was upon a basis quite different from that provided in section 4 of the Regulation.

The question, therefore, in this case cannot be decided without reference to the terms of the sanad granted by the Zemindar and to what actually took place at the time of the Permanent Settlement. We are of opinion that where, at the time of the Permanent Settlement, lands which the Government might have excluded from assessment by reason of the various grounds set forth in section 4 of the Regulation were as a matter of fact included in calculating the assessment payable by the Zemindar, and where both the Government and the Zemindar from 1802 have acted on the footing that the Inam forms part of the Zemindari, the tenants who were subsequently introduced into the property have no right to question the acts of the persons entitled at the time of the sanad to enter into those arrangements.

Reliance has been placed by the Subordinate Judge on the fact that at the time of the Inam Settlement an attempt was made to enfranchise the whole village but that after some enquiry the Government gave up the attempt and the matter went up to the Secretary of State with the result that the enfranchisement proceedings were given up. It is argued that the fact that the Government gave up enfranchising the village after so much correspondence shows that the income of the village must have been included in the assets of the Zemindari. It was stated before us that the order of the Government at the time of the 'Settlement was subpoenaed for but that the order was not filed owing to objections taken by the Board of Revenue. As it appeared that copies were obtained by the Zemindar and were filed in other proceedings relating to the same village, and as Ex. II which is a judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam in the A.S. No. 466 of 1912 relating to another portion of the same village and where the Government order is referred to, was filed without any objection in both the lower Courts, we thought it desirable in the interests of justice to call for the Government Order No. 2374, dated 24th December, 1861. The order of the Government and the connected papers have now been produced. The letter from Mr. Taylor, the Inam Commissioner, to the Government, dated July 23rd, 1860 refers to the Mokhasas of the old Masulipatam District and it states that the full value of the Mokhasas in the Nuzvid Zemindari was included in the accounts of the Permanent Settlement. After dealing with the several reports he states as follows:—"It was necessary to devote the most careful scrutiny to the above references as the original nature of these Mokhasas, and the circumstance of their being included in the assets of the Zemindaries had not been generally understood. The villages of the Zemindari Estates are distinguished on the back on the permanent Kaul as Seri (i. e., under the direct management of the Zemindar) Mokhasas and Aggaharams. But this distinction affords no ground for classing the Mokhasas with the Lakairaj lands excluded by the sanad; whilst a different conclusion is fully established by the accounts upon which the Permanent Settlement was based, and which ought to explain the terms of the Kaul. Should the Government concur in the justice of these observations, I submit we possess no reversionary interest in the Mokhasas nor can we claim to derive a quit-rent by their enfranchisement." The Government on the 11th of August 1860, after referring to Mr. Taylor's letter, were of opinion that as the question was one of importance, the letter of Mr. Taylor should be referred to the Board of Revenue for report. An exhaustive enquiry was made by the Board though the Collector and the Board of Revenue agreed with the opinions of the Inam Commissioner and the Collector that Mr. Taylor was right and the Mokhasas could not be enfranchised. On the 24th of December 1861 the Government passed the following order:—"In their order of 11th August 1860, No. 1335, the Government referred to the Board of Revenue for report a letter from the Inam Commissioner relating to the Mokhasa villages of the Zemindaries in the old Masulipatam District. Mr. Taylor was of opinion that these villages were not excluded from the assets of the estates, as had usually been supposed, and that, therefore, they would not come under his operations.

"2. The Board were at first doubtful on the matter and resolved to refer the subject for enquiry by the Collector. The result is now submitted with the proceedings recorded above.

"3. Mr. Thornhill has conclusively shown that Mr. Taylor was correct in his surmise and the Board now agree both with him and the Inam Commissioner that Government cannot claim the reversionary right to the villages, and, therefore, that the rules for redeeming that right are inapplicable to them.

"4. In this view the Government Concur."

It is now clear that these Mokhasas were not excluded from the Zemindari at the time of the Permanent Settlement and that they were treated as part of the Zemindari. They are, therefore, part of an "estate" within the meaning of the Estates Land Act and Civil Courts have no jurisdiction.

As regards the exchange alleged by the plaintiffs, we do not think that it would, even if true, change the character of the plaint lands. It has not been shown that the consent of the Zemindar had been obtained. The question is concluded by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Parthasarathy Appa Rao v. Raja Bommadeva Satyanarayana (5). The acts of the Inam Commissioner are not by themselves sufficient to affect the Zemindar: [see

It is argued that the plaintiff is not a landholder within the meaning of section 3, cl. (5) of the Estates Land Act as he is a minor Inamdar in a Mokhasa. It has been held by a Full Bench of this Court in Brahmayya v. Ackirazu (7) that such an Inamdar is a landholder within the meaning of the section. This decision is binding on us.

The decision of the District Munsif and the Subordinate Judge are right. The appeals fail and are dismissed with costs.

The provisions of r. 7 of O. An adjustment of a decree by a Collector is voidable at the option of a minor, under r. 7 of O. XXXII if it has not been sanctioned by the Court. [p. 292, col. 2.]

Till it is avoided it is a subsisting adjustment and the decree-holder is bound to mention it in the application for execution under clause (a) of rule 11 (2) of O. XXI. An omission to mention such an adjustment vitiates the application and it is not in accordance with law. [p. 292, col. 2.]

It is not necessary that an application to the Collector for certifying an adjustment of a decree should be signed by all the decree-holders nor is it necessary that there should be any written application at all. [p. 298, col. 1.]

The Collector is invested with powers of recording the adjustment of a decree. [p. 298, col. 1.]

An application for sanctioning and recording an adjustment made by the judgment-debtor and decree-holders is an application to the Court to take a step-in-aid of execution of a subsisting decree. [p. 293, col. 2.]

Appeal from the order of the Additional District Judge, Narasingpur, dated the 11th March 1922, in execution case arising out of Civil Suit No. 12 of 1908, decided on the 24th January 1914.

Mr. N. G. Bose, 'R. B. for the Appellant.

Messrs. V. Bose and A. C. De, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A final decree for sale on a mortgage was passed on the 21st of October 1916 against the appellant Pera Bai and others in favour of the respondent Bhawani Prasad and four others. Two of these four were then and are still minors and members of a joint Hindu family along with Bhawani Prasad who was the manager of the family and had made them co-plaintiffs with himself in the suit as their next friend. The amount to be recovered by sale of the property was Rs. 43,549-9-5. In 1917 the mortgaged villages were attached and the decree was then transferred for further execution to the Collector. During the proceedings before the Collector the parties arrived at an agreement under which Pera Bai paid Rs. 20,000 and promised to pay the remainder in annual instalments of Rs. 2,000 with interest and the decree-holders agreed that the village of Khurpa alone should remain as security for the payment of those instalments, the rest being released from the mortgage lien. This adjustment was recorded by the Collector on the 29th of May 1919 according to the provisions of rule 2 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code,

PERABAI v. BHAWANI PRASHAD

A payment of Rs. 2,500 was duly made in June 1920, and doubtless punctual payments would have been made of the instalments that fell due in June of each of the two following years but for the proceedings out of which this appeal has arisen.

The proceedings were initiated by an application made on the 11th of April 1921 for execution of the decree as it stood originally. The petition does mention the payments of Rs. 4,250 on the 26th of August 1919 and Rs. 15,750 on the 25th of September 1919 and Rs. 2,500 on the 6th of June 1920 made by Pera Bai and one of Rs. 850-9-0 on a date not stated made by Rao Sheobara Singh in partial discharge of a liability under the same decree which is different from that of Pera Bai's. There is, however, no mention at all of the adjustment by the agreement that the rest of the debt should be paid by instalments. Pera Bai naturally pleaded the adjustment, to which the reply of the decree-holders was that the agreement was never finally made and in any case it was not binding on the two minor decree-holders on account of its never having been expressly sanctioned by the Collector on their behalf. It was admitted later, and is not now denied, that the agreement was made and was duly recorded by the Collector, and the learned Additional District Judge found that the adjustment was not binding on the minor decree-holders in that it had not been expressly, or even impliedly sanctioned by the Collector, holding that r. 7 of O. XXXII of the Civil Procedure Code applies to execution proceedings as well as to pending suits. He, therefore, ordered, with an expression of regret at the dishonourable conduct of the decree-holders with which it is impossible not to sympathise, that execution should proceed.

The application of the provisions of r. 7 of O. XXXII to proceedings in execution was affirmed by the Bombay High Court in Virupakshappa v. Shidappa (1) and by the Madras High Court in Arunachellam Chetty v. Ramanadhan Chetty (2) and Shaik Davul Rowther v. Paramasami Pillai (3) and is not now disputed. Pera Bai's appeal against the order was supported mainly on the ground that the compromise did not require the sanction of the Court to make it binding on the minors because it was made on their behalf by the manager of the joint Hindu family of which they are members; his being shown formally and unnecessarily as their guardian for the purposes of this suit in addition makes no difference. It is just this proposition that was rejected by the Privy Council in Ganesha Row v. Tuljaram Row (4) where their Lordships said: "How far the acts of a father or managing member may affect a minor, who is a party to the suit represented by another person as next friend or guardian ad litem, is a question which does not arise in the case, and their Lordships are not called upon to express an opinion on it. But they consider it to be clear that when he himself is the next friend or guardian of the minor his powers are controlled by the provisions of the law and that he cannot do any act in his capacity of father or managing member which he is debarred from doing as next friend or guardian without leave of the Court. To hold otherwise would be to defeat the object of the enactment."

In this Court, however, another point arose. The adjustment of the decree having been duly recorded by the Collector was voidable at the option of the minors under rule 7 of Order XXXII, because it had not been sanctioned by the Court. But till it was avoided it was a subsisting adjustment, and by clause (e) of rule 11 (2) of Order XXI it had to be mentioned in the application for execution. This the decree-holders deliberately refrained from doing, and their application is, therefore, not in accordance with law. They were given an adjournment in order to consider and argue this point and it was explained to them that if it prevailed they would get nothing, as their application for execution would be dismissed and further execution of the decree would then be barred by time, but this could be avoided by admitting the contentions of the appellant as originally set out, when it would be unnecessary to raise the question at all. The admission would have to be in the form of a compromise, to be examined and sanctioned by this Court on behalf of the minors, but there could not be difficulty about that, and Pera Bai, in striking contrast to their attitude all along declared her willingness to pay what is justly due by her and to waive this plea, which may be somewhat technical but is very much less so than that on which the decree-holders have succeeded so far.

The decree-holders elected at first, however, to take all or nothing, doubtless hoping still to get all, and it was strenuously but ineffectively and hopelessly argued for them that their application for execution is not liable to dismissal on account of their failure to mention the adjustment in it. Something was said about Pera Bai's application to the Collector to record the adjustment not being signed by the fifth decree-holder Tarachand or on his behalf, but only by an agent of Bhawani Prasad and his sons. There was no need for the signature of any one of the decree-holders on the application, or indeed for any written application at all; all the members of both parties were before the Collector in the proceedings either personally or by representation when he recorded the adjustment on the application of Pera Bai and all but one of them, and all of them, therefore, admitted it. It was further faintly urged that the Collector had no power to record the adjustment. That is, however, undoubtedly one of "the powers which the Court might exercise in the execution of the decree," with which, as was explained in Harlal v. Narayan (5), the Collector was invested.

After the judgement in this case was written but before it was delivered the decree-holders appreciated the hopelessness, if not the dishonesty, of the position they had taken up and accepted the terms offered to them by Pera Bai, that is, that they should be allowed to execute their decree as modified by the compromise. Both parties have accordingly put in a petition asking that this should be done. For this purpose it is necessary, first, for the Court to sanction the adjustment of decree on behalf of the minors. The terms of the compromise are as follows. Pera Bai is to pay within three months a sum of Rs. 6,000 with interest at 3 per cent. per annum on the three instalments that would have already fallen due under the original arrangement, up to the dates fixed in that arrangement. The total sum so payable is Rs. 8,097-3-0. She will pay a further instalment of Rs. 2,000 by the 1st of June 1924 with interest at 3 per cent. on the amount of the original debt then due, that is on Rs. 15,419-13-0. The balance of Rs. 13,419-13-0 will be paid in six instalments of Rs. 2,000 each and one of Rs. 1,419-13-0 on the 1st of June of each year after 1924, together with interest at 3 per cent. on the amount of the original debt still due on the date of each payment. In case of two successive defaults in the payment of instalments, she will be liable to pay the whole amount still due in a lump sum. The village of Khurpa alone is to remain liable to sale in satisfaction of this debt.

It is obvious that this arrangement is very favourable to the minors, as the only alternative is the practical wiping out of the whole decree. We accordingly sanction it. The order of the lower Court is set aside and the application for execution is dismissed on the satisfaction of the decree by adjustment. It will be for the decree-holders to apply again for execution according to the terms of the adjustment of the decree as soon as any further payments fall due. They must pay all the costs incurred by Pera Bai in this appeal and in the lower Court. The sum so due to her will be taken in part payment of Rs. 6,000 she has to pay within three months.

From something that has been said it is apparently necessary to point out that it is no longer open to either party to plead that execution of the decree is barred by time for any of the reasons mentioned in this judgment. The application of the 22nd of September 1923 for sanctioning and recording the adjustment, which is made by all the decree-holders along with Pera Bai, is an application to the Court to take a step-in-aid of execution of a subsisting decree. It is not necessary to correct the formal defect in the last application for execution by going through the formality of amending it. That can be regarded as having been done.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 68, 80, scope of—Official Receiver when can deal with properties of insolvent—Invalid sale, application for setting aside—Limitation.

Under section 80 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, the power to make the vesting order is not delegated to the Official Receiver. [p. 294, col. 2.]

The Official Receiver does not get a right to deal with the properties of the insolvent without an express vesting order. [p. 295, col. 1.]

Section 68 of the Provincial Insolvency Act presupposes that the decision is by a Receiver properly appointed and does not apply where the sale is invalid as being made by a person who was not authorised to sell. [p. 295, col. 1.]

An insolvency petition having been filed in the District Court, the District Judge made an endorsement on it that it was "transferred for disposal to the Official Receiver." No further orders were made by the Court in the case. After the adjudication of the insolvent the Official Receiver sold two properties belonging to the insolvent and two creditors, therefore, applied to the District Judge to get the two sales set aside. The District Judge dismissed their application on the ground that they were out of time having been filed more than 21 days from the date of the two sales. The creditors appealed to the High Court:

Held, that the order of the District Judge could not be taken to include a vesting order made in anticipation of the adjudication of the insolvent and the Receiver had, therefore, no power to deal with the properties [p. 296, col. 2.]

Appeals against the orders of the District Court of Kistna.

JUDGMENT.

Krishnan, J.—These are three appeals by two creditors of one Ramakrishnayya, an insolvent, who sought to get set aside by the lower Court two sales by the Official Receiver of Kistna, of two items of properties belonging to the insolvent. Their applications were dismissed by the learned District Judge on the ground that it was out of time under section 68 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the applications having been filed more than 21 days from the date of the two sales.

In appeal it is argued before us by the learned Vakil for the creditors that section 68 does not apply to this case as the sales cannot be considered to have been made by a properly authorized Receiver but by some one who had no power to deal with the properties. The argument is that, after the adjudication of the insolvent in this case, no order vesting the property of the insolvent in the Official Receiver was made, and without such an order the Official Receiver gets no right to deal with the insolvent's properties. What happened in this case was, when the insolvency petition was filed by the insolvent in the District Court, the District Judge made an endorsement on that petition that it was "transferred for disposal to the Official Receiver." It is not denied by the other side that the District Court made no further orders in the case. The Official Receiver has been authorised under section 80 to hear an insolvency petition and make the order of adjudication: but under that section, the power to make the vesting order is not delegated to the Official Receiver; and it is clear from the authorities which have been cited before us, Vythilinga Padayachi v. Ponnuswamy Padayachi (1) Muthuswamy Swamiar v. Souner Kandiar (2) and Official Receiver of Trichinopoly v. Somasundaram Chettiar (3), that the Official Receiver does not get a right to deal with the properties of the insolvent without an express vesting order by the District Judge. Such an order has to be made under the Act by the District Judge after the adjudication of the insolvent. It is, therefore, quite clear that the argument that the endorsement made by the Judge on the Insolvency Petition is tantamount to vesting the property of the insolvent in the Official Receiver cannot be accepted. I agree with my learned brother that the wording of the order itself does not convey the idea of any vesting at all. The order in the case cannot be taken to include a vesting order made in anticipation of the adjudication of the insolvent; for even if we suppose that the District Judge meant, when he transferred the insolvency application to the Official Receiver, to make him the Receiver of the properties, it would be illegal. There is thus a difficulty in the way of the respondents. We must take it that the sales in the present case were made by a person who was not authorised to sell and are thus invalid. In a case like that, it is impossible to hold that the limitation under section 68 will apply, as section 68 presupposes that the decision is by a Receiver properly appointed. It follows, therefore, that the three appeals must be allowed, the two sales must be set aside, and the cases sent back to the District Judge for a proper vesting order being made and further proceedings in insolvency conducted thereafter. The petitioners-appellants are entitled to their costs in this Court and in the Court below to be paid from the insolvent's estate.

Odgers, J.—These are appeals against the Order of the District Judge of Kistna on an application by two creditors of an Insolvent, called Thurlapathi Ramakrishnayya, praying to set aside two sales by the Official Receiver held on 27th August 1919 and 26th February 1920. The District Judge held the application was out of time as having been made more than days after the sales. The Court, on the application of Thurlapathi Ramakrishnayya to be adjudicated an insolvent, passed the following order:—"Transferred to the Official Receiver, Kistna, for disposal," and it is contended by the respondent that this has the effect of transferring the whole matter to the Official Receiver and thus of incidentally appointing him Receiver of the Insolvent's property. This contention is necessary in face of the following decisions: Vaithilinga Padayachi v. Ponnuswamy Padayachi (1), which held that the property of an insolvent does not ipso facto vest in the Official Receiver but an order must be passed in every case appointing a Receiver and that, failure to do this, entails as a consequence failure of title in those purchasing from an Official Receiver not so appointed. In the present case there was no special appointment unless the order above set out can be so construed. Vythilinga Padayachi v. Ponnuswamy Padayachi (1) followed earlier authorities, Muthu Swamy Swamiar v. Souner Kandiar (2) and Official Receiver of Trichinopoly v. Somasundaram Chettiar (3). I was a party to the decision in Vythilinga Padayachi v. Ponnuswamy Padayachi (1), and I adhere to my decision there. Therefore, I must hold that unless the order appointed the Official Receiver, Receiver of the insolvent's property, there was no Receiver appointed in this case and the sales by a person purporting to act as such would be void. Now it is said that the Court by its order set out above practically made a vesting order under the Act. What the Court did was to transfer the petition to the Official Receiver "for disposal," I do not think that the fact that the petitioner (debtor) asked that his immoveable property should be sold and his debts settled can give any other or wider meaning to the order of transfer. The Court has certain powers of delegation—section 80 of the Act V of 1920 provides that the High Court may delegate to official Receivers certain specified powers; inter alia, the hearing of insolvency petitions, examination of debtors and the making of orders of adjudication. The Official Receiver has no delegated power to appoint a Receiver. The respondent contends that the procedure prescribed for the Court and for Official Receivers when acting under their delegated powers are different and that the latter are in fact under such circumstances Courts in themselves. Subba Ayyar v. Ramaswami Aiyengar, Official Receiver, Madras (4) is cited as an authority for this proposition. There the order was: 'The petition is transferred to the Official Receiver for adjudication and for the administration of the estate. The learned Judges held that the combined effect of section 20 (c) and (e) and section 23 of the Act of 1907 (section 59 (c) and (e) (and section 58 of the present Act) was that the order to administer enabled the Official Receiver to sell the insolvent's estate. They distinguished the case in Muthusami Swamier v. Souner Kandian (2) while deploring the deficiency in the Act which does not provide that immediately on adjudication the estate shall vest in the Official Receiver. Their decision was that the Official Receiver was the agent of the Court and as under section 23 (=s. 58) the latter has all the powers of a Receiver, it was capable [section 20=section 59 (e)] of appointing an agent to take any proceedings sanctioned by the Court and that the Court might under section 20 (a)=section 59 (a) sell the property of the insolvent through such agent. The difficulty as to appointment of a Receiver was thus obviated in this case. The learned Judges did not give an opinion on the other argument advanced in that case, viz., that the order of transfer may be construed as an order under section 18 (=section 56) vesting the property in the Receiver to take effect if and when adjudication took place. It will be observed that the order of transfer in the present case did not contain the words "for the administration of the estates," and this, in my opinion, is sufficient to distinguish it from the case in Subba Aiyar v. Ramaswami Aiyengar, Official Receiver, Madras (4). The present petition was not even transferred for adjudication but merely for disposal. I am unable to agree that the transfer in the present case had any further operation than to transfer to the Official Receiver for disposal of the petition for adjudication and I think the Official Receiver under his delegated powers under section 80 was functus officio when he has carried out the duties delegated to him, in this case the disposal of the petition. The next contention by petitioner is that section 68 applies to this case; and that the Official Receiver was certainly a Receiver in this case though one of his acts is impugned. If he was never legally appointed a Receiver, he is a mere intermeddler with the property and, if so, it is said the District Judge had no power to set aside the sales under the Act (cf. Avanashi Chetty v. Muthukaruppan Chetty (5) there being no person aggrieved by an act or decision of the Receiver'. The answer to this appears to me to be that in Official Receiver of Trichinopoly v. Somasundaram Chettiar (3); the sale was either set aside or declared to be void—it is not clear which. In it was held that defendant had no title to the property. Both cases were under the Insolvency Act and both were cases of sales by Official Receivers not legally appointed Receivers in the respective insolvencies. This seems to me to conclude the respondents' contention on this point. As to limitation—section 68 prescribes a period of 21 days for an application by a person aggrieved by act or decision of the Receiver. It is quite clear that a Receiver means one legally appointed, i. e., one appointed under the provisions of section 56 of the Act. I am, therefore, of opinion that the Official Receiver not having been appointed Receiver in this Insolvency, the sales by him are void and ineffective to pass any title to the purchasers and these Civil Miscellaneous Appeals must be allowed with costs.

I agree with my learned brother in the order he proposes.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XX, r. 71—Contract Act (IX of 1871), s. 280—Auction-sale, parties to—Auction-purchaser's default—Resale resulting in deficit—Judgment-debtor, right of—Plea of agency when can be sustained—Interest whether can be recovered.

GANGABATTULA KANTHAMMA V. MANCHIRAJU REDDI

In a Court auction-sale, the auction purchaser is one party to the contract; the other party to the contract is not the judgment-debtor or the decree-holder but the Court itself. In selling property in Court-auction, the Court acts under the statutory powers given to it by the Code and not as the agent of any party and the contract that is made when the bid is accepted and confirmed by the Court is one between the Court on the one side and the auction-purchaser whose bid is accepted on the other. [p. 297, col. 2; p. 298, col. 1.]

Therefore, where on account of the action of an auction-purchaser in not completing a Court sale by depositing 25 per cent of the purchase money a resale is ordered and a deficit is caused, O. XXI, r. 71 of the Civil Procedure Code empowers the Court to collect, at the instance of the judgment-debtor, the deficit that has been caused in a summary manner by way of execution. [p. 298, col. 1.]

Mackinnon, Mackenzie & Co. v. Tang, Moir & Co., 5 B. 584; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 385; Tyulpore Sugar Co. v. Mul Raj, 65 Ind. Cas. 473, distinguished.

The defaulting auction-purchaser, however, is not liable for interest on the deficit amount from the date of the sale to the date of the order of the Court directing him to repay. [p. 298, col. 2.]

The auction-purchaser at a Court sale is personally liable to the judgment debtor for the deficit on a resale. He cannot plead that he was merely the agent of some other person at the auction. [p. 298, col. 2.]

In such cases before cl. (2), of s. 230. of the Contract Act can be excluded it must be alleged and proved by the party wishing to take advantage of s. 230, cl. (1) that when making the bid or before doing so, he has informed the Court or the Court officer who was acting on behalf of the Court in selling the property, that he was making the bid only as the agent of some named third party. [p. 298, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Cocanada, dated the 5th September 1922.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Appellant.

Messrs. B. Jagannada Das and C. Rama Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the appellate order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Cocanada in an appeal to him from an order of the District Munsif of Cocanada in an execution proceeding. The appellant before us was the judgment-debtor under a decree passed by the District Munsif's Court which was under execution, and her property was advertised for sale in Court auction. The sale was actually held by the Nazir, the Court Officer, in the usual way and the 1st respondent bid for the property and offered a price of Rs. 4,600 which was accepted by the Court Officer and the bid was knocked down in his favour. Under O. XXI, r. 84, Civil Procedure Code, the purchaser is bound to pay 25 per cent. of the purchase-money on the completion of the auction. The 1st respondent made default in making the payment and, in consequence, under the same rule, the property was again put up for sale. This time the property was knocked down for a lower sum, namely, Rs. 3,750, thus leading to a deficit of Rs. 850. The judgment-debtor applied to the Court under O. XXI, r. 71, Civil Procedure Code, that the auction-purchaser, the 1st respondent, should be made liable for this deficit and should be called upon to pay the amount of the deficit into Court, and the District Munsif passed an order in her favour. The appeal from this order was heard by the Subordinate Judge, and he was of opinion that the 1st respondent might have bid for the property as the agent of the 2nd respondent and that as an agent he would not be responsible to pay this deficit amount under clause (1) of section 230 of the Contract Act, which says that an agent cannot personally enforce contracts which he has entered into on behalf of his principal nor can he be personally bound by them. No evidence had been taken on this point in the first Court and, therefore, the Subordinate Judge remanded the case to the first Court to take evidence in order to ascertain whether the 1st respondent was actually the agent of the 2nd respondent as he subsequently alleged after the sale was over; and it was pleaded that, in any case, even if 1st respondent was an agent as he did not disclose the name of his principal at the time of the bid, clause (1) would not apply. The Subordinate Judge, thinking that if the judgment-debtor whose property was sold in auction did actually know that the 1st respondent was bidding as the agent of the 2nd respondent, that would take the case out of clause (2) of section 230 of the Contract Act, directed evidence on that point also. In taking this latter view he treated a sale in Court auction as a contract between the owner of the property sold, namely, the judgment-debtor, and the auction-purchaser, apparently considering that the Court and its Officer were merely acting as agents for the judgment-debtor for selling the property. We are unable to accept this view which he had adopted. Where in a Court-auction a property is sold, the auction-purchaser is one party to the contract, but the other party to the contract is not, in our view, the judgment-debtor or the decree-holder but the Court itself. In selling property in Court-auction, the Court acts under the statutory powers given to it by the Code and not as the agent of any party and the contract that is made when the bid is accepted and confirmed by the Court is one between the Court on the one side and the auction-purchaser whose bid is accepted on the other: and, therefore, before clause (2) of section 230 of the Contract Act can be excluded, it must be alleged and proved by the party wishing to take advantage of section 230, clause (1) that when making the bid or before doing so, he had informed the Court or the Court officer who was acting on behalf of the Court in selling the property that he was making the bid only as the agent of some named third party. It would then be open to the Court Officer, the Nazir, either to accept his bids or decline them if he is not fully satisfied that he had a proper power-of-attorney to make the bid. In this case it is not pretended that there was any power-of-attorney with the 1st respondent or that any power-of-attorney was shown to the Nazir, nor is it even alleged that before the sale took place the 1st respondent informed the Nazir or the Court that he was bidding as an agent. Therefore, even if we assume that the 1st respondent was really the agent of the 2nd respondent we have here a case where the agent did not disclose the name of his principal, and did not even inform the other party, the Court, that he was acting as agent of a principal. The question whether the judgment-debtor knew or not that the 1st respondent was bidding as an agent of the 2nd respondent is, therefore, quite immaterial. The Court was entitled to enforce the contract against the 1st respondent personally and as the 1st respondent made himself personally liable for the deficit that has been caused by his action in not completing the sale by depositing 25 per cent of the purchase, money, O. XXI, r. 71, Civil Procedure Code, gave the Court power, at the instance of the judgment-debtor, to collect the deficit that has been caused in a summary manner by way of execution. In these circumstances, we think that the order of the District Munsif was right and that there is no object in taking evidence which the Subordinate Judge has directed to be taken as to whether the 1st respondent was really the agent of the 2nd respondent or not, and whether the judgment-debtor knew of it, for even assuming that he was an agent, as he never disclosed to the Court Officer that he was bidding as an agent till a long time after the bid was offered and accepted, he is liable for the deficit personally. Whatever rights there may be between him and the 2nd respondent he may enforce as advised, but they need not be considered now at all. The order of the Court directing him to pay the money into Court is, therefore, correct.

The ruling relied upon by the Subordinate Judge in Mackinnon, Mackenzie & Co., v. Lang Moir & Co. (1) followed in Lahore in Lyallpur Sugar Co. v. Mulraj (2) is not relevant here, for it is only in the view that the judgment-debtor is a party to the contract of the auction-sale that they became of any importance and necessitate a finding on the question whether the judgment-debtor did actually know that the 1st respondent was acting as the agent of the 2nd respondent.

There is one other small point which has been dealt with in the argument and that is the question whether the defaulting auction-purchaser, the first respondent, is liable for interest on the deficit amount from the date of the sale to the date of the order of the District Munsif directing him to repay. There is nothing in O. XXI, r. 71, Civil Procedure Code, that speaks of interest and we think, therefore, that he is not liable for interest between those dates. Of course, he is liable for interest after the date of the order of payment. With this variation, we must allow the appeal of the appellant, set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge, and restore that of the District Munsif.

As regards costs, the 1st respondent will pay the costs of the appellant throughout. As regards the 2nd respondent's costs the claim against him was expressly given up by the appellant in the first Court and, therefore, there was no necessity to make him a party in this appeal before us. As we are giving no relief against him, we think he is entitled to the costs of this appeal from the appellant.

JOHN E. C. BRUNTON—RESPONDENT.

Partnership—Contract between parties—Disclosure of material facts necessary—Voidable contract—Election, right of bar exercised—Laches, doctrine of.

A contract which is liable to be avoided by reason of misrepresentation, fraud, non-disclosure of material facts, or undue influence continues valid till the party affected has determined his election by avoiding it. So long as he has made no election, he retains the right to determine it either way, subject to this that if an innocent third party has acquired an interest in the property, or, if in consequence of his delay the position even of the wrong doer is affected, it will preclude him from exercising his right to rescind.

Where one partner enters into a contract with another in relation to the interests of the partnership, it is his duty to make a full disclosure of all the material facts within his knowledge, which would assist the other party in deciding whether to enter into the contract or not.

Clough v. London North-Western Railway Company, (1874) 7 Ex. 26 at pp. 84, 85; 41 L. J. Ex. 17; 45 L. T. 708; 20 W. R. 189, followed.

The doctrine of laches in Courts of Equity is not an arbitrary or a technical doctrine. Where it would be practically unjust to give a remedy either because the party has, by his conduct, done that which might fairly be regarded as equivalent to a waiver of it, or whereby his conduct and neglect he has, though perhaps not waiving that remedy, yet put the other party in a situation in which it would not be reasonable to place him if the remedy were afterwards to be asserted in either of these cases lapse of time and delay are most material. But in every case if an argument against relief which otherwise would be justified, is founded upon mere delay, that delay of course not amounting to a bar of any statute of limitations, the validity of that defence must be tried upon principles substantially equitable. Two circumstances always important in such cases are the length of the delay and nature of the acts done during the interval, which might affect either party and cause a balance of justice or injustice in taking the one course or the other, so far as it relates to the remedy. Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Kumaraswamy Sastri, dated the 15th December 1920.

Mr. Nugent Grant, for the Appellant.
Mr. Cornish, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

The Chief Justice.—I have had the opportunity of reading the judgment of Coutts-Trotter, J., with which I so fully agree that I can say what I have to say shortly. This is an appeal from the judgment of Kumaraswamy Sastri, J., in a suit brought by Mr. Jack Brunton against his step-brother Mr. William Brunton. William Brunton was a partner with his father in an engineering business at Cochin. His mother had died and his father married again. On the father's death, William Brunton entered into a partnership with his step-mother Mrs. Rita Brunton, the mother of the plaintiff, Jack. By the terms of the partnership deed Mrs. Brunton was entitled to $\frac{2}{3}$ of the capital and William Brunton to $\frac{1}{3}$; but they were each entitled to half of the profits and liable for half of the losses. There were provisions in the deed for the equalization of capital between the two. Time went on and the business prospered under the management of William Brunton. Throughout, he was on most friendly and affectionate terms with the step-mother. From time to time the business required further capital and this was provided by the partners on what was called current account. His contributions were much larger than hers, so that she retained a larger capital account in the business, and he a larger current account. The current account carried interest but the capital account did not. In June 1916 two proposals were made by William Brunton to Mrs. Brunton—one for turning the business into a limited company, and the other for equalization of their capital. The proposals are contained in a letter dated 24th June 1916. I have no doubt that Mrs. Brunton was an intelligent woman and quite capable of appreciating questions of business. The company plan she would have none of, and said so quite plainly. She considered the question of equalization and, though it seems to have been doubted by the learned Judge, I have myself no doubt that she accepted in writing the terms of the equalization of capital. That this is so is clear from the evidence of the defendant and of Mr. D'Cruz, an old and trustworthy employee of the firm, who produced from Mr. Brunton saying that he had from her agreeing, and giving the instructions. The next balance accordingly prepared on the new basis. There can be no doubt that this was due and there can be no question of mistake, and I am quite satisfied that she, in fact, wrote giving her consent. Why she consented I think is clear from Jack Brunton's evidence, for he says that, in October, 1916, he tried to dissuade her from affirming what had been done by signing the new balance sheet, but she said that it was fair to William, and that she had done it. I think also that she may have been partly influenced to do so by William Brunton's letter pointing out that she would benefit in income because by transferring his money from the current account to the capital account, the firm would no longer have to pay interest on the amount. It was the plaintiff's case that she consented in January 1917 when she was in a bad state of health, and that there was undue influence and concealment of material facts. The learned Judge found, and I am quite clear that he was right, that nothing of the sort happened in January 1919 but that everything was completed by the previous October. On all this part of the case the evidence of the plaintiff and his wife is most unreliable, as they obviously confuse a dispute or discussion about granting to the plaintiff an unlimited power-of-attorney with the question of the signing of the balance sheet, the object being to make out that the signing was done at a time when Mrs. Brunton's health was not good.

This does not conclude the matter, because William and Mrs. Brunton being partners, it was his duty to make to her a full disclosure of all the material facts within his knowledge which would assist her in deciding whether to enter into a contract with him in relation to the interests in the partnership. The learned Judge finds that he did not in fact make the necessary disclosure and on this finding alone bases his judgment. There are some passages in the judgment which suggest that the learned Judge's view was at least one of suspicion as to the honesty, and motives of the defendant, William Brunton, though he does not base his decision on any such ground; and I think it right to say that, as far as I can judge from the evidence and facts before us, there is no doubt that William Brunton acted with candour and honesty.

Whether there was or was not a proper disclosure of facts within his knowledge is a question that I approach with very great caution, because it was not the case of the plaintiff nor was it the case put forward at the trial. Not one question was put to William Brunton suggesting that he kept anything back from her; nor was it suggested what he ought to have told her which he did not or what knowledge he had which she had not. It is obviously a dangerous thing to decide a case on grounds other than those which have been raised at the hearing. Mr. Grant tells us—and it is not contradicted—that until the judgment he had not the least idea that this was the case he had to meet, or was meeting, the case that he was fighting was one of undue influence and fraud or a deliberate concealment made and a final consent obtained not in October, 1916, but in January 1917 when the lady's health was becoming impaired, though not, I would point out, sufficiently impaired to prevent Jack Brunton from obtaining from her a very wide power-of-attorney or to prevent her, on the possible danger of giving to him such wide powers being pointed out, from refusing to allow it to become operative.

The case now made is that the valuation in the balance sheet of land and machinery was inadequate and that the giving up by her of one-sixth interest in the capital was not compensated for by William Brunton giving up his preferential right to Rs. 88,000 in the current account, and his right to interest on that. It is said that on the balance sheet as it stood in 1917 she had given up on balance at least Rs. 50,000 and on a proper valuation a good deal more. The evidence as to this is not very satisfactory to my mind. In 1917, and probably in 1916, there had been a boom in Cochin, owing, it is said, chiefly to the opening of a Harbour; and it is common knowledge that the value of machinery in situ rose owing to the difficulty of manufacture and transport during the War. But how far these things would be permanent must obviously have been a question of speculation. I am not satisfied on the evidence that the defendant was any better informed on these matters than Mrs. Brunton.

Further, and to this I attach the greatest weight, it would appear that before the carrying through of the matter by the signing of the balance sheet, the plaintiff had fully discussed the matter with his mother. He himself had been employed in the firm and was quite competent to advise her and did so by saying that it was impossible for any one without a full and fresh valuation to decide whether the proposal was to her advantage or not; but she took the view that William wanted it, that it was fair to him and that she thought it right, and did it. In these circumstances, in my judgment, there is no evidence of a failure on the defendant's part to make sufficient disclosure of facts within his knowledge and not within hers. She had the very difficulty pointed out to her son and, if she choose then to accept, with her eyes open to the difficulty, without requiring any further valuation or asking for any further information, she could not, in my judgment, be permitted afterwards to repudiate the bargain, and her son, the plaintiff, is in no better position. If what I have just referred to took place after she had agreed, the position is the same, because, in my judgment, that amounts to an election by her to be bound by the contract.

When a suit is brought to avoid a contract by reason of misrepresentation, fraud, nondisclosure of material facts or undue influence, there are certain recognised principles applicable. In the well known judgment of the Exchequer Chamber in Clough v. London North Western Railway Company (1) the principles were enunciated thus: "We agree that the contract continued valid till the party defrauded has determined his election by avoiding it. In such cases (i. e. of fraud) the question is, Has the person on whom the fraud was practiced, having notice of the fraud, elected not to avoid the contract? Or has he elected to avoid it, or has he made no election? We think that so long as he has made no election, he retains the right to determine it either way; subject to this that if, in the interval, whilst he is deliberating, an innocent third party has acquired an interest in the property, or, if in consequence of his delay the position even of the wrong doer is affected, it will preclude him from exercising his right to rescind." The matter was put from another point of view in Lindsay Petroleum Company v. Hurd (2) thus: "The doctrine of laches in Courts of Equity is not an arbitrary or a technical doctrine. Where it would be practically unjust to give a remedy either because the party has, by his conduct, done that which might fairly be regarded as equivalent to a waiver of it, or where by his conduct and neglect he has, though perhaps not waiving that remedy, yet put the other party in a situation in which it would not be reasonable to place him if the remedy were afterwards to be asserted, in either of these cases lapse of time and delay are most material. But in every case if an argument against relief, which otherwise would be justified, is founded upon mere delay, that delay of course not amounting to a bar of any statute of limitations, the validity of that defence must be tried upon principles substantially equitable. Two circumstances always important in such cases are the length of the delay and the nature of the acts done during the interval, which might affect either party and cause a balance of justice or injustice in taking the one course or the other, so far as it relates to the remedy."

These passages in these two judgments were approved by the House of Lords in Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Company (3). See particularly the opinion of Lord Blackburn at p. 1277. Applying those principles to this case, in my judgment, the setting aside of this contract is out of the question. In this case, for the reasons I have stated, I think that Mrs. Brunton elected to affirm it with quite sufficient knowledge of the facts in October 1916. Secondly, the plaintiff himself having full knowledge of the facts, in my judgment, deliberately elected not to avoid the contract. This, I think, is clear from a letter of his Solicitors, dated 27th November 1917, in which he claimed certain advantages which he contended accrued to him by reason of the equalisation of capital. Further, there has been in this case such laches or acquiescence which would render it practically unjust to give any such remedy. The plaintiff has, by his conduct, done what might be fairly regarded as equivalent to a waiver of it or put William Brunton in a situation in which it would not be rea-to place him if a right to such remedy were afterwards to be asserted. He elected to purchase the business on the basis of equalised capital and went on with it for several years and ultimately sold it, and no attempt to repudiate was made, and he thus changed his position so that, in my judgment, it would be quite impossible to grant restitutio ad integrum now.

The defendant has appealed from other parts of the judgment but has withdrawn those grounds of appeal. There is a cross-appeal by the plaintiff on two points:—(1) as to the construction of the partnership agreement and whether the defendant had properly elected to purchase thereunder, as to which I agree with the learned Judge and I have nothing to add, and (2) as to the value of the Cochin land, a pure question of fact, and no grounds have been put before us which would justify us in interfering.

The decree will be varied and the accounts taken on the basis of the contract for the equalisation of capital standing good. In the Court below the costs of issues 4 and 7 as to equalisation must be paid by the plaintiff to the defendant. As to the rest each party must bear his own costs. This appeal has succeeded as to a part and failed as to other parts, and the cross-appeal fails and I think that the proper order will be that the costs of both parties of the appeal and cross-appeal will come out of the estate. Certificate for one Counsel.

Coutts Trotter J.:—This is an appeal from the judgment of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in C. S. No. 16 of 1920 which was a suit brought by Mr. J. E. C. Brunton as plaintiff against his half-brother Mr. William Brunton, claiming an account from the defendant as executor of the Will of the late Mr. George Brunton and various ancillary reliefs. A bulky record has been piled up, but a very small number of documents have been referred to by the learned Counsel who argued this appeal and, in fact, the matters that we have to determine fall within a comparatively narrow compass. I propose briefly to set out the relevant facts when consider the questions of law which arise and which I conceive to be necessary for the determination of this appeal.

His Lordship, after dealing with the evidence, came to the conclusion there was no undue influence and fraudulent concealment.

After discussing the evidence the learned Judge came to the conclusion that no undue influence or misrepresentation had been proved, and proceeded as follows:—

What happened at the trial was that, after the case had been fought on a plain issue of fraud, the learned Judge, when he came to give judgment, discovered an entirely new case for the plaintiff—one to which, I am satisfied, Mr. Grant's mind was never directed and with which he had no opportunity of dealing; that case was not that Mr. William Brunton had committed a deliberate fraud or that he had extracted the assent of Mrs. Brunton to the equalisation of capital in January 1917 when she is alleged not to have known what she was doing because of her physical and mental condition. Accepting the assent to the balance sheet which, of course, involved an assent to the equalisation of capital as having taken place in October 1916, the learned Judge nevertheless held that that assent was given by Mrs. Brunton at a time when Mr. William Brunton was in sole possession of the material facts and that he had failed to acquaint her with those facts, that consequently the doctrine that has its clearest exposition in Lew v. Lew (4) applied, and that, accordingly, the transaction must be set aside.

I am almost tempted to say that to raise such a case after the conclusion of the arguments was so great an injustice to the defendant that the judgment ought to be set aside on that ground alone. But, I am of opinion that, even though it was unfairly raised against the defendant and was a case which he had no opportunity of meeting, it nevertheless breaks down on the evidence as we now have it.

His Lordship then found on the evidence that the case set up was fully met by the defendant's evidence.

It is obvious that Mrs. Brunton senior and Mr. William Brunton were on terms of great affection towards one another as is fully evidenced by their letters to one another. She clearly reposed the greatest confidence and trust in him and regarded him as having worthily served her interests by the attention and skill he had devoted to the business which was the source of her livelihood. I see nothing in this record to show that that confidence was in the least misplaced or that Mr. William Brunton at any stage behaved otherwise than as a conscientious and honourable gentleman. I am at a loss to understand why the learned Judge took the view he did take of this case. I am regretfully forced to the conclusion that, in certain matters I have dealt with, Mr. Jack Brunton did not tell the truth and endeavoured to put before the Court a false case. It is my opinion (and if it gives him any satisfaction he is entitled to that opinion) that Mr. William Brunton emerges from this case without the slightest tarnish on his integrity and honour.

I do not see why he should be made to pay the costs of a judicial enquiry which was forced upon him by the plaintiff. Mr. Cornish has not seriously argued the questions raised in his memorandum of cross-appeal. He has quite properly reserved his right not to abandon them but to argue them, if so advised, in the event of this case going to the Privy Council, all the materials for arguing them are contained in the record.

I agree with my Lord's proposed order as to costs.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 161 OF 1923.

November 15, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Justice Das and Mr. Justice Ross.

Hakin MUHAMMAD IDRIS—DECREE-HOLDER—APPELLANT

versus

LACHMAN DAS—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENT.

Bengal Revenue Sales Act (XI of 1859), ss. 33, 34, applicability of—Arrears, absence of—Sale by Collector—Suit to recover possession—Execution—Limitation—Execution of decree—Executing Court, whether can question decree.

Section 34 of the Bengal Revenue Sales Act applies only where a sale held under the Act is annulled by a final decree by a Civil Court. In other words, where a suit is brought under the provisions of section 33 of the Act, and a Civil Court annuls the sale on any of the grounds mentioned in the section, an execution petition must be presented within six months after the date of the decree, but when the suit is not one under the provisions of section 33 of the Act, section 34 of the Act has no operation whatever. [p 204, col. 2.]

There is a clear distinction between a case where a sale is annulled and a case where the Court authoritatively recognises that there was no sale at all, and consequently disregards it and proceeds to give a decree for possession to the plaintiff. Where the sale is authorized, but there is a direct violation of the Statutory provision in conducting the sale, the suit must be one for annulment of the sale, and the Court has complete power to set aside the sale, provided the requirements of section 33 are complied with. But where the sale is not authorized, there is in law no sale, and, there being nothing to annul, all that the Civil Court does is to recognise that there is no sale and to pass a decree for possession in favour of the plaintiff. [p. 204, col. 2.]

Where an estate is not in arrears there is no authority in the Collector to put up the estate for sale, and a Civil Court has complete power to recognise authoritatively that there was no power in the Collector to put up the property to sale and to hold that there was in fact no sale at all. To such a case section 34 of the Bengal Revenue Sales Act has no application.

It is not open to a Court executing a decree to go beyond the decree and to enquire whether the Court was entitled to pass that decree in view of what was actually alleged by the plaintiff in the plaint.

Second appeal from the order of the District Judge of Patna, dated the 16th March 1923.

Messrs. L. N. Singh, N. C. Singh and B. C. Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. B. Mukherji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—I think this appeal must succeed. The appellant instituted a suit as against the respondent to have a Revenue Sale set aside and on the 29th January 1921 he recovered a decree in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Patna setting aside the Revenue Sale. The appellant thereupon instituted proceedings in execution for recovery of possession of the property sold and it is conceded that the application for execution was not made within six months after the date of the Civil Court's decree. The question which the Courts have to try was whether the execution was barred by limitation in view of the section 34 of Act XI of 1859. The Court of first instance came to the conclusion that the Civil Court, having set aside the sale on the ground that the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction to sell the property, section 34 did not apply and the appellant was entitled to maintain execution although the application was not made within six months after the date of the Civil Court decree. The learned Judge in the Court below has taken a different view and he has dismissed the execution petition.

The Subordinate Judge in trying the original suit between the parties and giving a decree to the appellant said as follows: "The plaintiff examines one witness who proves that the notices were not served. He further produces two certified copies of the ledger showing that there was an excess of payment and that, therefore, the sale could not be held. Notices under section 4 were also not served and the plaintiff did not get time to pay arrears. Ordered that the suit be decreed ex parte with costs with interest at 6 per cent. per annum. Let the Revenue Sale be set aside and the plaintiff be delivered into possession." The executing Court of the first instance took the view that the decree of the Subordinate Judge in the original case was a decree not strictly annulling the Revenue Sale but vacating the Revenue Sale on the ground that there was no arrear and that consequently there was no authority in the Collector to put up the property to sale. As I read the judgment of the learned Judge in the Court below, he in no way throws any doubt on the construction put upon the judgment by Mr. Ghalib Hasnain. It is urged in this Court on behalf of the respondent that, as a matter of fact, the sale was not set aside on the ground that the estate was not in arrears, but on the ground that notices were not served in accordance with law and that the learned Judge in the Court below did not in fact accept the interpretation put on the judgment in the original case by Mr. Ghalib Hasnain. I am wholly unable to accept this contention. In my opinion the learned District Judge has not thrown any doubt on the construction upon the judgment in the original case learned Subordinate Judge dealing with execution petition. Nor do I think that it pronounced in the original case any other interpretation. It is urged before us that the plaintiff itself did not raise a case that the estate was not in arrears. That may or may not be so, but undoubtedly evidence was placed before the learned Subordinate Judge that the estate was not in arrears and that there was an excess payment made by the plaintiff; and the learned Subordinate Judge undoubtedly accepted that case and passed a decree in accordance with that finding. In my opinion it is quite impossible for a Court executing the decree to go beyond the decree and to enquire whether the Court was entitled to pass that decree in view of what was actually alleged by the plaintiff in the plaint. An executing Court is no doubt entitled to interpret a decree, but is not entitled to pronounce that the decree should not have been passed by the Court. In my opinion the decree that was passed in the original case was a decree which recognised authoritatively that there was no sale at all and that the Collector had no jurisdiction whatever to put up the property to sale.

That being so, the question arises whether section 34 constitutes a bar to the maintainability of the execution petition having regard to the fact that the application was not made within six months after the date of the sale. In my opinion section 34 applies only where a sale held under Act XI of 1859 is annulled by a final decree by a Civil Court: In other words, where a suit is brought under the provisions of section 33 of the Act and a Civil Court annuls the sale on any of the grounds mentioned in section 33 of the Act an execution petition must be presented within six months after the date of the decree; but, where the suit is not one under the provisions of section 33 of Act XI of 1859, section 34 in my opinion has no operation whatever. There is a clear distinction between a case where a sale is annulled and a case where the Court authoritatively recognises that there was no sale at all, and consequently disregards it and proceeds to give a decree for possession to the plaintiff. Where the sale is authorized, but there is a direct violation of the statutory provision in conducting the sale, the suit must be one for annulment of the sale, and the Court has complete power to set aside the sale, provided the requirements of section 33 are complied with. But where the sale is not authorized, there is in law no sale, and, there being nothing to annul, all that the Civil Court does is to recognise that there is no sale and to pass a decree for possession in favour of the plaintiff. I have no doubt whatever that section 33 applies to a case where the sale is authorised, but is attended with some illegality or irregularity and section 33 affords a complete protection to such sales, although they have been attended with illegality or irregularity, unless the conditions specified in section 33 are fulfilled and the procedure indicated in that section is adopted. But where there is no authority whatever for the sale, section 33 has no operation; and the Court, in dealing with a case where there is an entire absence of jurisdiction in the Collector to put up the property to sale, does not annul the sale but recognises authoritatively that there was no sale at all. In my opinion where the estate is not in arrear there is no authority in the Collector to put up the estate for sale and a Civil Court has complete power to recognise authoritatively that there was no power in the Collector to put up the property to sale and to hold that there was in fact no sale at all. That, in my opinion, was the decree pronounced in the original case brought by the appellant against the respondent. That being so, section 34 in my opinion does not apply.

There are numerous cases on the point; but it will be sufficient to refer to two cases to which, I notice, the learned Subordinate Judge refers. In the case of Harkhoo Singh v. Bunsidhur Singh (1) it was held that a suit to set aside a sale purporting to be under Act XI of 1859, on the ground that no arrear of revenue was due may be brought in the Civil Court even if such ground has not been specified in an appeal to the Commissioner. Now, it is important to remember that a Civil Court has no power to set aside a sale under section 33 of Act XI of 1859 unless the ground upon which the sale is attacked has been declared and specified in an appeal made to the Commissioner under section 2 of the Act of 1868. It follows, therefore, that if a suit to set aside a sale on the ground that no arrear of revenue was due is to be regarded as a suit under section 33 of Act XI of 1859, the fact that the actual ground was not declared and specified in an appeal to the Commissioner would constitute a complete bar to the maintainability of such a suit. In my opinion the decision in Harkhoo Singh v. Bunsidhur Singh (1) is an authority for the view that a suit to set aside a sale on the ground that no arrear of revenue was due is not a suit under section 33 of Act XI of 1859. The only other case to which I need refer is the case of Balkishen Das v. Simpson (2). It was held in that case that there is no jurisdiction in the Collector to put up an estate for sale where that estate is not in arrear. In that particular case it was also held that a Civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain the objection to the sale although the point had not been considered and disposed of by the Commissioner and that section 33 of Act XI of 1859 is no bar to such a suit. In dealing with the question the Judicial Committee pointed out that the enactments of 1859 and of 1868 were intended to apply to cases in which, if the irregularity or illegality of the sale proceedings alleged by the objector be negatived, the sale will remain valid. They further pointed out that where the estate is not in arrears at all there was no jurisdiction whatever in the Collector to sell the property and they held that the whole proceedings of the Collector were beyond his jurisdiction and were not entitled to the protection given him by the Act in cases where the sale is authorised, although it may be attended with some irregularity or illegality. A distinction is clearly drawn in the judgment of the Judicial Committee between a case where the sale is authorised but is attended with some irregularity or illegality and a case where the sale is not authorised at all. In my opinion all these decisions establish conclusively that where there is no jurisdiction in the Collector to put a property to sale, the sale cannot be regarded as a sale under Act XI of 1859. Section 34 only applies where the sale is held under Act XI of 1859 and is annulled by a final decree of the Civil Court.

In my opinion the view which was taken in this case by the learned Subordinate Judge was right. I would allow this Hindu Law—Daughter, estate held by—Income—Rent decree obtained by daughter, whether vests in reversioners after her death.

Under the Hindu Law the income of a limited estate held by a widow or a daughter is at the disposal of the limited owner, but if the limited owner has made no attempt to dispose of such income during her life-time such income must follow the estate from which it arose.

Isri Dutt v. Hansbatin Kuarin, 10 C 324; 10 I. A. 150; 18 C. L. R. 418; 7 Ind. Jur. 557; 4 Sar. P. O. J. 459; 5 Ind. Dec. (N.S.) 217 (P.C.) followed.

A rent decree obtained by a Hindu daughter and undisposed of by her during her life-time vests on her death in the reversioners of her father.

Appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge of Saran, dated the 31st January 1923.

Mr. H. P. Sinha, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sambhu Saran, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—I think this appeal must succeed. The learned Judge in the Court below took the view that the rent decree was the property of Phul Koer and descended to the heirs of Phul Koer and not to the heirs of Kali Prasad. It is necessary to remember that Phul Koer succeeded to the estate as the heir of her father Kali Prasad. The estate in her hands was the estate of a Hindu daughter and it is not disputed that the estate as such reverts on her death to the heirs of Prasad and not to her heirs. The view which found favour with the Judge in the Court below is that having been obtained by Phul

Koer it must be regarded as her own personal property. With this conclusion I am unable to agree. It was laid down in the leading case of Isri Dutt v. Hansbatin Kuarin (1) that if the widow has made no attempt to dispose of the savings from her husband's estate they must follow the estate from which they arose. It is not disputed that the income of a limited estate held either by a widow or a daughter is at the disposal of the limited owner; but the question arises, what happens to such income if the limited owner has made no attempt to dispose of it in her life time. On this question the case to which I have referred is conclusive. It was held by the Judicial Committee that if the limited owner has made no attempt to dispose of the income in her lifetime such income must follow the estate from which it arose; difficulties arise only in cases where the income is held in suspense in the widow's hands, for it is undisputed that it is open to the limited owner to hold the income in suspense with intent to appropriate it for her personal use later on. The test to be applied to cases of this description is, as was pointed out by Mr Justice Mukerji in the case of Bhakwati Kuer v. Sahudra Kuer (2), to determine from the surrounding circumstances the intention of the widow, namely, whether she intended to treat the income as part and parcel of the estate of her husband or whether she treated it as a temporary saving liable to be applied by her subsequently for her own purposes. But this question does not arise in this case. It is nobody's case that the rent decree was held by Phul Koer in suspense with intent to appropriate the proceeds thereof for her personal use later on. Phul Kuer died not having in any way disposed of that decree. It accordingly vested in the reversioners of her father.

I would allow the appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and restore the order of the Court of first instance. It follows that execution must proceed. The appellant is entitled to his costs throughout. Hearing fee in this Court will be assessed at two gold mohurs.

Ross, J.—I agree.

Under section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act the production of a succession certificate is not a condition precedent to the institution of a suit, it is sufficient if the certificate is produced at any time before the decree is made.

Where an objection is taken for the first time in appeal that the suit should not have been decreed inasmuch as the plaintiff had not produced a succession certificate, the suit should not be dismissed but opportunity should be given to the plaintiff to produce the certificate.

Mr. P. C. Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the appellants to enforce a simple unregistered bond as against the respondents. The only defence taken in the written statement is that no consideration passed. This issue was decided against the defendants in the Court of first instance and that Court gave the plaintiffs a decree substantially as claimed by them. The learned Judge in the Court below agreed with the finding of fact at which the Court of first instance had arrived, but that Court dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on the ground that the plaintiff did not obtain a succession certificate in respect of the debt due to his deceased brother who, it appears, was the co-partner of the appellant No. 1. Section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act undoubtedly lays down that no Court shall pass a decree against a debtor of a deceased person for payment of his debt except on the production of a succession certificate. But it will be noticed that the point was not taken in the Court of first instance. If the point had in fact been taken it would be a matter of no difficulty for the appellants to obtain a succession certificate before the decree was passed. It is well established that the production of a succession certificate is not a condition precedent to the institution of a suit and that it is sufficient if it is produced at any time before the decree is made. That point not having been taken in the written statement the plaintiffs did not apply for and obtain a succession certificate in respect of the debt due by the defendants.

In my opinion the learned District Judge should not have dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on the ground which was for the first time taken in his Court. The procedure which should be adopted when a point is for the first time taken in the Appellate Court is laid down in the case of Ammasi Kutti Gounden v. Appalu (1). The learned Judges pointed out in that case that, where an objection is taken for the first time in appeal that the suit should not have been decreed inasmuch as the plaintiff had not produced the succession certificate, the suit should not be dismissed but opportunity should be given to the plaintiff to produce the certificate. This is the procedure which, in my opinion, should have been adopted by the learned Judge in the Court below. Mr. A. K. Roy on behalf of the appellants has now produced the succession certificate before us. We direct that that certificate be marked as an Exhibit in the case. That being done, all that I need say is that this appeal must be allowed and the decree passed by the Court of first instance restored. In the circumstances of the case, there will be no order as to costs.

JUDGMENT.—One Kanhoji Rao Raghoji Rao Mohite owned the village of Mouza Goregaon situated in the Wardha Tahsil. On the 1st of September 1918 he executed a registered Theka patra in favour of two persons, Ramchandra and Kunjilal, leasing that village to them for six years, i.e., from 1918-19 to 1923-24. One Tukaram Ramji was the occupancy tenant of field No. 5 in the 1920 to the lessees, and on 31st Jan-they executed two pattas in favour ants, leasing the field to them in tenant right in perpetuity. Defendants have been in possession since that date. The plaintiff in execution of a mortgage-decree dated 7th November 1918, obtained in Civil Suit No. 17 of 1916 on the file of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, took possession on 23rd February 1920. The preliminary decree in the case was passed on 5th January 1918. He now sues stating that the two lessees, Ramchandra and Kunjilal, had no right to grant the field to the defendants, as the field was granted to them after the plaintiff had become owner of the village by virtue of the foreclosure decree of 7th November 1918.

The defendants admitted the plaintiff as the present landlord. They denied knowledge of the civil suit in which plaintiff got his foreclosure decree and also that the lease of 1st September 1918 to Ramchandra and Kunjilal was pendente lite. They pleaded that on the execution of the Theka patra of 1st September 1918 Ramchandra and Kunjilal were the de facto proprietors of the village, their names having been recorded as malguzars of the village, Ramchandra being the Lambardar; that the granting of the lease to the defendants was an act of village management; that they had taken the field for consideration without notice of the plaintiff's alleged title; that they are entitled to be treated as tenants, and that the plaintiff had only a right to recover rent from them.

The plaintiff succeeded in the trial Court, the trial Judge holding that defendants could not resist the plaintiff's claim for possession. On appeal, however, the District Judge, Wardha, finds that it is not disputed that the leases were granted in the ordinary course of village management, he writes :—

"There was a surrender and release and the transaction resulted in some profit to the landlord of the village. I do not think it necessary to decide whether the lessees can be considered de facto proprietors. The plaintiff became entitled to possession of the village on 7th November 1918. He did not take possession for fifteen months. During this period it was necessary to manage the village. The Lambardar collected rents and granted leases. Heavy loss might have occurred to the plaintiff had not rents been collected and arrangement been made for the cultivation of the lands of the village. The plaintiff stood by and allowed the lessees to manage the village. He did not take early steps for his appointment as Lambardar. The Lambardar is a customary agent of the proprietors of the village and I consider that the plaintiff allowed the lessees to act as his agents. He is, therefore, bound by ordinary acts of village management on the part of the Lambardar. Under the new Land Revenue Act, the Lambardar shall be deemed to be landlord within the meaning of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act (section 188 (2) of Act II of 1917). Here the plaintiff allowed Kanhojirao to remain Lambardar after he had lost his proprietorship; and Kanhojirao's lessees in good faith acted for the landlord, Kanhojirao must be deemed to have been the landlord. The plaintiff may sue the lessees for profits obtained by them but he cannot affect the rights given by them to others in the ordinary course of village management."

The plaintiff's claim was dismissed in the lower Appellate Court.

It is admitted here that on the date of the lease, 31st January 1920, Ramchandra was the Lambardar of the village. For the appellant it is also argued, on the authority of Dhirajsing v. Dinanath (1), that the lease granted by Kanhoji Rao to Ramchandra and Kunjilal was executed pendente lite during the pendency of the mortgage-suit, and was for that reason void, it being a lease for six years, and not an ordinary act of village management. It is said to be void under section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act. The Theka patra being void, it is contended, that Ramchandra could not take the surrender of the lease, and that once the final decree was passed on 7th November 1918, or at the most when the decree was amended on 12th March 1919, Kanhoji Rao having ceased to be the proprietor of the village, neither he nor his lessees was the Lambardar. It is stated that Ramchandra's lease gave him no right against the plaintiff, and it is not denied that that lease was granted during the pendency of the mortgage-suit, and that it must be held that though Kanhoji Rao had a right to give the lease, it was a right subject to the result of the suit.

For the respondents it is argued that the principle of section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act should be applied; that the respondent is a stranger; that the village is in the Wardha Tahsil and the respondents are residents of Arvi; that the case was proceeding at Nagpur, and the respondents could not possibly be deemed to have had notice of the litigation; that the execution application was not filed until 2nd February 1920 in Wardha; that Ramchandra was the Lambardar and so they took all reasonable care that no mala fides are suggested against them; that there was a delay of eight months in executing the decree after it was amended; that possession was not taken until 23rd February 1920; that mutation was effected on 3rd August 1920 and that plaintiff was then appointed Lambardar on 24th August 1920 vice Ramchandra. It is further argued that as the plaintiff accepted the surrender, they must accept the lease, and that they cannot accept a portion of the Lambardar's authority and refuse to accept the rest. It is also stated that the tenancy right did not pass to the plaintiff by the decree, but only the proprietary rights, and that Ramchandra was a de facto proprietor working as such with the consent of the plaintiff. Baidya Nath Roy. v. Nanula Lal Guha (2) is quoted in support of the proposition that, when a tenant has taken land from a de facto proprietor, he is entitled to keep his tenancy. It is further contended that the taking of the land was done in good faith and for consideration.

It seems to me that the contentions of the appellant must prevail. There is no doubt that Kanhoji Rao had the right to give the lease subject to the result of the mortgage-suit. The giving of a whole village on lease cannot be said to be an act of ordinary village management. It was held in Narain Patel v. Abdul Mujid Khan (3) that a lease effected for agricultural purposes is within the purview of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act and that it is incumbent upon any taking such a lease pendente lite to show that the rights of the owner of the land leased are not affected thereby; and in Chandun Singh v. Fakirgir (4) it was held that section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act applies to agricultural and other leases. The lease by Kanhoji Rao may not be an agricultural lease, but it is certainly a lease which comes within the provisions of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act. In Madan Mohan Singh v. Raj Kishore Kumari (5) it was held that where, pending a mortgage-suit, the mortgagor settled a number of persons on different portions of the mortgaged land, the plaintiff should recover. It is clear that only persons having a proprietary interest can be appointed a Lambardar, and it seems to me that though that definition includes a lessee or a proprietor, he who ceased to retain that capacity ceases to be Lambardar and cannot perform any of the functions of a Lambardar. After the amendment of the final decree on the 3rd September 1919, Ramchandra could have no authority to lease out the field. To hold the contrary would mean that, after the passing of a final foreclosure decree, the defendant proprietor of a village would be entitled to get rid of all his khudkasht land to the detriment of the successful mortgagee. The record shows that plaintiff was prosecuting his case and the execution of the decree diligently. It seems to me that the case was correctly decided by the trial Court.

I, therefore, set aside the lower Appellate Court's decree and restore that of the trying Court. Costs in all Courts will be paid by the respondents.

DEBTOR—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss 144, 151.—Restitution—Inherent power of Court—Possession delivered under erroneous interpretation of decree whether can be restored

The power of a Court to order restitution is by no means confined to the terms of section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is the inherent power of a Court to do what is right and proper under the circumstances which have happened. [p. 312, col. 1.]

When under a wrong interpretation of a decree the Court executing the decree delivers possession of the disputed property to a party who is not entitled to possession of it, and the interpretation adopted by it is subsequently held to be erroneous, the Court has ample jurisdiction to restore the party who was dispossessed by the erroneous order of the Court to possession of the property. [p. 312, col. 1.]

First appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge of Darbhanga, dated the 9th April 1923.

Messrs. S. N. Mullick and M. Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Jayswal and L. K. Jha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—This appeal is directed against the order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Darbhanga, dated the 9th of April 1923, by which he allowed the application of the respondent for restitution.

The facts are these. Sometime in 1918 the appellants instituted a suit as against the widows of Sheonath for recovery of certain properties which were held by Sheonath. It appears that Sheonath died sometime in 1917 and thereupon a dispute arose between his widows and the appellants in regard to the succession to the properties of Sheonath. The respondent was in possession of the properties as thicadars by virtue of a lease executed by Sheonath in his favour and it appears that the lease was to run from 1322 to 1328 with option to the respondent to renew it for a further period of seven years. The appellants recovered a decree both as against the widows and the respondent, but the decree expressly preserved the title of the respondent under the lease. In other words, the decree directed that the appellants were entitled to recover rent from the respondent and were only entitled to khas possession upon the expiry of the lease. In December 1920 the appellants executed the decree and obtained symbolical possession as against the widows. On the 17th September 1921 they applied for delivery of khas possession as against the respondent on the ground that the term of the lease had expired. The Court executing the decree came to the conclusion that the term of the lease expired in 1328 and issued the usual writ for delivery. On the 30th of September 1921 the respondent made an application before the Court executing the decree. It is somewhat difficult to understand the scope of that application, but it appears that the respondent insisted that he was still in possession of the property and was entitled to be maintained in possession. The respondent contended before the Court that, under the lease executed in his favour by Sheonath, he had the right to renew the lease for a further period of seven years from 1328 and that the decree preserved his rights and the Court executing the decree had no right to deliver khas possession of the property to the appellants.

The first Court refused the application of the respondent who thereupon appealed to this Court. This Court came to the conclusion that the respondent had an option to renew the lease and that the decree did not give the appellants any right whatever to khas possession of the disputed property until the expiry of 1335. The respondent then presented an application which is the subject-matter of this appeal. The application was made under sections 151 and 144 of the Code and it alleged that, "in execution of the said writ of delivery of possession, they (that is to say, the appellants) dispossessed your petitioner (that is to say, the respondent) from the said share and appropriated all the Bhadaie, Aghani and Rabbi produce and other profits of all the khas lands, Batai and Bhanli lands, etc." The respondent contended that the order of the Subordinate Judge having been set aside by the High Court in appeal he was entitled to be restored to possession. The learned Subordinate Judge has acceded to the application made before him and has directed that the respondent should be restored to possession.

It is strongly urged by Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick on behalf of the appellants that it being the case of the respondent throughout that he was in possession of the disputed properties and has never been dispossessed, it is not open to him to maintain an application for restitution. It is undoubtedly true that, for some reason or other which I have not been able to understand, the respondent did make the case both before the Subordinate Judge and this Court that he was in possession of the disputed properties and was entitled to be maintained in possession. But it is quite impossible to decide this case on a mere technicality. The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge establishes beyond reasonable doubt that the appellants did recover possession of the disputed land from the respondent. It is not disputed that a writ of delivery of possession was issued at the instance of the executing Court, and it is not denied that all that was necessary to be done by the Nazir was in fact done. Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick contends that the possession was a formal one. For myself, I do not understand the exact meaning of the words "formal delivery of possession". The appellants did recover possession of the properties from the respondent by virtue of the process of a Civil Court and was entitled by virtue of that order to recover rent from the actual raiyyats of the land and to cultivate the khas land within the village. In my opinion, there is not a shadow of doubt that the appellants did recover khas possession of the disputed land. That being so, the question arises whether it was competent to the learned Subordinate Judge to direct that the respondent should be restored to possession. Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick suggested that the Court, in dealing with an application of this nature, is confined to the terms of section 144 of the Code, and that as the order of the Subordinate Judge has not been varied or reversed by the High Court there was no power in the Subordinate Judge to direct that the respondent should be restored to possession.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY CO. v. RAM LAKHAN RAM

to assent to this argument. Under cover of a decree pronounced by a Civil Court the appellants took possession of the properties to which they were not entitled until the year 1335. It is quite true that the original decree has not been reversed, but it is not suggested by Mr. Jayaswal on behalf of the respondent that that decree was in any way erroneous or that it purported to give the appellants the right which they claimed under it during the execution proceedings. The whole point is this. The appellants did get a decree both as against the widows of Sheonath and as against the respondent. Under cover of that decree they proceeded to turn the respondent out of the land upon which the respondent was entitled to remain until a particular year; and the question is, whether the Court is now entitled to say that the respondent should be restored to possession. The power of a Court to order restitution is by no means confined to the terms of section 144 of the Code. It is the inherent power of a Court to do what is right and proper under the circumstances which had happened. By a wrong interpretation of the decree the Court executing the decree delivered possession of the disputed land to the appellants. This Court decided that the interpretation put on the decree by the executing Court was erroneous. That being so, the Court had complete jurisdiction to restore the respondent to possession of the properties from which he was dispossessed by an erroneous order of the Executing Court.

The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is right and must be affirmed. This appeal must be dismissed with costs.

On the question of mesne profits, Mr. Mullick contends that, having regard to the attitude which has throughout been adopted by the respondent, his clients should only be called upon to pay what they have actually made out of the disputed land. The learned Subordinate Judge has not dealt with this matter and the question really does not arise for our consideration; but Mr. Jayaswal does not object to the enquiry for mesne profits being confined to the actual profits made by the appellants.

I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 10—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 22—Suit against wrong defendant—Amendment after limitation, whether permissible.

Where the party intended to be sued and substantially sued has been misdescribed in the cause title, there is complete power in the Court to make the necessary correction without any regard to lapse in time. [p. 813, col. 2.]

Where, however, there are two known persons in existence and plaintiff brings his suit against one of them and afterwards applies to have the other brought on the record as a defendant on the ground that he all along intended to sue the other, and in substance sued the other, and no question of representation arises, the case is not one of misdescription, and the Court will be justified in refusing leave to bring the real defendant on the record at a time when the suit has become barred by time against him. [p. 813, col. 2; p. 815, col. 1.]

Case-law discussed.

A suit against the Agent of a Railway Company in his personal capacity cannot be regarded as, in substance, a suit against the Railway Company.

Second appeal from an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Shahabad, dated the 22nd December 1922.

Messrs. N. C. Sinha and N. C. Ghosh, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Parameshwar Dayal and Tribhuvan Nath Sahai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—I think that this appeal must succeed. It is not disputed before us that the suit as filed on the 23rd December 1920 was against the Agent, East Indian Railway Co., and that by his application for amendment, the plaintiff sought to substitute the Railway Company for the defendant originally sued. It is admitted that, had the suit been filed at the date when the plaintiff presented his application for amendment, it would have been open to the Railway Company to contend that the suit was barred by limitation; and the learned Munsif giving effect to the well known rule that amendments are not admissible when they prejudice the rights of the opposite party as existing at the date of such amendment, declined to accede to the application made on behalf of the plaintiff. The learned Subordinate Judge in the Court below has come to the conclusion that the application for amendment of the plaint ought to have been allowed by the learned Munsif and in that view he has remanded the case to the Court of first instance for disposal on the merits.

In my opinion the question must be decided on the terms of O. I, r. 10 (5) of the Code of Civil Procedure. On the language deliberately employed by the Legislature in the provisions of the Code to which I have referred, there is no room for controversy that the proceedings as against any person added as a defendant shall be deemed to have begun only on the service of the summons. Now, it is admitted before us that the suit as against the Railway Company would be barred by limitation if the proceedings in connection with the suit be deemed to have begun only on the service of the summons. That being so, it seems to me that the learned Munsif was right in declining to accede to the application made before him on behalf of the plaintiff if the Railway Company be regarded as an added party to the suit.

It was strongly contended before us that the Railway Company should not be regarded as "a person added as defendant" within the meaning of the term as used in O. I, r. 10 (5) of the Code. I quite admit that where there is a misdescription of the defendant in the cause title there is complete power in the Court to make the necessary correction without any regard to lapse of time; for in a case of misdescription the Court will not have any difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the defendant had been substantially sued, though under a wrong name. The cases relied upon by the learned Vakil for the respondent are all cases of misdescription, and the decisions in all these cases rest on the view that the defendant sought to be added as a party was always on the record as a defendant, though under a wrong name. In the case of Manni Kasaun- dhan v. Crooke (1) the plaintiff intended to sue, and did sue, the Municipal Committee of Gorakhpur; but instead of suing the Committee through the President as the plaintiff should have done, he sued it through the Secretary. It was a case of misdescription, pure and simple, and the Allahabad High Court pointed out that no personal relief was sought against the Secretary; the whole object of the plaintiff being to bind the Committee by any decree that might be passed in his favour. In Peary Mohan Mukerjee v. Narendranath Mukerjee, (2) the plaintiffs claimed a decree expressly against the debutter estate and the defendant was brought on the record not only in his personal capacity, but also as the receiver of the debutter estate. Subsequently, after the expiry of the period of limitation prescribed for the suit, the plaint was amended and the defendant (who was a party on the record both in his personal capacity and as receiver of the debutter estate) was described in the cause title as shebait of the debutter estate. The Calcutta High Court, in affirming the view of the lower Appellate Court that amendment should be allowed, pointed out that the plaintiffs expressly asked for a decree against the debutter estate and that the only question was whether the debutter estate was actually before the Court, as in substance it was throughout; and it expressed the view that, "where relief was originally claimed as against a party who had to be represented by some person, the proper representation of that party subsequently made has not the effect of adding a new defendant to the suit." As I read the decision of the Calcutta High Court, it is based on the view that where the party intended to be sued and substantially sued has been misdescribed in the cause title there is complete power in the Court to give the appropriate relief to the plaintiff without any regard to the terms of section 22 of the Limitation Act. The other cases, (except one to which I shall presently refer) upon which reliance was placed substantially take the same view.

But in my opinion there is all the difference in the world between misdescribing a party intended to be sued and suing a party party. It was strongly contended before us that the plaintiff intended to sue the Railway Company and in substance sued the Railway Company; but the plaint speaks for itself; and it is quite impossible for us to have recourse to extrinsic evidence. A personal decree was sought against the Agent, East Indian Railway Company, and there is no suggestion in the plaint that it was sought to bind the Railway Company by any decree that the plaintiff might obtain against the defendant. No question of representation arises in this case and it is quite impossible for us to have recourse to the doctrine enunciated in Peary Mohan Mukerjee v. Narendra Nath Mukerjee (2). The only case which appears to support the contention of the respondent is the case of The Saraspur Manufacturing Company, Ltd. v. B. B. & C. I. Railway Company (3), but there is this difference between the Bombay case and the case before us that though the title of the defendant was entered in the plaint as follows:—"The Agent, B. B. and C. I. Railway Company, Ltd.," the prayer was that the defendant Company should pay the amount sued for. In these circumstances, the Bombay High Court took the view that the relief having been claimed against the Railway Company and not against the Agent personally, it was the Railway Company which was substantially the defendant in the suit. But, as I have pointed out, in the present case the plaintiff asks for a personal decree against the Agent of the Railway Company. The point has been expressly decided by my learned brother in the case of Sineli Ram Bihari Lall v. The Agent, East Indian Railway Company (4) and I entirely agree with the conclusion at which my learned brother arrived. It may be pointed out that a similar view has been taken at least in two cases in the Calcutta High Court—the case of Nubeen Chunder Paul v. Mr. Cecil Stephenson, Agent of the East Indian Railway Company (5) and the case of Indian General S. N. and R. Co., Ltd. v. Lal Mohan Saha (6). In the last mentioned case the suit was filed against two companies and the defendant companies were described as "The Indian General Steam Navigation and Railway Company, Limited, and the Rivers Steam Navigation Company, Limited, by their joint Agent, A. E. Rogers." Notice was served on Mr. Rogers and subsequently Mr. Rogers retired from the service of the companies and left the country. At the trial of the suit, the plaint was amended and Mr. Rogers' name was omitted from the title of the suit which was proceeded with against the two companies. It was held by Mukherjee and Roe, JJ., that the plaint as originally framed was in contravention of O. XXIX, r. 1 of the Code. It was argued that the suit was in essence brought against the two Companies and that the plaintiffs mentioned the name of Mr. Rogers as the person upon whom the process was to be served. With regard to this argument the learned Judges observed as follows:—"There is obviously no foundation for this theory. The suit was substantially against Mr. Rogers, although he was sued in his capacity as joint agent of the two Companies mentioned. The suit, however, should have been framed as one against the two Companies described by their proper names, as is clear from the decisions mentioned. There is plainly no excuse for the mistaken course deliberately adopted by the plaintiffs." The question then arose whether, in the circumstances of the case, the Court below should have amended the plaint by striking out the name of Mr. Rogers and allowing the suit to proceed against the Companies. On this point the learned Judges said as follows:—

"In the circumstances of this case, as no question of limitation arises even if the suit be taken to have been instituted against the two Companies on the date when the plaint was allowed to be amended, we are of opinion that the amendment may stand." I read the decision of Mr. Justice Mookerjee as containing a strong intimation to the effect that amendment would not have been allowed if any question of limitation arose in the case. In my opinion when there are two known persons in existence and the plaintiff brings the suit against the one of them and afterwards applies to have the other brought on the record as a defendant on the ground that he all along intended to sue the other and that in substance he sued the other, and no ques-

Application for revision of the order of the District Judge of Dumka, dated 8th April 1923.

Messrs. N. C. Sinha and B. B. Ghosh, for the Respondents

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—This is an appeal against an order of the District Judge of Dumka reversing an order of the Subordinate Judge of Jamtara and setting aside a sale in execution under O. XXI, r. 90 of the Civil Procedure Code. No second appeal lies against such an order, but there is an application in revision.

It appears that in 1917 the appellant brought a suit for money against the respondents which was decreed on compromise in 1918 on the terms that a charge was created over certain properties. There was to be payment of the decretal amount by instalments and an agreement was made that if any instalment was not paid the decree should be executed. In 1922 the appellant proceeded to execute the decree. On the 8th August 1922 there was an application for stay of the proceedings on the ground that one of the judgment-debtors, Satya Prasanna Das, was a minor when the suit was brought and that he had instituted a suit to exempt his 2-annas share of the property from the decree. The Subordinate Judge thereupon ordered that 14-annas only of the property, instead of 16-annas as proclaimed for sale, should be sold. On the 11th September 1922 an application was made under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code to set aside the sale. No evidence was offered, and on the 21st January 1923 the Subordinate Judge refused the application.

On appeal the District Judge has set aside the sale. It was found by the Subordinate Judge that there had been no loss to the judgment-debtors in the sale of the property which had fetched a fair price. With regard to the sale of 14-annas instead of 16-annas, he held that this was an irregularity, but as there was no substantial injury resulting from it, he refused to interfere with the sale. The learned District Judge has agreed with the Subordinate Judge that the property was not sold at less than a fair price, but he has set aside the sale on the ground that the mortgage was split up inasmuch as 14-annas instead of 16-annas was sold and that the Court in splitting up the mortgage had acted illegally. I can see no reason why a mortgagee should not sell a portion only of the mortgaged property; and the learned Vakil of the respondents has conceded that the District Judge cannot be supported on the ground on which it was passed. I however, that the property that was not the property that was proclaimed for sale and that the sale was, therefore, illegal. He relies on Thakur Burhma v. Jiban Ram Marwari (1). That, however, was an entirely different case. What was sold in that execution was a 6-annas share of a Mahal subject to a mortgage. After the sale the auction-purchasers applied for a correction of the certificate of sale by adding the word 'not' to the description of the property. It was held that what is sold at a judicial sale can be nothing but the property attached, and that the property attached had been the property subject to the mortgage and it could not be treated as the share in the estate which was not subject to the mortgage. There is no analogy whatsoever between that case and the present. In the present case the property that has been sold is a portion of the property that was proclaimed for sale and I can see no reason why the sale should be invalid.

The result is that the application must be granted and the order of the District Judge set aside and the order of the Subordinate Judge restored. The petitioners will be entitled to their costs, hearing fee two gold mohurs.

As the appeal does not lie it must be dismissed without costs.

Licensee erecting permanent structures in license—Ejectment.

Persons who have, with the consent of the zemindar, been permitted as licensees, to occupy for more than twelve years a plot of land in the village abadi which they have used for purposes of agriculture and on which, in pursuance of their license, they have erected constructions of a permanent character, are entitled to be left in undisturbed enjoyment of the plot as licensees, and are not liable to ejectment at this instance either of the zemindar or his transferee.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Farrukhabad, dated the 18th April 1922.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. B. Johare, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The defendants-appellants are residents of a village called Chiloli in the Farrukhabad District.

It appears, as far as I can ascertain, that the Zemindars of this village were a certain Nawab Shams-ul-nissa Begam, Baba Piyare Das, Rangi Lal and some others. In 1914 Nawab Shams-ul-nissa Begam brought a suit against the defendants-appellants in which she asked for their ejectment from a compound in the village on the ground that they had no right there. The suit was dismissed by the Munsif on the ground that the land was part of the abadi and that the defendants had been in possession of the compound for a very long time more than 12 years before the suit. The District Judge on appeal decreed the suit, but the High Court in second appeal dismissed it. The judgment of the High Court is in second appeal No. 797 of 1916 and is dated 12th July 1917. Piyare Das and Rangi Lal were pro forma defendants in that suit. Now, it appears that on the 22nd August 1913 Piyare Das and Rangi Lal had sold rights in the compound in question to Tulshi Ram and others, the plaintiffs-respondents in the present suit, and by virtue of the sale deed in their favour these plaintiffs-respondents have instituted an exactly similar suit against the defendants-appellants for their ejectment out of the same compound. The present appeal arises out of that suit. The Munsif, adopting the view that the plaintiffs-respondents had no right, dismissed the suit but the learned District Judge has taken a different view. He has allowed the plaintiffs a decree for joint possession and has ordered the enclosure wall to be removed. The defendants come here in appeal.

ARJUN KAPALI v. ASVINI KUMAR KAPALI

The decision in the previous suit, of course, does not operate as res judicata and it may be said that it has practically no bearing on the present suit. Whether it is desirable that in a case in which a village is owned by a large number of proprietors one proprietor after another should be permitted to bring a suit on exactly the same cause of action against the same people is not for me to decide here. Such is the law in India and it does not follow that after the decision of this suit the point may not be raised again by somebody else in a third suit.

The findings of the lower Appellate Court are these: "The constructions in suit consist only of an outer wall enclosing a space of land in which are a kacha well and 3 hands. The well appears to have been built in 1913. But it appears to be a fact that the defendants-respondents have been using the land for many years for manure for pressing sugar-cane and other agricultural purposes." I take the learned District Judge to mean by "many years" that the defendants have been using the land for more than twelve years before the date of suit. That was the finding in the previous case and he does not appear to have differed from it. Now, what does this come to? By consent of the zemindars for more than twelve years the defendants-appellants have been permitted to occupy as licensees a plot of land on which they store manure, press sugar-cane, etc., and in pursuance of their license they have erected constructions of a permanent character, in particular a wall. Complete strangers who have just got into the village wish to turn them out and, not being able to procure their ejectment, have procured what is equally effective a decree for joint possession. This decree, if put into execution, will effectively hamper the defendants-appellants in the use of the land for if the plaintiffs-respondents get joint possession over the compound its value will be diminished if not destroyed. They have also obtained a decree for the demolition of the wall. This is not according to the law as I read it. The defendants-appellants as licensees who have made permanent structures upon the land must be left in undisturbed enjoyment of it. They are not owners but they have the rights of licensees. The suit should be dismissed altogether.

I accordingly allow this appeal and direct that the suit stand dismissed. The plaintiffs will pay their own costs and those of the defendants-appellants in all Courts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXIII, r. 3—Compromise decree—Matters extraneous to suit—Execution as to such matters—Separate suit.

A compromise decree including matters covered by the suit as well as matters extraneous to it can be executed only to the extent it relates to matters in suit and not with regard to matters outside the scope of the suit. [p. 819, col. 2.]

Subapathy Pillay v. Vanmahalinga Pillai, 23 Ind. Cas. 581; 34 M. 959; 15 M. L. T. 208, 26 M. L. J. 881; (1914) M. W. N. 256, and Jasimuddin Biswas v. Bhuban Jelini, 84; O. 456, relied on.

The power of a Court to pass a consent decree is restricted to matters covered by the suit. But if the agreement refers to matters extraneous to the suit forming consideration for the compromise or settlement of the matter included in the suit, such extraneous terms should also be recorded in the decree. It does not, however, follow that such extraneous terms can be enforced in execution of that decree. In fact, they can be enforced only by a separate suit. [p. 819, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—The point raised in Rule is whether the plaintiff was entitled

maintain a suit for the recovery of the amount claimed or his only remedy is to execute the compromise-decree to enforce delivery of the articles or payment of their value. The facts are that the plaintiff had brought a suit for partition and khas possession of certain lands against the defendants and others in the Court of the 2nd Subordinate Judge of Comilla. That suit was decreed on compromise. One of the terms of it was that the plaintiff was to get from the defendant four maunds of Jub and ten maunds of paddy. These articles not having been delivered by the defendant to the plaintiff, he has brought the present suit for recovery of the price thereof in the Court of the Munsif of Nabinagar exercising Small Cause Court jurisdiction. The defendant, amongst other defences, raised the plea that no suit would lie in the Small Cause Court by virtue of the provisions of section 47, Civil Procedure Code and that such claim could be made only in execution of the compromise-decree. The Small Cause Court Judge has overruled this plea and gave a decree to the plaintiff for the amount claimed. This Rule has been issued under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. It is admitted by both the plaintiff and the defendant, as is observed by the learned Munsif, that the subject-matter of this suit was extraneous to the subject-matter of the partition suit. The partition suit related only to lands held in common by the parties, but no partition was claimed of the crops standing on the land. The compromise-decree allowed a partition of the crop to the claimant as one of the considerations for the compromise. In the first place, it is argued, that the subject-matter was included in the previous litigation. But, as I have remarked, both the parties in the Court below proceeded on the assumption that it was not so; and, on the face of the plaint in the partition suit which has been placed before me, I am of the same opinion.

The next question that arises is as to even if the subject-matter of the present suit was not included in the previous suit, the consent decree in the previous suit would bar a separate suit to enforce one of the terms of the compromise though beyond the scope of that suit under section 47, Civil Procedure Code. I have placed for this contention on behalf of the petitioner on the decisions of the

Allahabad and Madras High Courts in the cases of Mohibulla v. Imami (1), The Manager of Sri Meenakshi Devasthanam v. Abdul Kasim (2), Joti Kuruvetappa v. Isari Sivuseppa (3), and Sahapathy Pillay v. Vanmahalinga Pillay (4). There is no doubt that the High Courts of Allahabad and Bombay have adopted the view that, when a suit is decreed by consent and the terms of the compromise are embodied in the decree the only way to get relief under that decree in respect of any matter included in the suit or outside its scope is by way of execution. But this view has not been accepted by this Court. Reference may be made to the case of Jasimuddin Biswas v. Bhuban Jelini (5). The expressions of opinion there seem to be in favour of the proposition that a consent decree including matters covered by the suit as well as matters extraneous to it can only be executed to the extent it relates to matters in suit. I may here quote the observations of the Court, which are as follows:—"We think that in execution of the decree itself the amount agreed to be paid as damages could alone be recovered from the defendants. The Court executing the decree would not have been empowered under it to compel the defendants to execute a kabulyat in favour of the plaintiffs or to accept a lease on the terms agreed to." One of the terms of the compromise in that suit was that the defendants should execute a kabulyat in favour of the plaintiff and accept a lease on certain terms. It was held that this covenant could not be enforced by the Court executing the compromise decree. The point did not form an issue in that case but the observations that I have quoted were material for the decision of that suit. In the case of Purna Chandra Sarkar v. Nil Mukha Nandi (6) the question arose whether the decree having comprised terms outside the scope of the suit was ultra vires or not. It was held that a decree passed on compromise cannot be regarded as ultra vires simply because it goes beyond the scope of the suit and contains other matters; but if those other conditions are independent of the suit they may be regarded as surplusage. In coming to that finding Pratt, J., observed as follows:—"Therefore, whether the whole of the decree is capable of execution or not, it is evident that it is a good decree at least so far as regards the validity of the kabulyat." Ghose, J., agreeing in the judgment, says: "It seems to me that these other conditions were either the consideration for the affirmance of the kabulyat for which the suit was brought or they were conditions independent thereof. In the first mentioned case, the whole of the conditions must be incorporated in the decree: in the latter case, the decree, according to the view presented by the learned Vakil himself so far as it incorporates only the first condition, namely, as to the kabulyat must be upheld and, therefore, the portion of the decree incorporating the other conditions may be regarded as surplusage." The point seems to have been set at rest by the recent decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Rani Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Midnapur Zamindari Co. (7).

The question that is now before me was not directly in issue in that case, but their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have examined the characteristics of a compromise decree containing matters within and outside the scope of the suit. In construing section 375 of the Code of 1882 (corresponding to O. XXIII, r. 3), their Lordships observe as follows:—"The terms of this section need careful scrutiny. In the first place, it is plain that the agreement or compromise, in whole and not in part, is to be recorded, and the decree is then to confine its operation to so much of the subject-matter of the suit as is dealt with by the agreement. Their Lordships are not aware of the exact system by which documents are recorded in the Courts in India, but a perfectly proper and effectual method of carrying out the terms of the section would be for the decree to recite the whole of the agreement and then to conclude with an order relative to that part that was the subject of the suit, or it could introduce the agreement in a schedule to the decree; but in either case, although the operative part of the decree would be properly confined to the actual subject-matter of the then existing litigation, the decree taken as a whole would include the agreement. This, in fact, is what the decree did in the present case. It may be that as a decree it was incapable of being executed outside the lands of the suit, but that does not prevent it being received in evidence of its contents." These observations clearly indicate that such a decree is capable of being executed only in reference to the subject-matter of the suit; and it necessarily follows that it cannot be executed with reference to matters outside the scope of the suit. The provisions of the law as contained in O. XXIII, r. 3, throw a great deal of light upon this point. The Court is empowered when a suit has been brought, upon any lawful agreement or compromise, to pass a decree in accordance therewith, "so far as it relates to the suit." Apparently, the power of the Court in passing a decree is restricted to the matters covered by the suit. But it has been held in the cases referred to that where the agreement refers to matters extraneous to the suit forming consideration for the compromise or settlement of the matters included in the suit, such extraneous terms should also be recorded in the decree; but it does not follow that such terms can be enforced in execution of that decree. Reference has been made on behalf of the petitioner to the case of Golinda Chandra Pal v. Dwarka Nath Pal (8). That case may be dismissed by the observation that the plaintiff had instituted a separate suit under the provisions of the Small Cause Courts Act to enforce a mortgage created by the compromise in a previous litigation in respect of properties outside its scope.

In my judgment, the view taken by the Small Cause Court Judge is correct and this Rule is discharged with costs. I assess the hearing-fee at one gold mohur.

The performance of the hawan ceremony on the occasion of the laying of the foundation stone of a building will not turn an illusory trust in respect of the building into a definite one. [p. 323, col. 1.]

As the execution of a trust is under the control of the Court, the trust must be of such a nature that it can be under the control of the Court, so that its administration can be reviewed by the Court, or, if the trustee dies, the Court itself can execute the trust. [p. 323, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 20th of April 1922.

Mr. Niamatullah, for the Appellant.
Respondent in person.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff B. Anant Ram sued in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow as administrator of the estate of one Chhedi Lal for the recovery of possession of a dharamsala which is at present in the possession of the defendant Babu Ishuri Prasad. The defendant is surviving brother and successor by right of survivorship of B. Ganga Prasad, who was executor of the Will of B. Chhedi Lal. The following pedigree will indicate the relationship between Chhedi Lal and the plaintiff :—

Chhedi Lal's heirs are his daughter for her life and then her sons, but Letters of Administration have been granted by the District Judge to Anant Ram who applied for them on the ground that he was interested in preserving the estate of the deceased. Reference in this judgment will be necessary to certain documents printed in Books A and R of First Civil Appeal No. 49 of 1919. With the Court's permission they have not been printed over again in the printed book of this appeal. Chhedi Lal made a Will modified by an oral codicil. The oral codicil is quoted by B. Ganga Prasad in his application for Probate (Book A-31). It was possibly uttered in the Vernacular, but an English version thereof has been given. It is: "You are to manage after me so that my daughters-in-law may not be inconvenienced. Give to Chamela Rs. 2,000 in cash and two houses, named Pathar ke chabutri-wala and Kharaliwala. I have troubled these people (points to brother's wife), therefore, give to Badri Nath Rs. 5,000 in cash and after the death of the daughters-in-law, Kothi, You can apply the remaining money to any charitable purposes you please."

—Chhedi Lal died on 27th February 1907 and Probate was granted to B. Ganga Prasad on 1st July 1907. B. Ganga Prasad built the dharamsala in suit partly out of money in his hands as Chhedi Lal's executor and partly out of borrowed money. He died on 23rd June 1914 and the defendant has been in possession of the dharamsala since. The defendant and Brijmohan Lal, father of the plaintiff, were appointed joint administrators on 13th January 1915, but they had a difference which it was found impossible to compose. The District Judge thereupon dismissed them on 14th June, 1917, and appointed the plaintiff administrator on 5th March 1918. When the plaintiff demanded possession of the dharamsala from the defendant as the administrator of the estate of Chhedi Lal, the defendant refused it on the ground that the dharamsala was trust property being endowed as a trust by his brother B. Ganga Prasad, and in accordance with the authority given to him by the oral Will of Chhedi Lal. The plaintiff based his claim for possession on the allegation that the trust was not completed and that, consequently, the dharamsala was part of the unadministered assets of Chhedi Lal. The lower Court held in favour of the defence that the building was wakf property. It further held that the defendant was entitled to be trustee of the wakf and that the plaintiff had no right to the managership of the trust as administrator of Chhedi Lal's estate. Both these findings are attacked in appeal here by the plaintiff.

Ganga Prasad did not pay the legacy to the plaintiff's brother Badri Nath who sued the defendant for its recovery. The first Civil Court expressly excluded the dharamsala from the charge of that claim, but on appeal here the legacy was made recoverable from the dharamsala property also. It was one of the grounds of appeal that the judgment of this Court of 24th June 1920 (Ext. 9) was res judicata between the parties to this suit; but that ground was abandoned by the plaintiff-appellant's learned Counsel. It is obvious that the decision between the plaintiff's brother as legatee and the defendant cannot be binding in a litigation between the plaintiff as administrator of Chhedi Lal's estate and the defendant.

The first question for our consideration is, whether the dharamsala is a valid trust. The learned Subordinate Judge has relied upon his own judgment in a previous suit and another judgment of his Court in another suit, though both those judgments were reversed by this Court on appeal. He has failed to discuss the various circumstances narrated in the judgment of this Court (Ext. 9) as indications of the trust not having been completed by B. Ganga Prasad. The learned Judge of the lower Court put this judgment aside as not being binding on the parties and being confined to the legacy being a burden on the dharamsala. This showed a want of respect to that (if we may say so) capable judgment.

Let us examine the evidence as to the formation of a trust. To start with, there is no trust-deed. An opening ceremony of the dharamsala was performed by a high placed official of the Province, the Hon'ble Mr. Burn, as representative of the Lieutenant-Governor, who had consented to preside but was presented by sudden indisposition. An account of the opening ceremony, was published in a copy of the 'Advocate' (a local paper printed in English of which B. Ganga Prasad was Editor) The account is reprinted at pages 34 to 38 of Book A. The relevant portions of the speech may be quoted.

"The history of the dharamsala may be related in a few words. B. Chhedi Lal in whose memory the building has been constructed was one of my first cousins...He directed me as the executor of his Will to realise moneys due to him and devote the accumulated funds to some charitable purposes.

"In 1911 it was found possible to consider what form the charity should take.....The conclusion arrived at was that the funds in my hands could not be better utilised than by meeting one of the most urgent needs of Lucknow."

Then he dilates upon the great want in Lucknow of a residence where respectable Hindus may put up during their visit. He mentioned that three marriage parties had occupied the building already and that th-first people who were to occupy it after the opening ceremony were the Indian members of the All India Sanitary Conference. Then he proceeded: "Hence I thought private charity would be better directed to remove this great source of inconvenienceThe dharamsala has been constructed on a plan quite different from the one adopted by ordinary buildings of the kind which one finds in centres of pilgrimage. The building has been purposely designed to be double-storied. On the upper flat there are 19 rooms with large verandahs in the front. One of the rooms has been constructed for use of parda-nashin ladies. The rooms have been suitably furnished. The rooms and the cubicles on the ground floor will accommodate over one hundred persons. There is a hall which would be used for accommodating large parties and holding small meetings."

ATANT RAM v. ISHRI PRASAD

Later on he made reference to the method of management.

He said :—

"The management of the dharamsala will be placed in the hands of a committee consisting of representative Hindus: that has already been constituted and will soon be registered as a charitable body. The committee will have entire control and supervision of the building, of funds realised in the shape of rents of ten shops attached to it and contributions that might reasonably be expected from people occupying rooms in the upper flat. The committee will soon frame rules for the proper management of the property and guidance of its temporary occupants. It will be the duty of the committee to see that the dharamsala is used for no other purpose than the one for which it has been constructed and that the savings after paying the expense of management are devoted to objects of public charities."

The speech ends with a pious hope "that those who will from now find shelter under the roof of this dharamsala will bless the memory of him whose well-directed charity, I doubt not, will meet a real want of this important City."

A perusal of this speech will leave one in doubt whether a hotel was opened for use of well-to-do Hindu visitors of the City or a public building which may be of use to Hindus to accommodate marriage parties and hold meetings. The objects are by no means clear. The surplus was desired to be devoted to objects of public charity, but the building may be one which it was intended to run on a business footing. Rent was to be charged for certain rooms. The committee existed on paper; and it is admitted by B. Ishri Prasad that not a single meeting of the committee has yet been held, and that B. Ganga Prasad alone, during his life time, and after him the defendant looked after the building. Whatever the intention of the founder may be, there was no realization. He himself wanted the building to serve purposes other than those of a charitable institution known among Indians by the term of dharamsala. We associate the term with a place where a certain section of the public can claim residence as of right without any payment. To our minds, a boarding-house where the members of a Sanitary Conference may put up will not convey the native idea of a dharamsala. B. Ganga Prasad himself must have felt that the building served secular purposes, so he expressed his intention of registering the committee under the Societies Registration Act No. XXI of 1830. The management of the dharamsala was never made over to any committee during B. Ganga Prasad's life time, nor since then to this day. We may quote here from the judgment of this Court (Ex. 9) :—

"It may be noted that it was intended that fees should be charged and that the building should yield an income. It was the declared intention of the executor to make over the management (and in all probability to vest the ownership also) in a society registered under Act XXI of 1860, under conditions which would secure that the income should be wholly spent on charitable objects. That intention was never carried out either by him or by his successor B. Ishri Prasad. The building remains under the sole control of the latter and there is no evidence that the charitable objects on which the surplus income was to be spent have ever been formulated. Under these circumstances, the plaintiff is we think entitled to treat it as part of the assets of Chhedi Lal."

These observations are fully justified by the evidence on the record. The evidence of a witness, Pandit Ram Nath, recorded in a previous suit has been admitted in this suit: At Book A-23 he is reported to have said "Ganga Prasad said that after the committee should be formed he would cut off his personal connection, and might be a member or chairman of the committee." Obviously, certain persons were vaguely asked whether they would be members of the committee, but no committee was definitely formed, and B. Ganga Prasad had not severed his personal connection with the building. There is no word in the speech which would indicate that a trust was created and that the property was made over to trustees. The defendant dwelt on the laying of the foundation stone by a senior member of the family one B. Sunder Lal, on the opening ceremony performed by the Hon'ble Mr. Burn and on the religious hawan which appears to have been recited twice as indications of the trust. These functions, however, do not turn an illusory trust into a definite one. The difficulty is the nebulous character of the objects which the building was to serve. There were the usual faults of procrastination and of a desire of getting things done on the cheap. The formulation of the object of the trust was put off from day to day and, instead of getting a trust-deed prepared by paying a practitioner unconnected with the matter, a busy practitioner who has 20 different jobs on his hands besides attending to his profession to earn his living, was requested to put the matter through free of charge. If a Court were called upon to administer a trust of this nature it would not be possible for it to do so. Their Lordships of the Privy Council quoted from an English ruling how a bequest or device would be void for vagueness and uncertainty Runchordas Vandravandas v. Parvatibai (1), "As it is a maxim, that the execution of a trust shall be under the control of the Court, it must be of such a nature that it can be under that control; so that the administration of it can be reviewed by the Court; or, if the trustee dies, the Court itself can execute the trust: a trust, therefore, which in case of mal-administration, could be reformed and a due administration directed; and then, unless the subject and the objects can be ascertained, upon principles familiar in other cases, it must be decided that the Court can neither reform mal-administration nor direct a due administration." The trust here as presented before us is void for uncertainty, much is said by the lower Court about a committee. It will be sufficient commentary on it to point out that in his written statement B. Ishri Prasad has made no mention whatsoever of a committee. What is said in para. 14 of the written statement was "B. Ganga Prasad Varma . . . declaring the same as trust according to Hindu belief himself remained the manager thereof, in the capacity of a trustee, so long as he lived."

The lower Court held that the Trusts Act, No. II of 1882, did not apply to the trust of this dharamsala because under section 1 of the Act nothing therein contained applies to public or private religious or charitable endowments. We have given reasons for holding that the dharamsala was not a religious or a charitable endowment. In his speech B. Ganga Prasad stated that the surplus will be devoted to objects of public charities by the committee. There was no committee except as a nebulous hypothesis, and it is admitted that the surplus was not devoted to any charity. Thus, it cannot be said that the income was turned into a public or private religious or charitable endowment. We are of opinion that for such a trust as one contemplated by Babu Ganga Prasad to be valid, it should be declared by a non-testamentary instrument in writing signed by the author of the trust or the trustee and registered, or by the Will of the author of the trust or the trustee under section 5 of the Trusts Act. There is neither a registered document nor a Will to support the alleged trust in suit.

The learned Subordinate Judge has spun another web of fiction to cover the true facts of the case. He was of opinion that B. Ganga Prasad as executor divested himself of ownership of a certain sum of money and appropriated it to the specific purpose of the trust. He, therefore, severed that amount from the estate of B. Chhedi Lal and became a trustee thereof. In our opinion there was no severance. B. Ganga Prasad went on spending money out of the amount which was in his possession as executor and no attempt was made to separate the dharamsala from the rest of the assets of B. Chhedi Lal. The defendant himself, who apparently is no believer in fictions, has supplied the proof thereof in the written statement. The first three suits in Schedule D of which the expenses are debited against the dharamsala are :—

- (1) Application for the grant of Letters of Administration in favour of B. Ishri Prasad and B. Brij Mohan Lal;
- (2) Expenses relating to the preparation of a list of property and inventory;
- (3) Expenses relating to the preparation of accounts in respect of B. Chhedi Lal's property.

We are glad that the defendant has no use for pretence. Before he took charge the rent for the rooms in the dharamsala was called "Imdad" (help), but this foolery was more than the defendant could put up with and he called the payment rent as it really was.

It was argued on behalf of the defence that the administrator of B. Chhedi Lal's estate can recover only the money spent on the dharamsala and not any portion of the building itself. Our attention is drawn to section 146 of the Probate and Administration Act where it is laid down that, when an executor or administrator misapplies the estate of the deceased, he is liable to make good the loss or damage so occasioned. Reference was also made by way of analogy to section 66 of the Trusts Act which entitles the beneficiary to a charge on the whole fund where the trustee wrongly mingles the trust property with his own. Here, however, the plaintiff makes no allegation of misapplication. His case is that the executor utilized the money profitably to the estate in investing it in the dharamsala. If an executor invests a portion of the assets in constructing a building there is no reason why an administrator who succeeds the executor should not claim the building as part of the assets. The defendant desired that the present suit may be dismissed and the plaintiff referred to a suit for money realizable by sale of the dharamsala. Even if this had been a more equitable view to take under the circumstances of the case and if we had held the plaintiff entitled only to the capital sum expended on the dharamsala with interest we should have given him a decree in the present suit. In the plaint there is a prayer that any other relief warranted by justice on the merits of the case be granted to the plaintiff, and Court-fee has been paid on a sum of nearly Rs. 50,000.

Another argument of the defendant was that, as soon as an executor converted ready cash into something else, it ceased to be the asset of the deceased, because the property into which the cash was converted did not exist in the life time of the deceased. Such a contention will not bear examination. After defining assets it is stated in Williams' Law of Executors (Vol. II, 1905, p. 1279): "There are many instances in which property in the hands of an executor is regarded as asset, although it was never in the testator." It will be remembered that when the plaintiff's brother Badri Narain sued for his legacy this Court held that the money could be recovered by sale of the dharamsala (Ex. 9). This decision implies that when cash was converted into a building the building became the asset of the deceased which could be charged for the payment of a legacy. . .

There remains one plea of the appellant to examine. It was argued by his learned Counsel that B. Ganga Prasad as executor was justified in borrowing money to invest in the dharamsala, and that the entire dharamsala should be decreed to the plaintiff, who would be willing on rendition of accounts to pay the debt contracted by B. Ganga Prasad. This argument, however, is in conflict with the position taken up by the plaintiff in his pleadings. In para 15 of his replication he said: "The plaintiff is not prepared to admit that under the Will of B. Chhedi Lal B. Ganga Prasad had any right or power to obtain any debt from the National Bank, or that he having obtained any loan from the National Bank spent the same on the erection of the dharamsala buildings. Besides, B. Ganga Prasad had no need to borrow any money from the National Bank for building dharamsala." Thus, the plaintiff repudiates the executor's action in borrowing money. In para. 35 he pleads that if the defendant spent any money out of his own pocket the estate of B. Chhedi Lal will not be liable for the payment of that sum, either with or without interest. Reference is necessary to a suit brought by the National Bank of India against the plaintiff.

iff as administrator and the defendant as heir of B. Ganga Prasad. In that suit the plaintiff succeeded in this Court in his plea that the estate of B. Chhedi Lal was not liable for money borrowed by B. Ganga Prasad. In a judgment delivered on 11th January 1922 a learned Judge of this Court held that, in so far as the money was borrowed by B. Ganga Prasad to supplement the assets left by B. Chhedi Lal, his liability was clearly a personal one. He was of opinion that, except under certain special cases, of which the present was not one, it was settled law that upon a contract of borrowing made by an executor after the death of the testator, the executor is only liable personally and cannot be sued as executor so as to get execution against the asset of the testator. Unfortunately, the parties are on such unfriendly terms, that there is no prospect of any compromise between them, and we prefer to be guided by the pleadings and actions of the plaintiff than by the words of his Counsel.

We hold that the dharamsala was built with two separate funds (1) the assets of B. Chhedi Lal and (2) the money of B. Ganga Prasad either paid out of his own pocket or borrowed. The dharamsala, therefore, is the property of both in the proportion of the money of each spent thereon.

We have not noticed above the defendants argument that the dharamsala building is administered estate, even if it is not wakf, because this argument has been effectively answered by the lower Court in its decision on the 25th issue that the question will depend on whether the property is wakf or not. The argument does not require any separate consideration.

We discharge the decree of the lower Court and pass a preliminary decree in favour of the plaintiff for joint possession of the dharamsala to the extent of money of Chhedi Lal spent in the construction, that is, if the amount spent out of Chhedi Lal's assets be designated by A and the rest of the sum expended on the building by B, the plaintiff is decreed joint possession of the extent of $\frac{A}{A+B}$.

We remit the suit to the lower Court for the preparation of a final decree to determine the exact amount spent out of B. Chhedi Lal's assets and the balance of the amount spent on the building. The exact proportion shall be indicated in the final decree. Account shall be indicated in the final decree. Account shall also be taken from the defendant of the management of the dharamsala and the same proportion of the surplus income realised by the defendant, if any, shall be decreed to the plaintiff. In the word dharamsala is included the effects contained therein of which a list shall be prepared by the lower Court. In the final decree costs of both Courts shall be made payable according to the success and failure of each party.

We desire to express our belief in the perfect good faith of the defendant who has attempted to carry out to the best of his ability what he considered to be a trust founded by his brother. It is unfortunate that he should be on such unfriendly terms with the plaintiff, as to make the prospect of a compromise between them a very rare possibility. At the same time, we express a hope that the parties will not waste more money in litigation and attempt to arrive at some kind of settlement.

It was represented to us during argument that the heirs of B. Chhedi Lal desire to carry on the dharamsala as a trust. If so, the present litigation will be unreal and it is to be regretted that B. Ishri Prasad did not have B. Chhedi Lal's daughter and grandsons examined as witnesses in the trial Court. If such is really the case, the Court of the District Judge which granted Letters of Administration to the plaintiff may be able to explore possibilities of a private settlement.

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. II, rr. 2, 4—Suit for possession—Mesne profits from date of decree to date of possession, whether can be claimed—Separate suit, maintainability of.

The law permits a plaintiff in a suit for possession to claim mesne profits not only up to the date of suit or decree but up to the date of delivery of possession, and the failure of a plaintiff to make the claim in the suit for possession debars him from putting it forward in a separate suit.

Ram Din v. Bhup Singh, 80 A. 225; 5 A. L. J. 192; A. W. N. (1908) 96; and Kashi Pershad v. Bajrang Pershad, 80 A. 86; 4 A. L. J. 768; A. W. N. (1907), 281 followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Cawnpore, dated the 22nd March 1922.

Mr. Mushtaq Ahmad, for the Appellant.Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Respondants.

JUDGMENT.—The learned District Judge has applied the principles which are laid down by a Bench of this Court in Ram Din v. Bhup Singh (1), which affirm the view taken by a Single Judge in Kashi Pershad v. Bajrang Pershad in (2). The learned Counsel for the appellant admits that the law has been applied correctly but he takes exception on one point. The decree for redemption was passed on 23rd April 1919 and possession was not obtained until the 16th July 1919. His case is that, although a separate suit is barred for the profits prior to 23rd April 1919, he was entitled in the suit out of which this appeal arises to the profits which accrued between the 23rd April 1919 and the 16th July 1919. I cannot, however, accept this argument. The law as laid down in the two above rulings is based upon the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure which, in order to prevent multiplicity of suits, direct that all questions arising out of one cause of action should be heard and determined in the same suit, and that if a plaintiff omits to take his remedy at the time of the original suit he shall be debarred from taking it at a later stage. But the law also provides for the awarding of mesne profits up to the date of obtaining possession and so it was open to the plaintiff-appellant not only to have asked for the mesne profits up to the date that the decree was passed but up to the date that he obtained possession and his omission to have done so tells against him not only up to the date that the decree was passed but up to the date that he obtained possession. Apart from that fact, it is difficult to understand how any profits could have accrued between the 23rd April 1919 and the 16th July 1919 for in that period there are not, ordinarily, any crops standing on the ground. The question of rent demand would probably not enter into the case.

For the above reasons, I accept the view taken by the learned District Judge and dismiss this appeal with costs on the higher scale.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Second Additional Subordinate Judge of Madura, in O. S. No. 25 of 1921 (O. S. No. 48 of 1920, on the file of the Sub. Court, Madura.)

JUDGMENT.

Phillips, J.—While I feel convinced that the parties did not at the time of entering upon the contract intend that actual physical delivery should be taken by each of the firms in turn, for such an arrangement would cause unnecessary delay and trouble, yet I am not prepared to differ from my learned brother's opinion that they have not given effect to this intention in the contract, and consequently I agree in the order proposed.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The plaintiffs have instituted this suit for recovery of Rs. 6,250 with interest thereon on the ground that the said sum was paid by them as advance in respect of a contract entered into with the defendants, and that the plaintiffs are entitled to a refund of the amount, the defendants having broken the contract. There was an oral agreement on the 8th of August 1918 and the terms of it were subsequently reduced to writing in what is known as varthamanam letter bearing the date 28th of October 1918 which the defendants sent to the plaintiffs. The contract was for the sale of 50 bales of yarn containing 80 bundles each and the price was settled at Rs. 14-8 per bundle. The goods are stated to be those which the defendants had agreed to buy from Mr. Lakshmana Aiyar who himself had contracted to purchase them from Messrs Ramachari & Sons who in their turn had placed an order for them with the Madura Mills. The varthamanam refers to the writing evidencing his contract between the defendants and Mr. Lakshmana Iyer and it then recites the fact that the defendants received from the plaintiff earnest-money amounting to Rs. 6,250 at the rate of Rs. 125 per bale.

The most important terms of the contract, on a construction of which the decision of this case turns, are given below:—

"On the said 50 bales being received by K. V. Ramachari & Sons and then from them by R. G. Lakshmana Iyer & Sons and then from them by us, we shall then and there send to you advice of their arrivals. On the very date of receipt of such advice, you shall pay the balance left after deducting from the amount of value of the bale or bales calculated at the above rate of Rs. 14-8, the advance of Rs. 125 per bale free from interest and obtain delivery of the bale or bales. In default, you are liable to pay the damages, costs, etc., incurred thereby. If on receipt by us of advice of the arrivals of bale or bales we fail to give information thereof to you or to make delivery of the bales for which money is paid, we are bound to pay to you the damages, etc., thereby incurred by you."

The material facts are these. The defendants gave the plaintiffs three notices of arrival, the first relating to 4 bales, the second to 2 bales, and the third to 3 bales, and they were dated the 1st of November, the 4th December and the 5th of November 1918 respectively. Of course, the notices are not strictly notices of arrival, but I use the expression as it had been throughout used at the trial, in the judgment of the lower Court and in the course of the arguments before us. I shall reproduce below one of the three notices as the terms of it have an important bearing upon the issue to be decided and I may add that the other notices are more or less in the same terms: --

"As M. R. Ry. R. C. Lakshmana Iyer & Sons have given us intimation through letter that out of the bales mentioned in the varthamanam letter written and given to you by us on the 12th instant, 4 bales arrived, 2 bales on the 8th instant and 2 bales on the 13th; you should without delay bring and pay money for the said 4 bales and take delivery of the said bales."

It is admitted that the defendants did not send the plaintiffs arrival notices in respect of the remaining 41 bales. It is further admitted that the defendants did not take delivery of any of the bales from their vendor Lakshman Iyer. It transpires in evidence that the Madura Mills kept in stock 9 bales on account of Ramachari & Sons from the 21st of October 1918 to 31st October 1918; that the said bales were not taken delivery of; that eventually the Mills cancelled the contract and sent their purchasers letter of cancellation, dated 3rd June 1919, and that the Mills did not obtain any sum for damages from their purchasers, the said Ramachari & Sons. The defendants admit that they made no attempt to take delivery of the 9 bales in question after the receipt by them of arrival notices from their own vendor. Nor did the defendants make any attempt to get the balance of 41 bales.

It must be stated that the plaintiffs allege in the plaint that they tendered the price and asked for the delivery of the 9 bales. This issue of fact was decided against plaintiffs by the Subordinate Judge and it was argued before us that this finding is wrong. Again, the defendants alleged that the plaintiffs on the receipt by them of the arrival notices represented that they did not want the bale and requested that the contract might be cancelled agreeing to pay damages and that the defendants accordingly cancelled the contract. The lower Court found that the case set up by the defendants was false, and their Vakil did not make any serious attempt to argue that this finding was wrong.

On these facts, the question to be determined is: Did either party break the contract, and, if so, who broke it? By the contract, the defendants agreed to give notices of arrival. But the contract expressly provides that notices of arrival shall be given by the defendants only after the goods are received by them or, literally translating the Tamil words, "after the goods come to them." The contract contemplates the receipt of goods by Ramachari & Sons and their being passed on to Lakshmana Iyer and then the defendants getting the goods. The defendants are to give notices of arrival only after they receive the goods. It is not sufficient under the contract that the defendants were in a position to say, "our vendors have given us notices of arrival and you the plaintiffs are therefore bound to pay the price and take delivery of the goods." Under the contract, the giving of arrival notices is a condition precedent and no obligation on the part of the plaintiffs arises till such notices are given and it is equally clear that no valid arrival notices can be given till the defendants receive the goods; or, in other words, till the goods "come to the defendants." It is true that in several contracts of a similar kind which have come before the Courts there is not to be found such a provision as this. But this fact cannot affect our judgment. We must construe the particular contract before us and I do not think we can ignore a very clearly expressed term on the ground that it is not unusual for yarn dealers to enter into contracts containing different stipulations. The varthamanam says

"On the said 50 bales coming to K.V. Ramachari & Sons and then coming from them to Lakshmana Iyer & Sons and then coming from them to us we shall then and there send you advice of their arrivals."

This clause is put in the forefront of the contract and we cannot lightly impute to business men an intention to treat words in a business document like this as conveying no particular meaning. In other words, the statement relating to the receipt of the goods is not merely an integral part of the contract but is a condition precedent. The intention of the parties, as appears from the writing, was certainly not that the defendants could, without taking delivery of the goods, insist upon performance of the contract on the part of the plaintiffs. The defendants suggested that if the plaintiffs went up with the money to the Madura Mills and paid the price of the 9 bales, delivery could have been obtained; that is to say, that the plaintiffs could have paid the price on behalf of Ramachari & Co., and got the goods. This is not what the parties intended. If that was the intention, the parties would have said so and as a fact many contracts entered into at this period contained such a stipulation. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the defendants committed a breach of the contract by giving arrival notices which are not in accordance with the terms of the agreement.

This may be looked at, again, from a slightly different point of view. The defendants agreed to supply the bales which they themselves were to receive from their vendors. The term relating to the receipt of the goods is a part of the description of the goods and that term is a condition. In Bowes v. Shand (1) a contract for goods to be shipped during the months of March and April was construed according to the literal meaning and goods partly shipped in February for which bills of lading were then signed were held not to satisfy the contract. Lord Blackburn observed :

"If the description of the article tendered is different in any respect it is not the article bargained for, and the other party is not bound to take it. The parties have chosen, for reasons best known to themselves, to say; we bargain to take rice, shipped in this particular region, at that particular time, on board that particular ship, and . . . it must be shown not merely that it is equally good, but that it is the same article as they have bargained for, otherwise they are not bound to take it."

In Behn v. Burness, (2) action was brought upon a Charter Party dated the 19th day of October 1860, in which it was agreed that Behri's ship 'now in the port of Amsterdam' should proceed to New Port and there load a cargo of coals which she should carry to Hong-kong. At the date of the contract the ship was not in the port of Amsterdam and did not arrive there until the 23rd. When she reached New Port, Burness refused to load a cargo and repudiated the contract. Thereupon action was brought and the question for the Court was whether the words 'now in the port of Amsterdam' amounted to a condition the breach of which entitled Burness to repudiate the contract, or whether they only gave him a right, after carrying out the contract, to sue for such damages as he had sustained. The Exchequer Chamber held it to be a condition. This principle has been recognised in numerous other English decisions and it is scarcely necessary to refer to them; it is sufficient to say that this rule was adopted by this Court in Sivarama Aiyar v. Subbiah & Sons (3) where it was held that a tender of goods was bad on the ground that the vendors had purchased them at prices different from those named in the contract although the goods answered the description in respect of quality, mark and quantity.

On the defendants' admission that they did not give any arrival notices in regard to the 41 bales the plaintiffs are entitled to the return of the advance in respect of them. In regard to the 9 bales, as I have said, the plaintiffs are also entitled to the advance paid in respect of them, the defendants' notices being bad and the defendants being guilty of the breach. The learned Vakil for the defendants contended, on the strength of the last clause in the contract, that they did not commit a breach. I am unable to accept this argument. The last clause does not certainly supersede the earlier clauses but it is only supplementary. It presupposes and does not dispense with, the obligation on the part of the defendant to send proper arrival notices but it further provides that bales shall be delivered on payment of cash, thus delivery and payment being regarded at that stage as concurrent acts.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 340-B OF 1922.

November 5, 1923.

Present :—Mr. Kinkhede, A. J. C.

BALIRAM AND ANOTHER—APPELLANTS

versus

KAMALJA AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Evidence Act (I of 1872) ss. 53, 71—Attesting execution whether includes attestation and admission of execution—Question of fact—Second Appellate Court—Burden of proof, when loses significance—Mortgage-suit—Execution—Recitals, on whom binding—Mortgage executed by widow—Adoption after mortgage, whether binding on adopted son—Burden of proof, discharge of by cross-examination of opponent's witnesses.

Section 69 of the Evidence Act applies only where no attesting witness can be found, but where an attesting witness is called and examined and denies execution of the document, the provisions of section 71 come into operation.

The "execution" of a deed designates the whole operation including both the signature by the executant and the attestation thereof by the subscribing witnesses.

A Court of second appeal is precluded from considering the admission of execution made before the Registration Officer, as such question is a question of fact to be decided by a Court of fact and not to be disposed of in the second appeal as a matter of law.

Although the burden of proof remains constantly shifting in the course of the trial, according as one fact or the other is brought out in evidence by one party or the other, the question of burden becomes immaterial when evidence has been adduced by both the parties and the relevant facts are before the Court.

In an action to enforce a mortgage security where there is no contest by the mortgagor and execution is admitted by or proved against him, the onus lies upon him to prove that the recital as to payment of consideration for the deed which he executed is untrue. Where, however, a stranger to the transaction is a party, and the claim is contested by him and he denies execution and also asserts that there was no consideration for the mortgage, the onus is upon the mortgagee to prove his case.

In case the attesting witnesses are either hostile or not available and the writer of the bond is dead the mortgagee should give independent evidence to identify the handwriting of the person who purported to put the mark or to write the name of the executant and also that of the witness who purported to attest the deed but whose direct evidence is not procurable.

A recital in a deed binds only the maker, i.e., the party to the instrument, and not persons who are not parties thereto, although they may have derived their title from such maker. A person who is not a party to a transaction is in the category of a stranger, and as such can set up an inconsistent claim or defence whether he be a plaintiff or defendant.

It is not always necessary that the party who has the burden must himself lead evidence. It is open to him to sustain the onus cast upon him by the facts which he may elicit by cross-examination of the other party's witnesses.

Although a person adopted by a Hindu widow gets the title to her husband's estate by virtue of his adoption by her, yet he does not derive his title through her, and, therefore, cannot be looked upon as a party to a deed of mortgage executed by her before his adoption.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No 174 of 1921, dated the 28th March 1922.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Appellants.

Messrs. D. T. Mangalmoorti, M. B. Marathi and R. R. Jaywant, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Only two points are involved in the case, one of attestation and the other of consideration. So far as the question of consideration is concerned, both the lower Courts have concurrently found that the plaintiffs have not been able to prove the fact of the existence of the debt recited in the mortgage-deed in suit. Plaintiffs, however, contend that the decision regarding consideration cannot be supported as a finding of fact as its correctness or otherwise depends upon the question as to who had the burden to prove it. Reliance is placed on Burkur Ram Kishan Singh v. Lalji Ram (1) and it is contended that defendant No. 1 on 25th April 1908, the date of the mortgage, represented the estate and, therefore, recitals by her as to the existence of the debt from the time of defendant No. 1's husband bind not only her but also all persons who derive their title from her by virtue of subsequent transactions, i. e., defendant No. 2 whose adoption took place in April 1919, i. e., long subsequent to the mortgage in suit, as also defendants Nos. 3 and 4 who are subsequent mortgagees from her. It is further contended that, inasmuch as the defendants have not led any reliable evidence to disprove the recitals which prima facie bind defendant No. 1, the plaintiffs' claim should be decreed provided the mortgage is held validly attested as against all the defendants. As regards attestation it is contended that execution having been admitted by or proved against defendant No. 1 the plaintiffs had not to prove attestation as against any of the other defendants. On the side of the respondents it is contended that, however important this question of burden of proof may be in the earlier stages of a case, it has no significance after all the evidence is out on both sides. The evidence must be looked at as a whole and the truth determined or inferred from it, and that, if there be evidence on record to disprove attestation and consideration that is sufficient, no matter by what party it is laid before the Court. Reliance is placed on the decision of the Privy Council in East India Railway Company v. Kirkwood (2) in support of the first contention, and on Makund v. Beharilal (3), quoted with approval in Lal Singh v. Chaitram (4), in support of the second contention. I think there is much force in the respective contentions of the parties and I must decide both these questions. I will consider the question of attestation first and then the question of consideration. By a reference to the pleadings of defendant No. 1 it is sought to be made out that she had admitted the execution of the mortgage-deed in suit. I have carefully gone through the pleadings and I find that there was no clear and unambiguous admission on the part of defendant No. 1 about the execution, receipt of consideration and attestation of the deed in suit. In this view, the provisions of section 70 of the Indian Evidence Act could not help the appellants: see Budha v. Sarwan (5) compare Mt. Sarja v. Murkhdhar (6) and Raj

Mangal Misir v. Mathura Dubain (7). It was, therefore, necessary for the plaintiffs to establish by independent evidence the fact of execution and attestation even as against defendant No. 1.

As regards the other defendants, they not having admitted execution and attestation the burden of proof was clearly on the plaintiff. So the plaintiffs were bound to prove every fact which would entitle them to a decree on the mortgage as against all the defendants. Suffice it to say at the outset, that section 69 of the Evidence Act has no application to the present case. It applies only to a case where no attesting witness "can be found." Here an attesting witness was called and examined and consequently the provisions of section 71 of the Indian Evidence Act came into operation as soon as he denied the execution of the document. It will be noticed that in this case the writer is dead, and out of the four attesting witnesses two, namely, Gundaram and Harsing, are proved to be dead and Moraji is untraceable, as P. W. 1 says. The only surviving attesting witness Tukaram was called and examined as witness No. 3. The Courts could have believed or disbelieved him when he said that the executant did not sign the deed in his presence and in the presence of the other attesting witness Harsing. But they chose to believe him and hold that direct proof of attestation was wanting in the case. The Courts further refused to infer due attestation from that part of the deposition of that witness wherein he said the executant Kamalja and the witnesses Gundaram and Moraji had already signed before he arrived; that statement of the witness not being a statement of a fact which the witness actually saw with his own eyes had no evidentiary value in order to raise any presumption of due attestation also. It proved the negative because when he took up the deed for signature, it already bore the signature or mark of the executant and the signatures of the said two witnesses. He was not, therefore, competent to speak about them from personal knowledge. Instead of, then, proving the execution of the mortgage, the witness gave out a circumstance which negatived the inference of due attestation. The District Judge, therefore, was right in refusing to infer due attestation or to apply the maxim omnia praesumuntur rite esse acta to the facts of the case.

It is, however, contended that there was other evidence on the record, namely, that of P. W. 1 and P. W. 3, and in view of the provisions of section 71 of the Evidence Act, the other evidence ought to have been believed. The lower Courts have, however, not accepted it as proving execution and attestation. With a view to satisfy myself as to whether that evidence was correctly appreciated by the Courts below I have myself read through the evidence of P. W. 1 and P. W. 3 with the help of Counsel and I have unhesitatingly come to the conclusion that it is not only vague and lacking in precision but leaves many things unsaid on several material points. The plaintiff, as P. W. 1, speaks to the execution of the deed by Kamalaja in the presence of the attesting witnesses, apparently all the four witnesses, but he stands contradicted by P. W. 3 who says all were not present. Moreover, he has stated that Rs. 100 were paid before the Sub-Registrar but he stands self-condemned by the Sub-Registrar's endorsement which shows that consideration was simply admitted by the executant before him. The plaintiff's testimony was, therefore, not acceptable and I cannot blame the Judges of the Courts below for not believing him. Under circumstances such as these, every plaintiff would be well advised to give independent evidence to identify the handwriting of the writer who purported to put the mark or to write the name of the executant and also that of the witnesses who purported to attest the deed but whose direct evidence is not procurable. If this independent evidence had been given in this case and still the Courts below had thrown it out, then there was some room for interference. The defendant No. 1's own testimony, as D. W. 1, does not in any way help the plaintiffs on this point. Her statement as a witness also does not contain any clear admission of execution of the mortgage-deed in suit. In the present state of the record I am not inclined to hold that the plaintiff made any serious attempt at proving the execution of the mortgage which, as laid down in Jhama v. Deobux (8), designates the whole operation, including both the signature by the executant and the attestation thereof by the subscribing witnesses. Attesting witnesses who actually saw Kamalaja put her mark or touch the pen of the writer who wrote her name under her instructions and thereafter subscribed thereto their own names as a memorandum of that fact, as held in Ajab v. Mangal (9), had to be examined in this case. Such evidence of direct attestation being wanting and plaintiffs' other evidence being found deficient and unreliable the lower Courts were right in holding the execution of the deed as not proved as against defendant No. 1 or any of the remaining defendants.

It could have been argued on the plaintiffs-appellants' behalf before the lower Courts that the admission of execution made by defendant No. 1 before the Registering Officer was sufficient to prove execution and receipt of consideration. But that does not appear to have been done. I, as a Court of second appeal, am precluded from considering it as such a question is one to be decided by a Court of fact and not to be disposed of in second appeal as a matter of law: see Mt. Sarja v. Murlidhar (5).

It is next contended that both the Judges have stated that the document in suit was "executed" by the mortgagor but they have held against the plaintiffs only on the point of due and valid attestation. Accepting this view of the findings as correct, all I have to say is that, as pointed out above, "execution" designates the whole operation including signing by the executant and attestation by the witnesses.

I will now proceed to consider the second question, namely, about the burden of proving or disproving consideration for the mortgage. Although the burden of proof remains constantly shifting in the course of the trial according as one fact or the other is brought out in evidence by one party or the other, still the question of onus loses its significance after a certain stage of the trial. Their Lordships of the Privy Council have repeated this more than once in several cases. In Seturatinam Aiyar v. Venkatchela Goundan (10) the Madras High Court when the case again came before it gave a finding upon a point which, even after remand from the High Court, the District Judge had decided in an incomplete manner. That finding was attacked by the plaintiff-appellant before their Lordships of the Privy Council, firstly, on the ground that the burden of proof was wrongly thrown on him and, secondly, on the ground that in any case the facts did not justify the inference. His Lordship of the Privy Council, Sir Lawrence Jenkins, observed at page 576 :—

"To determine on whom the burden of proof lay it is necessary to ascertain with precision upon what proposition of fact or of law the parties were at variance and how the matter stood when the case reached the High Court."

Their Lordships' judgment also quotes with approval the following passage from the judgment of the High Court as showing a true perception of the position :—

"We also hold that even if that fact could be of any use to him the various circumstances proved, un rebutted by anything in the plaintiff's favour, necessarily raise a presumption that the defendants have occupancy rights."

The following passage at page 577 is very illuminating :—

"In the end, the learned Judge drew the inference, they speak of it as a presumption in favour of the defendants' occupancy rights, and as finally expressed their determination was unvitiated by any error as to burden of proof. The controversy had passed the stage at which discussion as to the burden of proof was pertinent; the relevant facts were before the Court and all that remained for decision was what inference should be drawn from them."

In an action to enforce a mortgage-security where there is no contest by the mortgagor, and execution is admitted by or proved against him, the onus lies upon defendant to prove that the recital as to payment of consideration for the deed which he executed is untrue. This view is supported by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Kalepershad Tewarree

v. Rajah Sahib Perhlad Sein (11), Ali Khan Bahadur v. Indar Pershad (12) and the decision of the Full Bench in Fulli v. Bassiruddi (13) quoted with approval by Justice Mukerjee in Krishna v. Nagendra Bala (14), where, however, a stranger to the transaction is a party and the claim is contested by him and he denies execution and also asserts that there was no consideration for the mortgage, the onus is upon the mortgagee to prove his case; see in this connection Rahimjan Bibi v. Imanjan (15) which followed a previous decision of the same Court in Bisheswar Dayal v. Harbans Sahay (16) in which the dictum in Baranashi Pershad v. Brij Lal (17) which formed the very foundation of the view taken by Sir Stanley Ismay, J.C., in Burkur Ram Kishen Singh's case (1), was expressly dissented from as not well founded on principle. There have since been a number of cases in which the principle that a recital binds only the maker, i.e., the party to the instrument, and not persons who are not parties thereto, although they may have derived their title from such maker, has been accepted. The correctness of the view taken by Sir Stanley Ismay, J. C., in the said case is, therefore, open to doubt in view of the trend of the later decisions. That a person who is not a party to a transaction is in the category of a stranger and as such can set up inconsistent claims or defence whether he be a plaintiff or defendant is clear from the observations of Sir Bose, A. J. C., in Joharmal v. Nainsukh (18). Sir Henry Drake-Brockman, J. C., gave the benefit of the plaintiff mortgagee's failure to establish the mortgage as against a person put into possession of the mortgaged property by the mortgagor to the mortgagor's personal representative who did not even appear to contest the suit in Kasham Khan v. Mt. Sawitre (19). In Bisheswar Dayal's case (16) the learned and eminent Judge, Sir Ashutosh Mukerjee, refused to hold that execution purchaser who according to him "may be a representative in interest of the judgment-debtor for certain purposes," was bound by the mortgagor's recitals in the mortgage. He limited their binding character as against the maker only. He observed that the position of the purchaser was different: "he knows nothing about the deed; he is not a party to it, and he is entitled to call upon the plaintiff not only to prove the execution of the deed but also to establish that there was consideration for it," and quoted with approval the decision in Shih Narain v. Shankar Panigrahi (20) which was given by the same learned Judges who had taken precisely the opposite view in Baranashi Pershad v. Brij Lal (17). This view, which is consistently maintained by the said Judge in the recent case of Krishna v. Nagemra Bala (14) abovequoted, has very rightly observed at page 337:—

"The reality of the mortgage transaction is impugned by the purchaser of the equity of redemption and the burden of proof lies consequently in the first instance on the plaintiff to establish that the deed was duly executed and the consideration paid. We may add, however, that the question of onus of proof arises only where there is no evidence one way or the other which will entitle the Judge to come to a conclusion on a question of fact to be determined: but where evidence has been adduced by both the parties and the relevant facts are before the Court, the question of burden of proof, as pointed out by Viscount Haldane in Kundal Lal v. Mt. Begum un-nissa (21) and by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Seturatnam Aiyer v. Venkatachela Goundan (10), becomes immaterial and importance should not be attached to the question on whom the initial onus lay; in such circumstances the question of the burden of proof is really not pertinent."

There observations have my entire concurrence. Looking at the facts of the case before me in the light of those observations I am clearly of opinion that the defendant No. 2 although he gets his title to the property by virtue of an adoption made by defendant No. 1 still he cannot be considered to be a person deriving his title thereto from her so as to be looked upon as a party to the instrument of mortgage, nor can the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 be looked upon as parties to the instrument as such. They were strangers to the transaction and, therefore, the initial onus of proving consideration lay on the plaintiffs and they have failed to prove it by satisfactory evidence against not only defendant No. 1 but also against Nos. 2, 3 and 4, and the question of onus ceased to be pertinent after all the evidence was once before the trial Court.

Even if it be considered that defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 are representatives-in-interest of defendant No. 1 and were bound by what she stated in the deed and that they as well as defendant No. 1 were bound to disprove the existence of the debt, still, the evidence has been fully discussed and disbelieved and finding adverse to plaintiffs has been given by the Courts below. It is argued that, in the absence of any rebutting evidence worth the name tendered by the defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 to disprove the recital about the existence of the debt, the fact must be deemed to have been sufficiently established as against them in the circumstances of the case. I am not prepared to hold that this is a case in which the defendants have not adduced any evidence. They have examined some witnesses to prove the solvency of Kamalaja's deceased husband Shivram and to show that he himself used to lend money to others and thereby to establish the absence of any need on his part to borrow the alleged debts from plaintiff and his deceased brother Jairam. The Court of first instance who heard the witnesses has, however, characterised this evidence as very "poor." Though the Judge of the lower Appellate Court has not said anything regarding it in his judgment, I am not prepared to say that the lower Appellate Court did not consider it at all; Loole v. Pyare (22). Even if that evidence be excluded from consideration, I am not prepared to hold that there is no evidence on record to prove non-payment of consideration. It is not always necessary that the party who has the burden must himself lead evidence. It is open to him to sustain the onus cast upon him by the facts which he may elicit by cross-examination of the other party's witnesses. Moti Kahanji v. Dipchand Virchand, (23) quoted with approval in Bhagwant v. Kedari (24). The defendants impugned the existence of the debt of Sheoram's time very vehemently and all their efforts were directed to elicit facts from plaintiff as P. W. 1 and from his other witnesses on the point of consideration which would go to show that such a debt did not as a matter of fact exist or could not have existed at the date of the mortgage. I think they have been more than successful in this endeavour of theirs. I have myself gone through the evidence with the help of the Counsel and pleaders who appeared in the case and I am decidedly of opinion that the defendants have established by their cross-examination all that was necessary to disprove the recitals. When they had thus succeeded in establishing that nothing was due from the deceased husband of defendant No. 1 to plaintiff and his brother, the duty of introducing opposing evidence was shifted on to the plaintiffs and as he failed to adduce such evidence his claim was naturally dismissed.

The result is that the suit was rightly dismissed and I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs. The costs of the Courts below will be paid as already ordered. The pleader's fee in this Court will be paid separately for each set of respondent or respondents.

PLAINTIFFS—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXXII, r. 7, Sch. II—Arbitration—Award not submitted within time—Fresh date fixed—Award whether valid—Agreement to refer to arbitration, whether agreement within the meaning of O. XXXII, r. 7—Revision.

Where under a reference to arbitration made by a Court, the arbitrators do not submit their award within the time fixed by the Court and the Court fixes a date for hearing and, at the same time, issues Takid to the arbitrators, the Court's order will be taken as an order for extending the time for filing the award, and the award filed before the date thus fixed shall be taken to be filed in time.

Digambari Bewa v. Joy Narayan Das, 16 Ind. Cas. 223 ; 16 O. L. J., 573, explained.

Per Page, J.: In a suit one of the parties to which is a minor represented by a guardian, if the party to the suit apply to the Court for an order of reference to arbitration the Court in hearing the application for such an order has jurisdiction to consider a petition under O. XXXII, r. 7, Civil Procedure Code. But whether it does or does not consider such application and passes the order of refusal, its order will stand and no question can arise thereafter, as to the regularity of the proceedings preliminary to the order of reference and the arbitrators get jurisdiction to proceed with and to complete the arbitration notwithstanding the fact that a petition has not been preferred under O. XXXII, r. 7, Civil Procedure Code.

Per Suhrawardy, J.: An agreement to refer to arbitration is not such an agreement as is contemplated by O. XXXII, r. 7, Civil Procedure Code. But even if it is, where it is entered into without the leave of the Court and the Court overrules an objection against its invalidity, it does not commit such an irregular exercise of jurisdiction as would justify interference in revision.

It cannot be laid down as a general rule that in no case in which an award has been filed and decrees passed in accordance therewith, interference cannot be made under section 115, Civil Procedure Code as there may be cases in which the arbitrators or the Court may have exceeded their jurisdiction or acted with material irregularity in the conduct of the proceedings. DEBIR-UD-DIN v. AMINA BIBI

Rule against the order of the Munsif, Second Court, Uluberia.

Babu Gour Mohan Dutt, for the Petitioner.

Babu Mritunjoy Chatterjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—This Rule is directed against the judgment and decree passed by the Munsif of Uluberia on the 30th November 1922 according to the award filed in the suit. Two substantial objections are taken to the decree passed by the lower Court. First, that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to pass a decree in accordance with an award filed after the time fixed by the Court for the filing of it, and, secondly, that the agreement to refer the matter to arbitration was entered into on behalf of a minor plaintiff by his mother without the sanction of the Court. The award, therefore, is not valid in law and should not be enforced.

A preliminary objection has been taken to the effect that no petition in revision lies against a judgment and decree passed in accordance with an award filed in the suit following the arbitration proceedings under Schedule II to the Civil Procedure Code; and in support of this submission reference has been made to the case of Gholam Khan v. Mahamad Hassan (1). There is a great deal of force in the objection; but, at the same time, I am not prepared to lay down as a general rule that in no case in which an award has been filed and decree passed in accordance therewith can this Court interfere under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. It is conceivable that there may be cases in which the arbitrators or the Court may have exceeded their jurisdiction or acted with material irregularity in the conduct of the proceedings. But I am of opinion that the present case is covered by the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case referred to.

With regard to the first ground of the objection, it appears that the matter was referred to the arbitration of certain persons and the 10th November 1922 was fixed for the filing of the award. On that date, the award not having been filed, the Court passed the following order: "The arbitrators have not submitted their award. Issue Takid at once fixing the 10th November for hearing." The officer who had passed that order was the same officer who passed the decree; and he says that his intention in passing that order was to extend the time to the 11th November for the filing of the award, though he had not said so in so many words. Stress is laid upon the case of Digambari Bewa v. Joy Narain Das (2), and it is contended on the authority of that case that, unless the Court expressly extends the time to file an award, the mere adjournment of the case to a future date cannot be taken to have extended the time. On a close examination of the case it, however, appears that it is an authority for the proposition that an order like the present may be taken as an order for extending the time for filing the award. In that case the final order was for the disposal of the case on the evidence to be produced by the parties before the Court on the adjourned date. The learned Judges held that would not be an extension of time for filing the award. In my opinion, by the order passed by the learned Munsif on the 23rd October, the Court intended to extend the period for the filing of the award to the 10th November. The award was filed on the 4th November 1922. It thus appears that the award was filed in time and is not invalid on the ground that it was filed out of time.

The second objection is based on O. XXXII, r. 7, and it is said that the agreement to refer the matter to arbitration is an agreement which requires the sanction of the Court; and reliance is placed upon the decision of the Madras High Court in Davuluru Vijaya Ramayya v. Davuluru Venkat Subba Rao (3). The Allahabad High Court has taken a different view and it has laid down authoritatively that an agreement to refer to arbitration is not such an agreement as is contemplated by O. XXXII, r. 7. See the case of Lutawan v. Lachya (4). There is no direct authority on the point in this Court but the Allahabad view was approved by Maclean, C. J., in the case of Annada Krishna Dey v. Jogendra

DEBIR-UD-DIN v. AMINA BIBI

Path Dey (5) Personally speaking, I think that the decision of the Allahabad High Court is correct. But it is not necessary to pursue the matter further because, in the view I take of the powers of this Court to interfere under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, this application is incompetent. A similar objection on the ground of the agreement not having been entered on behalf of a minor with the sanction of the Court was taken in the case before the Judicial Committee, namely, the case of Ghulam Khan v. Mohammed Hassan (1). Their Lordships, without dealing specifically with this objection, remarked that no appeal lies from a decree passed in accordance with the award and that a petition in revision under section 622 of the old Code will be more objectionable as it will destroy finality of arbitration proceedings. Assuming that the lower Court has committed an error of law in overruling the objection that the agreement was not validly entered into by the minor plaintiff, I do not think that it has committed any such irregular exercise of jurisdiction as would justify us in interfering with the decree passed. I may observe in passing that the case on which great reliance was placed by the petitioner, namely, the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court above alluded to, was a case in which a separate suit was filed by the minor on the ground that he was not bound by the award or the decree based thereon as he was not a party to the agreement, and the decree was not challenged in revision.

One other ground is taken, namely, that the question referred to the arbitrator for determination was whether the kobala which was sought to be set aside was genuine or not; but the arbitrators have gone further than that and found that the kobala was executed by the deceased Khoda Bux but that there was a partial failure of consideration and was executed by the deceased under circumstances which would render it liable to be set aside. The Court below has overruled that objection and has not acted without jurisdiction or illegally or with material irregularity in determining that question. I do not think that a strong case has been made out for our interference under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. The Rule is, therefore, discharged with costs. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Page J:—I am of the same opinion. This is an application for a Rule under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, calling upon the opposite party to show cause why a certain award should not be set aside. Two contentions have been urged by the applicant in support of the Rule. The first is, that the arbitrators had no jurisdiction in the matter because the award was made after the time had passed within which the arbitrators were bound to make their award. But the Court has found "that the time was duly extended by the Court and within such extension of time the award was made." There is no substance in the first contention.

The second contention is this. It is urged that the award was made on a reference ordered by the Court, but that one of the parties thereto was a minor represented by a guardian and that the provisions of O. XXXII, r. 7 had not been complied with and, therefore, that the whole basis of the arbitrator's jurisdiction was destroyed and that the award was not validly made and is null and void. The question, therefore, is whether or not the arbitrators possessed jurisdiction to make the award. Now, in considering that question it is necessary to bear in mind that this reference to arbitration was not created merely by agreement between the parties. It was ordered by the Court, and that fact, in my opinion, materially affects the jurisdiction of the arbitrators. This question was for consideration by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (1). Lord Macnaghten in giving the judgment of the Board referred to the different forms of arbitration under three heads. The first head related to occasions where the parties to a litigation desire to refer their differences to arbitration, and an order of reference is made by the Court. The second head relates to occasions where the parties, without having recourse to litigation, enter into an agreement to refer their differences to arbitrators to obtain the sanction of the Court to the award that is made; and the third head relates to occasions where the agreement to arbitrate is made by the parties without any reference whatever to the Court. In dealing with arbitrations under head I, that is to say, arbitrations which are ordered by the Court, Lord Macnaghton makes the following observation : " In cases falling under Heads II & III, the provisions relating to Cases under Head I are to be observed so far as applicable. But there is this difference which does not seem to have been always kept in view in the Courts in India. In cases falling under Head I the agreement to refer and the application to the Court founded upon it must have the concurrence of all parties concerned and the actual reference is the order of the Court. So that no question can arise as to the regularity of the proceedings up to that point." Now (supra p. 183) what happened in this case was, that the parties to the suit agreed that the matter in dispute between them should be referred to arbitration by order of the Court and one of the parties was an infant appearing by a guardian. On the application for an order of reference being made it was open to the Court in its discretion either to grant or to refuse the application. Having regard to the circumstances, the Court in this case in its discretion made an order of reference. The Court had jurisdiction when hearing the application for an order of reference to consider a petition under O. XXXII, r. 7; but whether it did so or not, the order of reference will stand, and no question could arise thereafter as to the regularity of the proceedings which were preliminary to the order of reference. Now, in my opinion, the effect of the order of reference was that the arbitrators possessed jurisdiction to proceed with and to complete the arbitration notwithstanding the fact that a petition has not been preferred under O. XXXII, r. 7. See the case of Lutawan v. Lachiyal (4). With great respect, I am not prepared to accept the view to the contrary which was expressed by the Madras High Court in the case of Davalure Ramayya v. Davalure Venkata Subba Rao (3). It is to be observed, however, that in that case the form proceeding adopted was not application to the Court to exercise its jurisdiction under section 115, but a suit by the minor to set aside the compromise. Whether the minor is entitled to dispute the validity of the award in a suit, I express no opinion; but having regard to the provisions of section 115, Civil Procedure Code, I find my self unable to come to the conclusion that in this case there was any error of law or in respect of jurisdiction committed which calls for the exercise of the jurisdiction which the High Court possesses under the provisions of this section. In these circumstances, I agree that this proceeding is misconceived and that the Rule should be discharged.

HARBHAGAT v. NARAYANANRAO

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 322 OF 1922.

July 31, 1923.

Present :—Mr. Baker, J. C.HARBHAGAT—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT*versusPandit* NARAYANANRAO AND OTHERS
—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Construction of document—"Months", meaning of—Mortgage—Foreclosure and redemption, rights of, whether co-extensive—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 21—Admission by judgment-debtor whether binding on auction-purchaser—Admission of prior mortgage by mortgagor in suit on subsequent mortgage, effect of.

The principle of the English Common Law that the term "months" used in a contract means lunar months, is not applicable to contracts in the vernacular. On the contrary, even when lunar months are mentioned in a vernacular contract, the time is to be calculated by reference to calendar months.

The ordinary presumption that the rights of redemption and foreclosure are co-extensive may be negated by a special provision in the mortgage-deed in the interests of the mortgagor. For instance, when the deed provides that the mortgagor may redeem within a certain period, it implies that the mortgagee has no right to foreclose before the expiry of that period. In such a case limitation will not begin to run against the mortgagee till after the expiry of the period fixed in the deed.

A purchaser at an execution-sale is in privity with, and the representative in interest of, the judgment-debtor within the meaning of section 21 of the Evidence Act, so as to be bound by his admissions. Where, therefore, in a mortgage-suit the mortgagor admits a prior mortgage, the purchaser of the property in execution of the mortgage-decree is bound by the prior mortgage.

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Nimar, dated the 7th April 1922, in Civil Appeal No. 10 of 1922.

Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. R. Pandit, R. B. for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued on a mortgage, dated 9th March 1908, payable in 12 months. The suit was brought on 9th March 1921. Defendant No. 1 is an auction-purchaser at a Court sale on a decree obtained by a prior mortgage. The sale was subject to the plaintiff's mortgage. The suit is admittedly brought on the last day of limitation and it is contended that it is barred by limitation, as the term 'months' used in a contract means lunar months, as has been held by the Calcutta High Court in South British Fire and Marine Insurance Co. v. Brojo Nath Shaha (1).

That case, however, and other similar cases refer to contracts in the English language. It would be wrong to apply a principle of the English Common Law to Vernacular mortgages and a reference to the notes under section 25 of the Indian Limitation Act by Rustomji will show that even when lunar months are mentioned in a Vernacular contract the time is to be decided by reference to calendar months: cf. Bungo Bujaji v. Bujaji (2) and Latifunnessa v. Dhun Kunwar (3).

The mortgage-money was, therefore, payable on or before 8th March 1909 and the day of execution being excluded under section 12 of the Limitation Act, the suit on 9th March 1921 is in time.

It has been further argued that as the mortgagor had the right to redeem within 12 months and the rights of redemption and foreclosure are co-extensive, the mortgagee could foreclose at any time after the execution of the mortgage and the money became payable on the execution of the document. The learned pleader for appellant relies on Purna Chandra Sarma v. Peary Mohan Pal Das (4) but that case itself shows that the ordinary presumption that the rights of redemption and foreclosure are co-extensive may be negated by a special provision in the interests of the mortgagor. That is the case here. The mortgagor was entitled to redeem at any period within 12 months, but it is obvious that the mortgagee could not sue for foreclosure unless and until that period had expired, since, under the terms of the mortgage, the mortgagor was entitled to delay payment until the last day of the 12 months. The effect of the appellant's argument is to ignore this stipulation altogether.

I hold, therefore, that the suit is not barred by limitation.

The mortgagor was one Bhagirathibai. She had executed a prior mortgage to another person, who sued upon it and obtained a decree. In that suit Bhagirathibai admitted the amount due on the plaintiff's mortgage. The Subordinate Judge did not adjudicate on the mortgage of plaintiff, but the property was sold subject to the plaintiff's mortgage and was purchased by the present defendant.

The lower Courts have held that he cannot contest the plaintiff's mortgage, relying on Kalidas Chaudhuri v. Prasanna Kumar Das (5), where it was held that a person who purchases an estate subject to a mortgage, whether under a voluntary conveyance or under a sale in invitum, or undertakes to discharge it, cannot be heard to deny the validity of the mortgage subject to which he made his purchase.

There is a contrary ruling in Lalchand v. Hasto Bai (6) in which it was held that a purchaser at auction-sale of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors in property which is subject to a mortgage and which mortgage was upheld at the time of sale, is not precluded from resisting a suit on the mortgage on the ground that nothing is due on it. In order to succeed, the mortgagee is bound to prove that the amount claimed is really due and an order passed under section 282, Civil Procedure Code, in execution proceedings cannot absolve him from this necessity. In that case it is not clear whether a formal order had been passed under section 282 (now O. XXI, r. 66) in execution proceedings could absolve the plaintiff from the necessity of proving that the amount which he claimed as being due on the mortgage is really due. This case was followed in Mt. Dhoka v. R. B. Behari Lal (7) which was a case of an auction-purchaser disputing a charge maintained by an order under section 282 of the old Civil Procedure Code (O. XXI, r. 62). In a similar unreported case, Rai Seth Chandmal v. Kanhayalal (First Appeal No. 42 of 1913), decided by a Bench of this Court on 22nd December 1916, the case of Lalchand v. Hasto Bai (6) (above cited) was followed and it was held that no order passed under section 282 precluded the purchaser at an auction-sale from resisting a suit on a mortgage upheld at the time of sale on the ground that nothing is due under it.

The whole subject is discussed at p. 456 of the above quoted Calcutta case and it is pointed out that the distinction between the two classes of cases depends on the question whether the property has been sold subject to the mortgage or whether mere notice of the mortgage has been given in the proclamation of sale, the former contingency being provided for by O. XXI, r. 62, and the latter by O. XXI, r. 66, and a number of rulings are quoted to illustrate the distinction.

In the present case, although it is not clear that any order under O. XXI, r. 62, was passed, the sale was subject to the plaintiff's mortgage and, therefore, in the view of the Calcutta High Court the case would be governed by O. XXI, r. 62. In this conflict of authority I should be bound to follow the previous decisions of this Court, were it not that the facts of the present case are distinguishable. In the suit brought by the prior mortgagee against the mortgagor Bhagirathibai, to which the present plaintiffs are parties, Bhagirathibai admitted the plaintiff's mortgage. The result of the principles laid down by the Privy Council in the cases of Ramcoomar Koondoo v. Mc Queen (8) and Mahomed Mozuffer Hossein v. Kishori Mohun

Roy (9) would appear to be that a purchaser at an ordinary execution-sale is in privity with, and the representative-in-interest of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of section 21 of the Evidence Act, so as to be bound by his admissions.

It would appear, therefore, that the appellant is bound by the admissions of Bhagirathibai of the plaintiff's mortgage.

It, moreover, appears that the price paid (Rs. 560) was less on account of the plaintiff's mortgage, and, as the District Judge has pointed out, he gained a substantial advantage by accepting the validity of the mortgage. I am, therefore, of opinion that he cannot now contest its validity. It has been pointed out by the lower Appellate Court that Bhagirathibai did not object to the rate of interest and that appellant cannot be allowed to do so. The lower Appellate Court has pointed out that the price paid at the auction makes allowance for the amount then due under the mortgage at the stipulated rate of interest. It may be noted that the appellant was under no obligation to purchase the mortgaged property. He entered into the transaction with his eyes open and I do not think he can contend now that the terms of the bargain were unconscionable.

The appeal is consequently dismissed with costs.

RAMESHAR DUT SINGH v. MAHARAJA JAGJIT SINGH

No valid distinction can be drawn between action taken under O. XVII, r. 2, of the Civil Procedure Code and action taken under the provisions of O. IX of the Code. O. XVII, r. 2, refers back to O. IX and gives the Court permission to decide the case in one of the ways prescribed by the latter Order.

O. XVII, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code is, however, different; it does not refer back to O. IX in any way, and a decision given under it is given on the merits. In such a case the remedy of the aggrieved party is by way of an appeal from the decree, and if the Appellate Court finds that the trial Court was wrong in proceeding under the rule it has jurisdiction to set aside the decree and remand the case to the trial Court for disposal according to law.

Jadu Nath v. Ram Narain, 1 Ind. Cas. 329; 12 O. C. 26, and Hummi v. Aziz-ud-din, 36 Ind. Cas. 277; 14 A. L. J. 1226; 39 A. 148 distinguished.

Rule 3 of O. XVII of the Civil Procedure Code applies where two elements combine, viz., (1) the adjournment must have been at the instance of a party and (2) there must be materials on the record for the Court to proceed to decide the suit. It is immaterial, however, whether the defendant is present or absent.

Appeal against the decree of the Assistant Collector, First Class, Bahraich, dated the 20th February 1923.

Messrs. Niamatullah and Mahmud Beg, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Bisheshar Nath Srivastava, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These are two connected appeals arising out of two suits filed in the Court of an Assistant Collector of the first class for arrears of rent under section 108 (2) of the Oudh Rent Act. The appeals lie direct to this Court as in each case the amount in dispute is over Rs. 5,000. The defendant appellant is a Thekedar of two villages Shukul Purwa and Kunder Ramghat in the Bahraich District from the proprietor, H. II. the Maharaja of Kapurthala, who is the plaintiff-respondent. The main ground of appeal is that the suits were decided without hearing the defendant's evidence.

The following dates are material:—

Issues were framed on 13th November 1922.

11th December 1922 was fixed for the hearing. On that date one witness was examined on behalf of the plaintiff and one on behalf of the defendant. The other witnesses of the defendant were absent and the case was adjourned on the oral application of his pleader to 20th January 1923. On that date the Assistant Collector was occupied with other work and it was further adjourned to 20th February 1923. On that day the Assistant Collector passed a decree decreeing the suits. It is against these decrees that the present appeals are filed.

The defendant had employed a Gonda pleader to take his case. At 8-30 A. M. the pleader handed in a telegram at Gonda Railway Station stating that he had missed his train and asking for postponement of the case. It appears that the train for Bahraich leaves at an early hour of the morning and that there is no other train which would have enabled the pleader to reach the Court during Court-hours on that day. The telegram was received at Bahraich at 8-50 A.M. It must presumably have been delivered to the Assistant Collector within two hours of that time. Before it was received, however, the case had been decided and the Court has made a note to this effect on the telegram.

The Assistant Collector's decree purports, on the face of it, to be a decree on the merits. It refers to the defendant's absence but it decides the case on the ground that the plaintiff has proved that the rent is in arrears, that the defendant's evidence on the record is insufficient to rebut this case and that the defendant has admitted execution of the kahuliat and, therefore, was bound by its terms. It would seem, therefore, that the Assistant Collector intended his decree to be one under O. XVII, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code.

On the very next day, February 21st, 1923, defendants' general agent who was representing him in the proceedings, treating the decree as an ex-parte decree, presented an application to have it set aside.

This application was accompanied by an affidavit which set forth that he had gone to Gonda on the previous day to call his pleader and that on the morning of the 20th, he and the pleader had both gone to the Station together to take the train for Bahraich but the train had started just as they were arriving at the station. The Assistant Collector appears to have overlooked the fact that the affidavit related to the agent as well as to the pleader, for in the order which he passed on the application he says that he accepted the statement of the pleader that he had missed the train but that there was no reason why the general agent should not have been present. He, therefore, refused to re-open the case.

There can be no doubt that a grave injustice has been done to the defendant by the proceedings of the Assistant Collector. The Assistant Collector appears to have shown undue haste in disposing of the case without waiting a little to see if there was any reason for the defendants' non-appearance when the Court opened on February 20th. The suits were suits of high value. The defendant had already filed a written statement and summoned witnesses and it was not likely that he would be willing to allow them to go by default. Further, when the Assistant Collector learnt from the defendant's affidavit, which he accepted as true and which has not been questioned before me, the real explanation of the defendant's absence, it was his clear duty to set aside his order and restore the case on any terms as to costs which he might think just. It is admitted that the Assistant Collector made a mistake in his decree in not allowing the amount covered by ground of appeal No. 6 in Appeal No. 20 of 1923.

The main argument addressed to me on behalf of the respondent in this Court is that the appellant has adopted the wrong remedy, that he ought to have appealed under O. XLIII, r. 1 (d), Civil Procedure Code against the order refusing to restore the case, and that in these appeals he cannot question the propriety of the Assistant Collector's action in disposing of the case ex parte and in refusing to restore it. The respondent relies strongly on the decision in Jalunath v. Ramnarain (1). This was a case under section 108 of the Code of 1882, corresponding to O. IX, r. 13 of the present Code. This decision is authority for the view that in a case coming under that rule the Court cannot look outside the record in dealing with the appeal. If there is anything appearing on the face of the record to show that the Court acted improperly in decreeing the suit ex parte, this will be a good ground for a reversal of the decree but until the appellant has made out a case for admitting fresh evidence the Court cannot refer to any affidavit subsequently filed or to anything which took place after the decree was passed. There is authority of the Allahabad High Court to the same effect in Hummi v. Aziz-ud-din (2). In reply to this objection the appellant urges,—

(1) that a different view was expressed by a Judge of this Court in a recent case in which, however, the earlier decisions were not brought to his notice ;

(2) that this is a case under O. XVII and not under O. IX ;

(3) that if the decision be treated as one under O. XVII, r. 3, the ruling relied on does not apply. In such a case the defendant's only remedies are by way of appeal or review and he cannot be debarred from showing by affidavit or otherwise that he was wrongly shut out from producing evidence.

I do not think that any valid distinction can be drawn between O. XVII, r. 2, and O. IX. O. XVII, r. 2, refers back to O. IX and gives the Court permission to decide the case in one of the ways prescribed by the order. The case in Hummi v. Aziz-ud-din (2) was a case under O. XVII, r. 2, and so were the two cases referred to below. O. XVII, r. 3, is different. That rule does not refer back to O. IX in any way. The decision was given on the merits and the remedy of the aggrieved party is by way of an appeal from the decree.

The distinction between rr. 2 and 3 of O. XVII has been considered by the Calcutta High Court in Enatulla Basunia v. Jiban Mohan Roy (3) and by the Madras High (Court) in Pichamma v. Sreeramulu (4). In the former case it was held that r. 3 applies where two elements combine namely:—

(1) The adjournment must have been at the instance of a party.

(2) There must be materials on the record for the Court to proceed to decide the suit.

NARAYAN v. MOTISA

If this is the case, it does not matter whether the defendant is present or absent. A majority of the Madras High Court held in the latter case, Wallis, C. J., dissenting, that O. XVII, r. 3 can only apply where the defendant is present. It appears to me that the view of the Calcutta High Court is to be preferred. O. XVII, r. 1 permits the Court to do either of two things. Firstly, it may for cause shown grant time to any party; secondly, it may from time to time adjourn the hearing of the suit. The power to adjourn may be exercised independently of any application made by any of the parties. These two branches of r. 1 are dealt with in the reverse order in r. 2 and r. 3 respectively. Rule 2 refers to the failure of the parties to appear on the adjourned date. Rule 3 refers to the case in which time has been granted to a party and he fails to produce his evidence or to perform some other act necessary to the further progress of the suit for which time has been allowed. In this case the order sheet of December the 11th shows that on that date only one of the defendant's witnesses was present and the case was adjourned to 20th January on the oral application of the defendant's pleader. The further adjournment to 20th February was merely a continuation of the former adjournment. On 20th February the defendant failed to appear with his witnesses when the case was called on. It now appears that there was sufficient reason for his failure and that the Court was not justified in deciding the case so hastily. Under these circumstances, it appears to me that there is nothing in the law which debars me from giving the appellant the redress to which on the merits he is certainly entitled. Some question may arise as to the form in which relief should be granted, but it appears to me that as the Court below has decided the case without having the relevant evidence before it and without giving a detailed finding on any of the issues it has in substance been decided on a preliminary point without going into the merits.

I, therefore, set aside the decree of the Court below and direct it to rehear the case on the merits. As the plaintiff is entitled to some compensation for the expense to which he may have been put on account of the defendant's failure to appear on 20th February, I allow no costs of these appeals.

Equity—Contract—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 65—Sale in contravention of law—Refund—Parties in pari delicto—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. III, para. 11—Sale whether void.

The obligation to do justice rests upon all persons natural and artificial; if one obtains the money or property of others, without authority, the law will compel restitution or compensation.

Before an illegal purpose is carried out, wholly or in part, and the parties are in pari delicto, the general rule is, that no suit will lie to recover money paid under the unlawful agreement.

A sale in contravention of the provisions of para. 11, Sch. III, Civil Procedure Code, is void. But if both the vendor and the vendee had arranged it in ignorance of the law, the latter is entitled to demand a refund of the price paid by him.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Wardha, dated the 17th February 1922.

D. N. Khare, R. B. for the Appellant.

Mr. N. B. Niyogi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal involves an interesting point of law. The facts are that proceedings regarding the sale of an absolute occupancy holding were pending in the Court of the Collector, Wardha. The defendant entered into an agreement for the sale of that field and executed a conveyance, Exhibit D-2, dated the 11th January 1919, in favour of the plaintiff. The defendant was incompetent to alienate the field under the provisions of paragraph 11 of the third Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure and it is no longer in dispute that the sale is void. In this present suit the plaintiff asked for specific performance to sell, or in default for the refund of the consideration money and damages. The claim for specific performance is no longer urged but both Courts have found the plaintiff is entitled for the refund of the consideration and decreed accordingly.

It is contended here that section 11 of the Contract Act, which runs: "Every person is competent to contract who is of the age of majority according to the law to which he is subject, and who is of sound mind, and is not disqualified from contracting by any law to which he is subject," prevents the plaintiff from recovering the consideration paid and prevents section 65 of the Contract Act from applying to the case. It is stated that the transaction comes under the same category as a contract made by a minor or lunatic. It has been found in the present case that neither party was aware that the sale would be void under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code.

It is certain the plaintiff would not have paid the large sums of money he has if he thought he was to get nothing by the transaction. No case exactly in point has been shown me. Sir Henry Drake-Brookman, J. C., in Mt. Salu Bai v. Bajat Khan (1), states:—"I concur then with Stanyon, A. J. C., in affirming Murray v. Muralsingh (2), and in holding that we have in section 325-A, Civil Procedure Code, a legal disqualification to alienate at all which mutatis mutandis puts the judgment-debtor affected on a par with a minor." In that case it was held that a transfer made in contravention of the provisions of section 325-A, Civil Procedure Code, 1882, is void and of no legal effect whatsoever. Section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, does not apply.

I am referred to Mohori Bibi v. Dharmodas Ghose (3), wherein it has been held that a person who by reason of infancy is incapable to contract cannot make a contract within the meaning of the Contract Act. A mortgage, therefore, made by a minor is void and a money-lender who has advanced money to a minor on the security of the mortgage is not entitled to repayment of the money on a decree being made declaring the mortgage invalid; sections 64 and 65 of the Contract Act being based on there being a contract between competent parties, and being inapplicable to a case where there is not, and could not have been any contract at all. It is argued that in the present case the Statutory prohibition prevented there being a contract and, therefore, section 65 of the Contract Act does not apply and the plaintiff cannot demand a refund. The other cases quoted are Gurushiddiswami v. Parwa (4), Bani Muncharam v. Regina Stanger (5) and Bhikam Singh v. Har Prasad (6).

For the plaintiff in this Court is quoted Mathura Mohan Saha v. Ram Kumar Saha (7), which lays down that where a Corporation receives money or property under an agreement, which turns out to be ultra vires or illegal it is not entitled to retain the money. The obligation to do justice rests upon all persons, natural and artificial; if one obtains the money or property of others, without authority the law independently of express contract, will compel restitution or compensation. Haribhai Hansji v. Nathubhai Ratanji (8), Avuala Charamudi v. Marriboyina Raghavulu (9) and Motilal Mansukhram v. Maneklal Dayabhai (10) are also relied on.

It seems that the contract to sell and the sale itself are void. Under the law the plaintiff could not buy and the defendant could not sell. But I do not think that section 65 of the Contract Act is not applicable. It is settled law that before an illegal purpose is carried out, wholly or in part, and the parties are in pari delicto the general rule is that no suit will lie to recover money paid under the unlawful agreement. But in the present case both parties seem to have been mistaken. They did nothing illegal with their eyes open, but have been caught by the fiction that they should have known the law. It is obviously wrong that the plaintiff should be made to lose both his money and the field and that defendant should be enabled to retain both. Equity, it seems to me, demands that in such a case as the present restitution must be made and that the defendant has been rightly made to disgorge the money received. With these remarks, I dismiss this appeal with costs. The appellant will pay the respondent's costs.

Civil Revision from the order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Cawnpore, dated 1st August 1923.

Mr. Asthana, for the Applicant.Mr. Mukhtar Ahmed, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff obtained a lease of some grass land situated in the Cawnpore Cantonment from the Cantonment Committee. He sub-let that land for grazing purposes to another person at a fixed rate per cattle. The present suit was filed by him for the recovery of the rent payable by the latter. The suit was clearly one for the rent of the grazing area let to the defendant ; and it was excluded from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court by clause 8 of Schedule II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (No. IX of 1887). It was not a suit for the recovery of the price of grass sold to be cut and the decision in B. and N. W. Railway v. Bandhu Singh (1) does not, therefore, apply ; nor was it a suit for the recovery of the rent of land situated in a mahal and let for grazing purposes ; and the decision in Manohar Lal v. Gauri (2) is equally inapplicable. The defendant was entitled to use the land and the grass growing on it for grazing purposes during the period for which the lease was granted ; and the order of the Court below returning the plaint cannot, therefore, be sustained. The present application in revision is not directed solely against the erroneous order of the Appellate Court, upholding the order of the Munsif. It is also directed against the order of the Munsif returning the plaint for presentation to the proper Court ; and, as pointed out in Chandu Mal v. Koka Mal (3), a refusal of a Court to exercise the jurisdiction vested in it by law can legitimately form the subject of revision. The application is, therefore, allowed and the orders passed by the Courts below are set aside with a direction to the Court of first instance to restore the suit to its original number and to proceed with its hearing in the manner provided by the law. The costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887) ss. 50, 77 (3) (g)
—Landlord and tenant—Suit by tenant to recover possession of holding from landlord, whether cognisable by Civil or Revenue Court.

A suit by an occupancy tenant to recover possession of his holding from the landlord by whom he has been wrongfully dispossessed is cognisable only by a Revenue Court and not by a Civil Court even though brought more than one year after the date of the plaintiffs' dispossession.

Imam Din v. Feroz Khan, 64 P. R. 1898, dissented from.

Parman v. Lhassu, 51 Ind. Cas. 443; 49 P. R. 1919, distinguished.

Second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 4th July 1921.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for L. Fakir Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. D. Kureshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff claimed possession over certain land on the allegation that he was its occupancy tenant and had wrongfully been dispossessed by the defendants-landlords about six years ago. The trial Court, applying the provisions of section 50 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, held the claim to be barred by time and dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court has set aside the decree and has made an order of remand under O. XII, r. 23 of the Civil Procedure Code. Against this order the present appeal has been preferred.

The lower Appellate Court has relied upon the decision reported as Parman v. Lhassu (1) and also upon the ruling in Imam Din v. Feroz Khan (2) and has held that, as the suit was brought after the period of one year provided by section 50 (b) of the Punjab Tenancy Act, it was cognisable by a Civil Court and the limitation of 12 years was applicable to it. This view is clearly opposed to the Full Bench decision reported as Akbar Hussain v. Karam Dad (3). It was held in that case that a suit of this nature was cognisable only by a Revenue Court and not by a Civil Court even though not brought within one year from date of plaintiff's dispossession, vide sections 50 and 77 (3) (g) of the Punjab Tenancy Act. The case reported as Imam Din v. Feroz Khan (2) was expressly overruled in this case. The case dealt with in Parman v. Lhassu (1), was distinguished from the case decided in the Full Bench ruling on the ground that the plaintiff in that case had been dispossessed in due course of law and that the plaintiff in the Full Bench case had been wrongly dispossessed. Obviously, there is this distinction to be found between the two cases.

The learned Judge of the Court below, therefore, was wrong in relying upon Parman v. Lhassu (1) for the decision of the present case. We are clearly of opinion that the present case is fully governed by the decision in the Full Bench case Akbar Hussain v. Karam Dad (3).

We accordingly accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of remand, dismiss the suit of the plaintiff on the ground that the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to try it. The result is that the decree of the trial Court is restored with costs in all Courts.

V. K. Pandit, R. B., and Mr. R. R. Jaywant, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. B. Gokhale and B. R. Pendhar-kar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment governs also second appeals Nos. 213-B and 211-B of 1922. The cases out of which they arise were tried together in the first Court and the appeals from the decision of that Court were also dealt with in the same judgment. In this Court, too, the appeals have been argued together.

The plaintiff Jagaiyya alleged that one Rajayya, deceased, by a Will dated the 4th September 1922 appointed his two sons Gopalswami (defendant No. 2) and Anna Ramchandra Appa, deceased, and the plaintiff as trustees to manage his property consisting of the shops in dispute, to recover the rents and to apply the proceeds towards the maintenance and education of certain members of his family; that the plaintiff was to be the chief trustee and the other two trustees were to act under his guidance; that these latter were ill-behaved and did not act as trustees; that the shops were let to the defendants; that as they paid no rent during the last few years they were given notices to quit but they had not complied with them, and that the defendant Gopalswami was colluding with the lessees and was unwilling to be a plaintiff. The plaintiff alone, therefore, sued to recover possession. The defendants pleaded that they were tenants of the shops in dispute for several years; that they had paid rent to and obtained receipts from Gopalswami who owned and managed the shop, and that the notices were insufficient and illegal. It was denied that the plaintiff was the chief trustee, that defendant 2 was ill-behaved, and that plaintiff alone could maintain the suit.

The trial Court found that the plaintiff was the chief trustee under Rajayya's Will, that defendant No. 2 was ill-behaved and acting to the prejudice of the trust, and that plaintiff alone could put an end to the tenancy and maintain the suit for ejectment. The plaintiff's claim for possession was decreed in all three cases.

On appeal the following issues were framed by the Additional District Judge and the suits remanded for retrial and findings by the first Court:—

1. Did defendant No. 2 decline to join the plaintiff in this suit?
2. Was defendant No. 2 managing the house property on behalf of trustees?
3. Did defendant No. 2 lease the house to the defendant No. 1 for current year?
4. Is the said lease a prudent act for the advantage of the trust?
5. Whether the notice to quit served on defendant No. 1 was sufficient with regard to the period it granted to vacate the premises?
6. Was the notice to quit signed by one trustee valid in law and in fact?

The findings on these issues were that defendant No. 2 declined to join as plaintiff, that the deceased Ramchandra was managing the property till 1919 when he died, that defendant No. 2 was not managing the house property on behalf of the trustees, that Gopalswami did not lease the house to the defendants for the current year and that the alleged lease was not to the advantage of the trust, and that the notices were valid and sufficient with regard to its period as well as the person by whom they were given. The lower Appellate Court has found that Gopalswami declined to join as plaintiff in the suit; that the notices were sufficient and valid; that Gopalswami managed the property since 1914; that he had not leased the shop for the current year and had not received the rent, and that the leases by Gopalswami, if any, were not prudent. The decrees of the trial Court allowing the plaintiff's claim for possession were confirmed.

In second appeal it is argued on behalf of the lessees that, in view of the finding of the lower Appellate Court that Gopalswami was managing the property since 1914 and of Gopalswami's admission that he had let the shops to the defendants, the plaintiff could not sue to eject the lessees. It is urged that the plaintiff let the defendants' lessees know that Gopalswami was the exclusive manager. It is further urged that, even if the plaintiff and Gopalswami together were entitled to let the property yet if Gopalswami alone has let it, the plaintiff could not sue to eject the lessees and that the notices by the plaintiff were insufficient in point of time under section 106, Transfer of Property Act. Grounds 3 to 17 of the memorandum of appeal were not argued in any case.

On behalf of the plaintiff it is contended that the finding of the lower Appellate Court that Gopalswami has been managing since 1914 is not a necessary finding that Gopalswami was put forward as the exclusive manager having the sole right to let the shops. Looking to the evidence of Jagaiyya which has been believed by the lower Court and the statement of Gopalswami in Exhibit P-5, it appears that the plaintiff's contention is correct. The lower Appellate Court's finding need not be taken to be that Gopalswami was put forward as the exclusive manager of the property since 1914. If it were meant to be to that effect it would be incorrect. It is in evidence that up to 1912-13 at least the plaintiff, Gopalswami, and the deceased Ramohandra Appa used to let the property and the lessees must have known that these three were the proper persons to let the property. If Gopalswami thereafter let the property the defendants must be taken to have understood that he was doing so on behalf of the trustees. The plaintiff at least had the right to sue the lessees jointly with Gopalswami. There is no basis for a finding that the plaintiff let the lessees know that Gopalswami was the manager.

The question to be decided is, whether the plaintiff can maintain the present suit for eviction. It has been found that Gopalswami refused to join as a plaintiff. He has been made a defendant, and I am of opinion that the suit under such circumstances by the plaintiff alone is maintainable; Kumhan v. Moorthi (1). As regards the argument that even if the plaintiff and Gopalswami together were entitled to let the property yet if Gopalswami alone has let it the plaintiff could not sue to eject the lessees, the answer is that it has been found by the lower Appellate Court that the alleged lease has not been proved.

As regards the question of the sufficiency of the notice it does not arise in second appeal No. 211-B of 1922 which arises from Civil Suit No. 317 of 1920, nor in second appeal No. 210-B of 1922 which arises from Civil Suit No. 319 of 1920 for the notice is not on the record of either of these suits. The notice filed in Civil Suit No. 321 of 1920 out of which second appeal No. 209-B of 1922 arises is dated the 26th April 1919 which corresponds to Chait Badi 11. It is clear that the lease was from Diwali to Diwali. The notice asked the lessee to vacate the premises on the 23rd October 1919, corresponding to Ashwin Badi 15, the Diwali day. This is a little more than six months according to the Marathi calendar. No pleas were, however, raised in the trial Court that the notices were required to be of six months under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. As would appear from issue 5 on remand, what appears to have been pleaded was that it was not a reasonably sufficient notice. This is also clear from what the lower Appellate Court says in paragraph 6 of its judgment. Even in this Court the point was not raised clearly in ground No. 3. Even if the Transfer of Property Act applies, the tenancy would in this case appear to be from month to month; Debedra Nath Bhowmik v. Syama Prosanna Bhowmik (2) and Govinda

Second appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge of Meerut, dated the 22nd April 1922.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case are briefly these. One Attar Singh was the proprietor of certain lands, sir and non sir. He made a mortgage in favour of the appellant, who was the plaintiff in the suit out of which this appeal has arisen. The appellant asked for rent being assessed over the sir lands which became, by the fact of mortgage, the ex-proprietary tenancy of Attar Singh. It appears that Attar Singh and the appellant agreed as to the amount of rent to be paid by the former. An order was passed by the Court under section 36 of the Land Revenue Act. It examined the patwari heard the sulahnama and ordered that for 10 bighas 6 biswas land, for which the rent is now claimed, a sum of Rs. 101-7 be fixed as the rent. It fixed another sum with respect to certain other lands in which Attar Singh had no interest as an ex-proprietary tenant. Attar Singh is dead. The appellant instituted the suit against his two brothers who are the recorded tenants, on the death of Attar Singh and also made Attar Singh's daughter *Musamm*at Gaindi a party. In the Courts below it was recognised that *Musamm*at Gaindi had no interest and she never contested the suit. In this Court no notice was served on *Musamm*at Gaindi and so far, therefore, as she is concerned, this appeal must fail.

The Court of first instance found that the defendants applied for abatement of rent and the rent was reduced to the sum of Rs. 37 and odd. This order, however, was to take effect from 1329 F. and did not affect the present suit which was for the years 1325-1327 F. The learned Assistant Collector held that the compromise on which the order of the Assistant Collector fixing the rent was passed was an unfair compromise and had been obtained by exercise of undue influence. He decreed the suit with respect to a very small sum. Indeed, he accepted a certain amount as the rent for the land which had been recorded before the rent was fixed.

On appeal the learned District Judge was practically of the same opinion as the learned Assistant Collector. He held that it was necessary to protect the ex-proprietary tenants against their own folly.

In appeal, which is unfortunately not opposed in this Court, it has been argued that the order fixing the rent, so long as it stands, is binding on the parties and their successors and it did not lie within the province of the Court below to question the validity of it.

NAND KISHORE v. SARDAR NARAIN SINGH

It has not been alleged that the order fixing the rent was obtained by means of fraud or that the Court which fixed the amount was of incompetent jurisdiction. That being so, the order which was passed between the parties is binding, even if it be the case that it merely adopted an agreement between the landlord and the ex-proprietary tenant. We have, however, the fact that the patwari was also examined in the case, though it is not clear on what point. This view was taken by this Court in the case of Har Prasad v. Khazan (1).

I accordingly hold that the defendants respondents Nos. 1 and 2 are bound to pay according to the rent fixed by the Assistant Collector on 8th December 1917.

The result is that the appeal is allowed, decrees of the Courts below are set aside and the suit stands decreed against the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 alone with costs throughout which, however, will not include the costs in this Court because the appeal was uncontested. The suit will stand dismissed against respondent Musamamt Gaindi.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) s. 115—Bengal Regulation (XVII of 1806)—District Judge, whether acts judicially—Revision—Remedy, other, open—Interference by High Court.

The functions to be exercised under Bengal Regulation XVII of 1806 are ministerial and not judicial, but a District Judge assumes judicial functions when he proceeds to determine whether he has or has not the jurisdiction to issue a notice under the Regulation and his order is, therefore, open to revision. But where the aggrieved party has a right of suit, the High Court will not interfere with the order in revision. [p. 352, col. 1.]

Where an order is based on the merits of the case, though in the exercise of a jurisdiction wrongly assumed, and it is not shown how the aggrieved party will be unfairly prejudiced by being made to resort to a suit, the High Court will refuse to interfere in revision. [p. 352, col. 2.]

Petition under section 44, Act VI of 1918, the Punjab Courts Act, against the decision of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 23rd February 1923.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Petitioners.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by the District Judge of Delhi in a proceeding under Regulation XVII of 1806. The facts are briefly these,—

The petitioners, who are residents of Shahdara, own some landed property in the village Mandauli which was formerly a part of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh. In 1920 they mortgaged this property to the respondent Sardar Narain Singh by way of conditional sale for a sum of Rs. 1,50,000. The mortgage not having been redeemed within the stipulated period, Sardar Narain Singh applied to the District Judge for the issue of a notice for foreclosure under Regulation XVII of 1806. The notice having been served upon the petitioners they appeared before the District Judge and filed certain objections. Their main objection was that Regulation XVII of 1806 was not in force in the village Mandauli and that the issue of the foreclosure notice under the Regulation was, therefore, clearly illegal. Now, Delhi was constituted as a separate Province under Government Notification No. 911, dated the 17th of September 1912. In 1912 an Act, called the Delhi Laws Act, (XIII of 1912), was passed by which all Laws and Regulations in force in the Punjab were made applicable to that Province. In 1915 certain villages, in which the village of Mandauli was also included, were taken out of the Meerut District and added to the Delhi Province. By Act VII of 1915 the Delhi Laws Act of 1912 was extended in its entirety to this added area with this reservation, however, that certain enactments, which are specified in Schedule III to that Act, were ordered to remain in force as before in this new territory. One of the enactments specified in Schedule III was the Transfer of Property Act (1882). Now, section 2 of the Transfer of Property Act provides that "in the territories to which this Act extends Regulation XVII of 1806 will not apply but shall be considered to have been wholly repealed." The petitioners' contention before the learned District Judge was that, as the Transfer of Property Act still continued to be in force in the village Mandauli, the Regulation aforesaid was not applicable, and that consequently he had no jurisdiction to issue a notice of foreclosure. The learned District Judge disallowed the objections, holding that the Regulation of 1806 and the Transfer of Property Act were both in force in Mandauli and that the procedure followed by the mortgagee was, therefore, not illegal.

NAND KISHORE v. SARDAR NARAIN SINGH

Against this decision the mortgagors have come up in the revision to this Court, and it has been contended on their behalf that the order passed by the learned District Judge is wholly without jurisdiction and that his opinion that both the Regulation and the Transfer of Property Act are in force in the added territory is erroneous. A preliminary objection has been taken by Bakhshi Tek Chand that the revision is not competent inasmuch as the order which is sought to be revised, has not been passed by the learned District Judge in his judicial capacity. It is further contended that it is not the practice of this Court to interfere in revision when another remedy is open to an aggrieved party. It is pointed out that the petitioners may challenge the validity of the notice either in a suit for redemption or in a foreclosure suit which the mortgagee may bring against them after the year of grace has expired.

The first contention, in my opinion, has no force. It is true that the functions to be exercised under the Regulation are ministerial and not judicial; but there can also be no doubt that a District Judge assumes judicial functions when he proceeds to determine whether he has or has not the jurisdiction to issue a notice. In Gulab Singh v. Karam (1) the District Judge refused to issue a notice under Regulation XVII of 1806, holding that the mortgage-deed propounded was not a mortgage by conditional sale and, therefore, not within the scope of the Regulation. An application for the revision of this order was made in the Chief Court, and it was held, on the authority of Hazari Lal v. Kheru Rai (2), that the order was open to revision. The learned Judges observed as follows while disposing of this question:—

"It would be anomalous if a mortgagee had no remedy where the District Judge had refused to act in accordance with law, as in the present case, without any apparent justification. The functions to be exercised under the Regulation are no doubt ministerial rather than judicial—but we consider that a District Judge assumes judicial functions when he proceeds to construe and interpret the document presented as a mortgage by conditional sale, and that at least in such case his proceedings are open to revision if he declines jurisdiction on clearly erroneous grounds."

The facts of the present case, in my opinion, are in no way distinguishable from those of the case cited above. In the present case the learned District Judge, instead of construing a document, has construed a certain Act of the Legislature and the contention is that his proceedings are open to revision inasmuch as he has assumed jurisdiction on clearly erroneous grounds.

In Sanmant v. Dya Ram (3), the mortgagors tendered a certain sum of money to the District Judge as being all that was due on a mortgage made by their predecessor-in-title. Notice was issued by the District Judge to the representatives of the original mortgagee who appeared and contended that a much larger sum was due to them than that admitted by the mortgagors. The District Judge summarily tried the question and ordered redemption on payment of the sum admitted by the mortgagors to be due to the mortgagees. An application for revision was filed against this order in the Chief Court on two grounds:— (1) that under section 2 of Regulation I of 1798 the District Judge 'was competent to take action in the manner prescribed' by that Act only when the mortgage was by way of conditional sale, and (2) that he had no authority to enter upon questions of right that may be in dispute between the parties. The mortgage was admittedly not a mortgage by way of conditional sale but an ordinary mortgage with possession. The Chief Court entirely set aside the proceedings and held that the proper remedy for the mortgagor was by Civil suit in the ordinary form for redemption of mortgage. It will be observed that in this case the District Judge had assumed jurisdiction on clearly erroneous grounds, and, though it was held that the functions of a District Judge acting under the Regulation were ministerial and not judicial yet the proceedings were set aside obviously on the ground that he had assumed jurisdiction which was not vested in him under the law. I do not, therefore, think that there is any force in the first ground and I overrule it.

The next ground, however, appears to be fatal and must be upheld. It is admitted by Mr. Shamair Chand that a suit for redemption certainly lies, but it is urged that such a suit would cost a great deal of money which his clients are not in a position to afford. He further argues that if his clients were to wait till a suit is instituted against them by the mortgagee, the year of grace would expire and if in that suit the question of the validity of notice is decided against them their right of redemption would be gone and the property mortgaged which is of considerable value will be lost to them for ever. In my opinion none of these reasons are sufficient to induce me to depart from the ordinary rule that, where an applicant has other remedies by way of suit or otherwise, the intervention of the High Court under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code is not called for. It has been held in Ponurangam Pillai v. Lalkram Sahib (4) that where a Court's order is based on the merits of the case, though in the exercise of a jurisdiction wrongly assumed, and where it is not shown how the party aggrieved will be unfairly prejudiced by being made to resort to a suit, the High Court will refuse to interfere in revision. This case, in my opinion, is exactly in point, and I decline to interfere on the revision side.

The result is that the petition fails and is dismissed. I make no order as to costs.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES

Nos. 1642 AND 1700 OF 1920.

APPELLANT

GIRDHARI LAL SEROGI AND OTHERS —
RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Rent, suit for, questions of title whether relevant—Res judicata—Appeal—Decision in Appellate Court confined to one ground—Other grounds whether matters of estoppel.

There is no rule of law that in a rent suit questions of title which require to be determined should not be determined, although generally questions of title between the plaintiff and third persons are not strictly relevant in a rent suit. [p. 354, col. 2.]

In a rent suit the question of the relationship of landlord and tenant subsisting between the parties and the question of the plaintiff's or anybody else's title are distinct questions. [p. 354, col. 2.]

When a case is taken from one Court to another on appeal and is finally disposed of on a particular ground, that ground alone and no other, is matter of estoppel by record between the parties, although other grounds may have been relied upon by the trial Court. [p. 355, col. 2.]

Appeals against decrees of the Subordinate Judge of Howrah, dated the 28th February 1920.

Babu Brojola Chuckerbutty, for Dr. Dwarakanath Mitter, and Babu Gour Mohan Dutt, for the Appellant.—The plaintiff brought this suit for declaration, that the plaintiffs were entitled to a 12-annas share of the lands of the Kha schedule and included in the Ka schedule of the plaints in the two suits. In the plaint the plaintiffs traced their title from a kabuliyat dated 1872. The plaint lands subsequently were occupied by one Haridhan Dutta, as a ticca tenant under the plaintiff's predecessors-in-interest. In one of the paragraphs of the plaint it was stated that although the plaint lands were not included with the title-deeds of the defendants, they included those lands within their Factory walls and possessed the same in order to deprive the plaintiffs of their just rights.

There were altogether sixteen issues, mostly on the question of title, but subsequently, by a petition the plaintiffs amended the plaints by omitting their prayer for declaration of their title. A fresh issue (the 17th) was then raised, namely, "does the relationship of landlord and tenant subsist between the parties in respect of the lands in suit."

My first point is that all the issues as made originally were really issues of title. It was only at the last stage, the issue about landlord and tenant was raised. Although the suit is ostensibly one for rent, it was framed to be really a title-suit, in which case, the valuation being over Rs. 1,000, the Munsif would have no jurisdiction over it. Upon the plaint itself this could not be a suit for arrears of rent but one for damages as against a trespasser. As a result, I was deprived of my right of first appeal before your Lordships. Although the relief claimed is small, yet if the suit is really a suit for establishment of title and ejectment the jurisdiction should be ousted. Such indirect methods are not allowable. Reads Deokali Koer v. Kedar Nath (1). Here also he has sued for rent and he is really seeking a declaration of a much important nature. He wants my ejectment by these tactical methods. Some of the findings are not necessary for disposal of the rent-suits at all. He enumerated them.

As to the question whether questions of title could be gone into in a rent-suit Lodai Mollah v. Kally Das Roy (2) is a comprehensive case. The mischief which is done in allowing important matters to be agitated ostensibly in suits for rent, is also discussed there. A great mischief that has been done to my client is great because in any subsequent litigation he may be greatly prejudiced and embarrassed by this decision of these issues.

On reading the plaint it becomes apparent that scope and frame of the plaintiffs' suit has been completely misunderstood. The Courts have made out a case for the plaintiff which plaintiff did not make himself.

CRITTORE GOLABARI CO., LTD. v. GIRDHARI LAL SEROGI

As regards the Thekas, they have not been properly proved. The only presumption under s. 90 Indian Evidence Act is that a document which is 30 years old is signed by the person by whom it is purported to be signed. The collection papers may come as substantiative evidence under section 32 (2) but only on proof that these are kept in the ordinary course of business. This cannot be presumed but must be proved. Reads Umed Ali v. Habibullah (3). These collection papers are the principal support of the plaintiffs' case. The presumption of their being written in due course does not arise at all. My submissions, therefore, are that the suit in the present form is not maintainable, that it was without jurisdiction and should be confined to issue of relationship of landlord and tenant.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy, with Babu Bhupendra Kumar Ghose, for the respondents:—The Court of Appeal below held that the collection papers were genuine and they proved payment of rent. Their custody has been proved. The death of persons who wrote those papers has also been proved. There may be one loose sentence in the judgment of the learned Judge. My learned friend might take exception to the sentence "written in due course". But the Judge was entitled to accept them as true and act upon them. They are undoubtedly admissible as evidence. The question is whether they come as substantiative evidence under section 32 (2), i.e., if the Theka is kept in the ordinary course of business. It should depend on the document adduced in evidence. I am not aware of any case which has gone to the extreme length to which my learned friends want you to go.

The question of relationship of landlord and tenant involves two questions, (1) that of plaintiffs' title and (2) that of defendants' title. These will have to be gone into unless admitted on either side. The rule in 8 Cal. is obiter. Both chains of title will have to be enquired into and, of course, will become res judicata. There is nothing in law to prevent a landlord to seek for such a declaration, as in this case, as preliminary to the substantial relief. The appellant has not at all been prejudiced. He has no grievance at all.

JUDGMENT.

Rankin, J.:—This appeal has been very ably and closely argued. The plaintiffs sued the Chitpore Golabari Company, Limited, by a suit which, as originally framed, prayed for a declaration of the plaintiff's title in addition to a decree for Rs. 33 being the arrears of rent due to the plaintiffs in their 12-annas share in certain property. The property actually in dispute is the property in Schedule Kha of the plaint; but the property in that Schedule is also included in Schedule Ka of the plaint. The plaint is an elaborate document and a very favourable specimen of the pleadings in the lower Courts. It sets out very elaborately the history of the plaintiff's title to the land and also of the alleged tenant right of the defendants. Objection was taken to a suit constituted in that way for declaratory reliefs, amongst other things, on the question of title being brought before the learned Munsif whose jurisdiction was limited to Rs. 1,000. The learned Munsif, by an order which has been criticised for ambiguity, appears to have directed that the plaint should be treated as amended by omitting the prayer for declaration of title and he in the end added a 17th issue to those already framed which really covers in itself the whole ground between the parties on the footing that the suit was a mere rent-suit. That is, "does the relationship of landlord and tenant subsist between the parties in respect of the lands in suit?" It is quite clear that this suit must now be treated as being, from first to last, a mere rent-suit and any declaration that can possibly be given in the suit must be one wholly ancillary to the question of the defendant's liability for the rent claimed.

In a rent-suit, there is no rule of law that questions of title which require to be determined are not to be determined; but there are two reasons why, in general, questions of title as between the plaintiff and third persons do not require to be determined. The first reason is that for a claim to rent as distinct from damages mere proof of the plaintiff's title, is not sufficient. The second reason is that the plaintiff who as against the third person has no title may have a perfectly good claim against the tenant whom he has inducted for rent. Accordingly, between the landlord and the tenant the question of relationship subsisting between them and the question of the plaintiff's or any body else's title are distinct questions though they may, for accidental reasons, become entangled.

Now, in this case, the learned Judges of both the Courts below have utilised the circumstance that the parties had stated in detail their differences in the form of numerous issues to enable them to deal with the matters in dispute under the headings of different issues. But, in strictness, in such a case as the present, the treatment of these questions of title arising incidentally as independent and substantive issues is wrong. They are matters bearing upon the sole issue, the question of relationship between landlord and tenant. Not all of them were necessary for the decision of the case but most of them were necessary and lay absolutely in the way, having to be disposed of before the case could be properly decided. In the end, the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has done this: He has traced back the plaintiffs' title to certain people of the name of Santras. He has traced back the defendants' title in respect of the lands in dispute to a certain Haridhan Dutt. He has found that Haridhan Dutt in his day did pay rent to the Santras for the lands in suit. He has, therefore, affirmed the relationship of landlord and tenant and has given to the plaintiffs a decree for the amount of rent that is the plaintiffs' correct proportion of the rent which Haridhan Dutt used to pay. In these circumstances, Babu Brojolal Chuckerbutty who appears for the defendants-appellants has taken objections which may be put under three headings. He first says that all these different issues framed as such and incidentally decided by the lower Courts constitute a grievance to his client because they affect his title beyond what was necessary and proper in a rent-suit; and that, as the record stands, in any subsequent contest, his client will be very much more embarrassed by the record in this case than he would have been, if the 7th issue had been treated as the only issue. Now, so far as that is concerned, it is enough to say that, speaking for myself, I am satisfied that there may be, in these circumstances, some danger of an injustice. But it has to be remembered that when a case is taken from one Court to another on appeal and is finally disposed of on a particular ground and that alone, no other of the grounds, though relied upon by the lower Courts, are matters of estoppel by record. In this case, my learned brother and I both desire to be plain and emphatic to the effect that the issues other than the 17th are not proceeded upon by this Court as being issues or matters substantially in controversy on their own account. We think that the only issue was the question of the relationship of landlord and tenant and, if that matter is made absolutely clear, we can safely proceed to dispose of this appeal by considering whether the question of the relationship of landlord and tenant has been satisfactorily determined according to law.

It was suggested that, in the lower Appellate Court, some observations were made against the present appellants by reason that they had not shown that they paid rent to the alleged third party the Dighapatia Raj. It is quite plain that the correct way to decide this suit is to leave out of account altogether any question of jus tertii in the Dighapatia Raj and it does not appear that the lower Appellate Court has proceeded in that respect upon any false notion of the true frame of the case.

Now, the first question to deal with is this. It is said that the decision of the Courts below really makes a new case for the plaintiffs: that, according to the plaintiffs, it would appear that the defendants had not purchased, or derived title to, the Kha land—the land actually in contest, that the plaintiffs' case was, so it is alleged, that the defendants were mere trespassers without title, and that they prayed for a declaration of their own title on that basis and for a decree for rent by an inconsistency in the legal reasoning. Now, I do not so read this plaint. As I read the plaint, it is intended to mean that the defendants have succeeded to the interest of Haridhan Dutt, that they have succeeded to his interest not only in the other lands but in this land too but that in the defendants' conveyance, there is consciously or else by mistake a recital to the effect that the land now in contest is not part of the land conveyed. However that may be, when the Courts came to examine into the defendant's documents, they found that, although the earlier documents did not help the plaintiffs in this matter, Ex. 8 coming into force in 1914 showed that the defendants did purport to take an assignment of the land in suit deriving title from Haridhan Dutt. In these circumstances, it does not seem to me that there was anything to preclude the lower Appellate Court from dealing with the rights of the parties according to the facts proved on the evidence.

The last point that requires consideration is, I think, more difficult than any of the others. It is a question of series of documents called Thekas which were relied upon by the plaintiffs to show that Haridhan Dutt paid rent to the plaintiffs' predecessors—the Santras. Now, as regards those documents, they were contested altogether, that is to say, their genuineness was disputed from the beginning. It was said that they were manufactured for the purposes of this case or some other case. It was said that this explained the reason why any previous attempt to sue for rent had not been made. It was denied that they were in the handwriting of the Santras' Gomasta. The documents were objected to when they were tendered in evidence and accordingly the matter was dealt with by the trial Court which found in favour of the documents. In the grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court, which we have scrutinized, we find that observations about other particular pieces of evidence were made grounds of appeal but the question of these Thekas was not mentioned specifically there at all in those grounds. When the learned Judge of the Court of appeal below came to deal with the matter, an issue (No. 6) was framed by him which gives reliable evidence, so far as it goes, of the line of argument that the appellants took; "Are the documents used in evidence by the plaintiffs fraudulent and collusive and have they been wrongly admitted in evidence?" Assuming that the documents referred to are these Thekas, the appellants there were raising the whole thing over again denying the learned Judge's right to make any presumption in their favour under section 90 of the Evidence Act and denying the proof of their genuineness, in fact, raising the original objection in its entirety. The learned Judge has been perhaps, a little unhappy in the use of the single phrase. He says that the Thekas and the counterfoils of rent receipts prove beyond doubt that the appellants' predecessor paid rent to the Santras. He then says: "It is urged by the learned Vakil for the appellants that no reliance should be placed on these papers and that they have been manufactured for these suits. It is also contended that they have not been duly proved; but I cannot accede to his contentions." He then mentions that they were used and filed in some other suits long ago, that they have respectable appearance, that they are more than thirty years old, and that their custody has been proved. Then he says: "So it may be presumed under the law that they were written in due course." After that he goes on to say that it is proved that their writers are dead and to deal with the question that the writers were the Gomastas of the Santras. He also says that some of the counterfoils of the dakhilas signed by the Santras corroborate particular entries in the Thekas and he finally says, "considering all this", I hold that these "Collection papers are admissible in evidence." Now, Babu Broj Lal Chuckerbutty says that, if one scrutinizes this finding, one cannot get the precise finding of fact that these documents came into existence in the ordinary course of business within the meaning of section 32 of the Evidence Act. If that question had been specifically raised in the grounds of appeal and if one could collect from the learned Judge's judgment that he was really called upon to mention specially the question whether they were made in the ordinary course of business or not, it might be a matter for consideration whether his statement that it may be presumed under the law that they were written in due course was sufficiently precise. But the facts were these: He was dealing with documents whose genuineness was utterly in dispute. He found that they were fairly numerous, that there were lists of tenants, lists of rents realized and all sorts of particulars and that they were documents which any Gomasta could reasonably be presumed to have prepared in the ordinary course of his duty. If that particular point had been put to him, the learned Judge, who was satisfied of their genuineness and content to act upon it, must have found that they were prepared in the course of the business of that proprietor's estate. I cannot myself be satisfied that this criticism has any reasonable basis. It seems to me that it is very hard on litigants at the end of a long litigation to be forced to begin all over again merely because the language of the learned Judge is not absolutely in terms on several points with the relevant sections of the Evidence Act. Under section 114, he was quite entitled from the circumstances to hold that he could presume and would presume that the numerous and lengthy documents such as these proved in this case to have been written by the Gomasta of the landlord were written in the ordinary course of his duty. In these circumstances, it seems to me that it would be wrong to commence this litigation over again, practically from the beginning for that would be the consequence, merely because the only phrase used by the learned Judge is that it may be presumed under the law that they were written in due course. I think, therefore, that this appeal fails and must be dismissed. On the question of declaration, I think there is sufficient reason why there should be no order made as to costs.

Mukherji, J.—I agree.

For the reasons given in our judgment delivered just now in Second Appeal 1642 of 1920, this appeal fails and is dismissed without costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908)—O. XXIII, r. 8—Compromise decrees—Unlawful terms—Execution.

The inclusion of an invalid or illegal provision in a decree does not validate it and so far as a decree embodies unlawful terms of a compromise it is inoperative and cannot be enforced. Therefore, a consent decree directing the sale of trees which stand on agricultural land and cannot be sold apart from the land cannot be executed. [p. 858, col. 1.]

Appeal from the order of the District Judge, Wardha, in Civil Appeal No. 47 of 1921, dated 27th July 1921.

Mr. V. V. Chitale, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. K. Padhye, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In a Civil suit between the parties a consent decree was passed on 6th March 1919 ordering the defendants to pay Rs. 200 to the plaintiff stating that Rs. 500 shall be paid on the corresponding day next year with interest at 1 per cent. per mensem and in default of payment one pie malguzari share of Mouza Surgaon and an 8-annas share in 25 mango trees in sir field No. 218 of the same village were to be sold by auction. The defendants applied to the Court, stating (1) that interest had been charged on Rs. 200 though it was not ordered to be paid in the decree and that this interest should be disallowed; (2) that field No. 218 is sir and the mango trees therein are held in the same right; they are not, therefore, liable to be auctioned and should, therefore, be released from the sale; (3) the crops were bad and the Rs. 823-4-0 claimed in execution could not be paid at once. Instalments were asked for; (4) interest at 1 per cent. has been charged, it should be 0-8-0 per cent., which is the Court rate.

The executing Court found that no interest on Rs. 200 was allowable. As regards the second point the Judge writes :—

"On point (2), under the ruling in the case of Sukhnandan v. Manak Chand (1), the trees which stand on agricultural land cannot be sold apart from the land. The trees can be sold along with the land on which they stand if the land is saleable. Sir land is not saleable and the trees cannot be sold. I hold that the charge itself, though specified by an agreement of the parties is illegal and the property cannot be sold apart from the land. I have cut the trees. The malguzari share only will be sold."

(1) 10 Ind. Cas. 478 ; 7 N. L. R. 68.

PITAMBAR LAL v. DODEE SINGH

The matter was taken in appeal to the Court of the District Judge, Wardha, who holds that section 97 of the present Tenancy Act is no bar to the sale of the trees. The decree was based on a private compromise between the parties and was registered and had to be executed. The judgment concludes:—

“Under any circumstances, therefore, the lower Court could not refuse to execute the decree by sale of proprietary rights in half the share in the mango trees standing on the said sir land.”

The case was remanded.

It is here contended that, though the proprietary rights of the malguzar in the sir land and the trees standing thereon can be sold, yet khas possession of the same cannot be given to the decree-holder; that under section 45 of the Tenancy Act XI of 1898 he who loses his sir land as proprietor becomes automatically an occupancy tenant of the land; and it is argued that trees standing in sir land are held in the same right as the land itself, and section 97 of the present Tenancy Act which was in force when the defendants' application was filed states:—“Trees standing in any land shall not be attached in execution of a decree or order of a Civil Court unless the land itself is attached,” is a bar to the execution of the decree.

It seems to me settled law that the inclusion of an invalid or illegal provision in a decree does not validate it. In Lakshmanaswami Naidu v. Rangamma (2), it was held that a Court has no jurisdiction to pass a decree on a compromise unless it was a lawful compromise and that any terms of a contract which are opposed to public policy are invalid and will, therefore, not be enforced by the Courts, and, so far as a decree embodies unlawful terms of a compromise, it is inoperative and will not be enforced. In Ramasami Naik v. Ramasami Chetty (3), it was enunciated that the transfer of a bare expectancy was a nullity under section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act and the prohibition in that section was based on principles of public policy and the Court cannot allow such transactions to be effected by a consent decree.

(2) 26 M. 31.

(3) 30 M. 255; 17 M. L. J. 201; 2 M. L. T. 167.

The decree in the present case seems to me invalid. It deals with trees standing on sir land, trees which could not be attached and sold in execution of the decree. The condition in the decree that the decretal amount should be recovered by sale of the mortgaged property was, therefore, inoperative. The argument that the decree makes the money a charge on the property does not, in my opinion, affect the case. The parties have inserted in their decree a condition which cannot be carried out and the executing Court was right, in my opinion, in refusing to enforce that portion of the decree. The proprietary rights in the trees can of course be sold but possession of those trees cannot be transferred to the auction-purchaser for they form part of the land of which the ex-proprietor is an occupancy tenant.

I set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the executing Court with the exception as to sale of the proprietary rights in the trees. This appeal succeeds, but, looking to the circumstances of the case, I think it just that parties should bear their own costs.

RAUNAQ ALI v. NAZIR HUSAIN

Order IX, r. 9 of the Civil Procedure Code has no applicability to an application to set aside an ex parte decree which is dismissed in default.

Civil Revision from an order of the Munsif of Fatehpur, dated the 2nd December 1922.

Mr. Damodar Das, for the Applicant.

The opposite party was not represented.

JUDGMENT.—This revision has been referred to a Bench of two Judges by Mr. Justice Mukerji. The reasons for his referring it are contained in the revision order of the 9th of January 1924, and are as follows:—

"The question raised in this revision is whether an application for restoration, which was dismissed for default, that application itself being one for the restoration of a suit which was decided ex parte, can lie.

"On this point there seems to be no authority of this Court. The Calcutta High Court, in the case of Bepin Bihari Saha v. Abdul Barik, (1) and the Patna High Court, in the case of Ramghulam v. Sheo Deonarain Singh (2) have taken contrary views.

"In view of the importance of the question, I refer it to a larger Bench. The second question involved in this application is much easier to decide. But as the more important question is to be decided by a larger Bench both the questions may be put up before that Bench."

We prefer the Calcutta view on this simple ground. Although the application is called an application to restore the application to set aside the ex parte decree, which application had itself been dismissed for default, it really is an application to set aside the ex parte decree, and it may be treated as such. To quote the judgment in Bipin Bihari Shaha v. Abdul Barik (1), "the application may be treated as an original application although no fresh parties are interested in the case. The proceeding is initiated by an application which has to be numbered as a separate miscellaneous case." If it is treated as an application to restore a previous application, we agree with the Patna view that O. IX, r. 9 cannot be construed so as to apply to such an application. The practical objection raised to the view which we take, namely, that in this event a litigant may go on for ever and apply to restore in an uninterrupted stream of unsuccessful applications, is met by the fact, as Mr. Damodar Das points out, that such an application must be made within 30 days of the decree on the date when the decree becomes known, and that, if it is not so made, it is barred by Statute. It may be that if that point had been taken, this application would have been so barred. But that is not the point on which it was referred to us. On the second question, it is obvious from the arguments of the plaintiff's Vakil, that the application, of which complaint is now made, was notified to the plaintiff. The defendant has been put on terms. It is a small matter of Rs. 55, and we are satisfied that no injustice has been done by the order which would require the case to be reheard. The application is dismissed.

Plaintiffs' father conveyed certain property to the defendant in order to defraud his creditors. Subsequently, the property was attached by a creditor of the transferor in execution of a decree obtained by him against the latter, but it was released on the objection of the defendant. Several years later, plaintiffs sued to recover the property from the defendant on the ground that the transfer by their father in favour of the defendant was fictitious:

Held, that the property having been transferred to the defendant to effect a fraudulent purpose, and the contemplated fraud having been carried out plaintiffs could not recover the property from the defendant. Where property is ostensibly transferred by one person in favour of another under an arrangement that the latter shall hold possession of the property for the benefit of the former, the arrangement gives rise to a constructive trust and the transferee is bound to hold the property in trust for the transferor and not for any benefit of his own. First appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 18th October 1921.

Mr. Wasim, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Mahashir Husain, A. P. Sen, and M. A. Khan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal arising out of a suit in ejectment in respect of the entire village Saraiyan, Pargana Dewa, Tahsil Nawabganj, District Bara Banki, which was dismissed by the Court of the Subordinate Judge, of Bara Banki on the 18th October 1921.

The grounds of the claim are that the village in suit belonged to Mansab Ali, who was heavily indebted; and that with a view to save it from his creditors he executed a fictitious sale-deed on the 27th March 1879 in respect of that village in favour of defendant No. 1, Syed Nazir Husain, who was Mansab Ali's sister's son and a minor on the date of the sale but that "Mansab Ali" himself remained in proprietary possession and enjoyment thereof during his lifetime and he alone used to be benefited by the income arising from the village." (Paragraph 4 of the plaint). Mansab Ali died on the 14th March 1908. The plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 are his sons and the plaintiff No. 4 is the purchaser of a 12-annas, share from the aforesaid plaintiffs. For some time after the death of Mansab Ali the defendant No. 1 "continued to pay the profits of the village to plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3, but thereafter he did not pay a single farthing." The defendants have wrongfully deprived the plaintiffs of their rights: hence the suit. (Paragraphs 6, 7 and 10 of the plaint). Mutation of names was effected in favour of Nazir Husain in pursuance of the deed of the 27th March 1879. In the year 1895 and at the instance of Nazir Husain a 12-annas' share of the village was entered in the names of Altaf Husain, Dildar Husain and Ashfaq Husain, brothers of Nazir Husain, in equal shares in the revenue papers. The remaining four-annas' share was retained in the name of Nazir Husain. Altaf Husain, Dildar Husain have since died. Ashfaq Husain is defendant No. 2 and Afzal Husain is the minor son of Altaf Husain, deceased, and is defendant No. 3 in the suit. Defendant No. 4 is a mortgagee in possession of the 4-annas' share of Nazir Husain. Defendant no 5 is a mortgagee of defendant No. 2. The other defendants were merely pro forma parties to the suit.

So much of the defence as is relevant to this appeal is that the sale-deed of the 29th March 1879 was not a fictitious transaction; that the suit is barred by limitation; that the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 have been in adverse possession for more than 12 years, and that on the plaintiffs' own case the deed in question was executed by Mansab Ali with the object of defrauding his creditors of their just dues, and, the said object having been attained, the plaintiffs as the heirs of Mansab are not entitled to recover the property in suit. There were other defences to the suit with the result that no less than 14 issues were settled for decision. The learned Subordinate Judge decided the following issues only:—

- (1) (a) Was the sale-deed dated 27th March 1879 a fictitious transaction as alleged in para 4 of the plaint and did Mansab Ali remain the real owner ?

(b) Was it intended to operate as a deed of gift in favour of Nazir Husain ?

" 2. Have plaintiffs and Mansab Ali been in possession of the village in suit within limitation ?

" 4. Have any, and, if so what, creditors been defrauded by the execution of the deed of 27th March 1879 ? If so, what is its effect ?

" 5. Are the plaintiffs the legitimate sons of Mansab Ali ?

" 14. Are the claims time-barred and are they not maintainable as alleged ?"

The learned Subordinate Judge has decided these issues against the plaintiffs, except issue No. 5, on which his finding is that the plaintiffs are the legitimate sons of Mansab Ali, and issue 1 (a) with respect to which his conclusion is that the sale-deed of the 27th March 1879 is a fictitious transaction and "was made in fraud of the creditors," and also issue 1 (b) on which he has held that the deed of the 27th March 1879 was not intended to and could not operate as a deed of gift. As a result of his findings on issues 2, 4 and 14 which he decided against the plaintiffs, he dismissed the suit. His findings on issues 1 (a) and (b) were not challenged before us in appeal. We must, therefore, accept them as correct.

We have only two points to decide in this appeal. The first is the effect in law of the finding that the sale-deed of the 27th March 1879 was fictitious and was executed by Mansab Ali in fraud of his creditors; the second is the question of limitation which involves the question of adverse possession set up by the defendants. On both these points our conclusions are the same as those arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge.

As regards the first question, we start with the accepted finding that the sale-deed of the 27th March 1879 was executed fictitiously for the purpose of defrauding the creditors. The allegations made by the plaintiffs in paragraph four of the plaint clearly constitute the sale in question a turpis causa. The fraud which Mansab Ali contemplated to effect is a part of the plaintiffs' case. The first step which the plaintiffs must take towards the success of their claim is to prove the alleged fraud and if the rule of law were merely that a party who is allegans turpitudinem must fail in a Court of Equity we must hold that the plaintiff's suit could be dismissed on that ground alone, but this is obviously not the law. After a good deal of conflict in its earlier stages both in England and in this country it seems to be now well settled law that a party guilty of entering into a fraudulent contract would be entitled to recover the property conveyed to the other party under such a contract provided the fraudulent purpose of the contract has not been executed. On the one hand, we have the decision of Lindley, L. J., in the case of Scott v. Brown Deering, McNab & Co., (1) in which the following proposition was laid down :—

"Ex turpi causa non oritur actio. This old and well-known legal maxim is founded in good sense, and expresses a clear and well-recognised legal principle, which is not confined to indictable offences. No Court ought to enforce an illegal contract or allow itself to be made an instrument of enforcing obligations alleged to arise out of a contract or transaction which is illegal, if the illegality is duly brought to the notice of the Court, and if the person invoking the aid of the Court is himself implicated in the illegality. It matters not whether the defendant has pleaded the illegality or whether he has not. If the evidence adduced by the plaintiff proves the illegality the Court ought not to assist him. If authority is wanted for this proposition it will be found in the well-known judgment of Lord Mansfield in Holman v. Johnson (2). In this case Lopes, L. J., quoted a passage from the case of Begbie v. Phosphate Sewage Co. (3) and the last part of the quotation is as follows:—"The plaintiff cannot present his case to a Jury without necessarily disclosing the unlawful purpose in furtherance of which this money was paid." On the other hand, there is the decision of the Court of Appeal in the case of Taylor v. Bowers (4) in which it was held that the fraudulent purpose of the transaction not having been carried out, the plaintiff was entitled to recover the goods with which he had parted under that transaction. The case of Symes v. Hughes (5) was referred to and the following passage from the judgment of Lord Romilly, M. R., was quoted by Cockburn, C. J. :—

"Two objections have been raised on behalf of the defendant. The first is, that the assignment was made for an illegal purpose and it is said that such being the case, the Court will not interfere. I think the correct answer to this was given by Mr. Southgate, namely, that where the purpose for which the assignment was given is not carried into execution, and nothing is done under it, the mere intention to effect an illegal object when the assignment was executed does not deprive the assignor of his right to recover the property from the assignee, who has given no consideration for it. It is clear in the present case that no harm has been done to any creditor, and, in fact, the suit is now being prosecuted for the purpose of enabling the creditors to recover something."

It may be that the inconsistency between the decisions in the case of Scott v. Brown, Deering, McNab & Co. (1) and in the case of Taylor v. Bowers (4) is merely apparent and not real. In the former case the fraud may be taken to have been carried into effect by the mere fact that the purchase of shares in a projected company by the defendant with the plaintiff's money which money the plaintiff desired to recover by the suit was published to induce the public to believe that there was a real market for the shares which, as a matter of fact, there was not or the decision may have turned on the fact that the illegal contract was "indictable for a criminal conspiracy at Common Law." It would appear that there is a class of illegal contracts against which relief would be granted in spite of the fact that the illegal purpose has been partially or wholly carried into effect. Contracts against public policy would seem to fall in this category, for instance cases of marriage brokerage, see Hermann v. Charlesworth (6). Be that as it may, the law applicable to the present case is settled by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Petherpermal Chetty v. Mumandi Servai (7), in which the cases of Taylor v. Bowers (4); Symes v. Hughes (5); and In re Great Berlin Steamboat Co. (8) are referred to as authorities for the proposition laid down in that case. Lord Atkinson, in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, laid down the following proposition :—

"To enable a fraudulent confederate to retain property transferred to him in order to effect a fraud the contemplated fraud must, according to the authorities, be effected. Then, and then alone, does the fraudulent grantor, or giver lose the right to claim the aid of the law to recover the property he has parted with."

The question of fact argued in this connection by the learned Counsel for the appellants is that the purpose of the fraud was not carried into effect. The only facts satisfactorily proved are as follows :—On the date of the sale in question Wala Qadr Wazir Mirza held a decree of about Rs. 17,000 against Mansab Ali for sale of certain villages. Presumably, the decree was on the basis of mortgage. Before the sale of the mortgaged property the decree-holder took out attachment of the village in suit on the 12th January 1880 (Ext. B 50). Mt. Zainabunnissa, the mother of Nazir Husain, lodged objection on behalf of Nazir Husain, who was a minor then, to this attachment on the 12th March 1880 (Ext. B 51). The objection was obviously directed against the action of the decree holder, who was, therefore, the primary opposite party; but Mansab Ali was also made a pro forma party to those proceedings. The objection was based on the sale-deed of the 27th March 1879 which is the part of the present suit. It succeeded and the village Saraiyan was released from attachment (Ext. B 52). It is common ground that Saraiyan was never attached again either by Wala Qadr or by any other creditor of Mansab.

RAUNAQ ALI v. NAZIR HUSAIN

Ali for the purpose of satisfying any debt of Mansab Ali. On these facts the learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that the purpose of the fraud must be taken to have been carried into effect. There is a clear authority in favour of this conclusion in the case of Banke Behary Dass v. Raj Kumar Dass (9). We are inclined to think that the decision in the case just now mentioned falls within the principle of the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandi Servai (7) cited above and is in accordance with that principle.

The learned Counsel for the appellants, however, argued that if Wala Qadr's decree was satisfied by Mansab Ali by means other than the attachment and sale of the village Saraiyan it must be taken that the purpose of the fraud was not carried out. We realize the force of this contention but we are of opinion that the basis of it is wanting. What are the facts? The mortgaged property was sold under the decree-holder's application of the 20th August 1883 and a sum of Rs. 16,727-9-1 was realized as the sale-proceeds. There still remained a balance of Rs. 750-8-11 principal and Rs. 337 8-0 interest, total Rs. 1,088-0-11 as the judgment-debt against Mansab Ali on the 7th December 1889 (Exts. B54 and B 55). This balance is not proved to have ever been paid to the decree-holder either by Mansab Ali or by his successor-in-interest. Indeed, there is some evidence of a satisfactory character that it was never paid. Wala Qadr had assigned this decree to Raja Kazim Husain Khan. In the year 1897 Mansab Ali applied to be declared an insolvent to the Court of the District Judge of Fyzabad. This application arose by reason of his arrest in execution of a Rent Court decree held by Raja Kazim Husain Khan against him for a trifling sum of Rs. 92. With the application he attached two lists: list No. 1, showing the property and value of it held by him, and list No. 2, showing the debts due from him. He verified the contents of this application as true to his knowledge and belief. The property mentioned in list No. 1 consisted of a few clothes and a few utensils, the total value of both being Rs. 10-6-0. In list No. 2 he gave the names of his creditors with the amount of debt due to each, the total of such debts being Rs. 7,692. In this list is mentioned Raja Kazim Husain Khan as a holder of a decree of the Court of Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki for Rs. 5,500. It may be mentioned here that the decree of Wala Qadr which Raja Kazim Husain Khan had purchased and of which we have been speaking, was of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki. It may be that the figure of 5,500 is a mistake for a smaller amount; but the fact remains that it is not shown that Raja Kazim Husain Khan held any decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki as against Mansab Ali other than the one which he had purchased from Wala Qadr. Our conclusion is that on the date of the application (Ex. B1), that is, 29th November 1897, Wala Qadr's decree was not paid up in full. We are, therefore, of opinion that the fraud contemplated by Mansab Ali in executing the sale-deed of the 27th March 1879 was carried into effect not only so far that the attachment of the village Saraiyan was released on the basis of this deed, but also in that it deprived one of his decree-holders from realizing a portion of his decree by the attachment and sale of Saraiyan which was a part of his assets and would have been available to his creditors, if this fraudulent sale-deed had not been executed.

As regards the second point of limitation, an exhaustive argument was addressed to us by the learned Counsel for the parties as to whether Article 142 or Article 144 of the Indian Limitation Act applied to this case. We, however, think that it is not necessary to decide this question, which, on the facts as we find them, becomes merely of an academic interest.

It is perfectly clear that, in pursuance of the deed of sale dated the 27th March 1879, Nazir Husain was put in possession of the village in suit. We have already observed that his name was entered in the revenue papers in place of Mansab Ali's. Nazir Husain was then a minor and the property was managed on his behalf by his father, Muhammad Husain. In the petition of objection against the attachment of village Saraiyan in execution of Wala Qadr's decree, which was filed by Mt. Zainabunnisa as guardian of her minor son, Nazir Husain, the fact that the minor was in possession was prominently stated and, what is of greater importance, is the ground of the order releasing the village from attachment. That order is as follows:—"On the evidence on record it must be held that Nazir Husain has possession. Mauza Saraiyan must, therefore, be released. Ordered accordingly." Further, it is but reasonable to presume that Nazir Husain was put in possession of the village in furtherance of the design of the deed of sale. Then there are repeated admissions of Mansab Ali, to which we will make specific reference hereafter, that he was out of possession. We have, therefore, reached the conclusion that Mansab Ali divested himself of the possession of the same. We are further of opinion that Nazir Husain's possession at its inception was not, and cannot be treated to be adverse to Mansab Ali. As between these two persons it must be held that the possession of Nazir Husain was not in his own right as the real purchaser of the village in suit, but under the secret arrangement between them that the ostensible vendee will hold possession thereof for the benefit of Mansab Ali. This arrangement gave rise to a constructive trust and Nazir Husain was under an obligation to hold the property in trust for Mansab Ali and not for any benefit of his own: Gur Narayan v. Sheo Lal Singh (10). This condition of things naturally flows from the fact now admitted that the object of Mansab Ali in executing the sale-deed in question was to defraud his creditors without intending in reality to part with his proprietary rights in the village: in other words, Nazir Husain held the property benami for Mansab Ali. But the subsequent events and their developments leave no room for doubt in our mind that Nazir Husain's possession of the village became hostile to the proprietary rights of Mansab Ali in that property, certainly from the year 1890 at latest and continued to be so when the 12-annas share of the village passed into the possession of the brothers of Nazir Husain under the mutation which was effected in their favour in 1895 at the instance of Nazir Husain. It may be remarked that to this transfer of possession under the mutation Mansab Ali was no party. In the year 1890 three events happened successively each of which, in our judgment, had the effect of altering the character of Nazir Husain's possession from friendly to hostile, but whether each is or is not enough by itself to give a start to the adverse possession of Nazir Husain against Mansab Ali, we are perfectly clear in our minds that the cumulative effect of the three is such. We have already observed that Muhammad Husain, father of Nazir Husain, was managing the property on behalf of the latter during his minority. In the plaint it is stated that Nazir Husain was about 10 or 11 years old at the date of the sale, that is, March 1879. We may take this as a fairly accurate statement. Nazir Husain was, therefore, of full age in 1890. Now, the first thing which happened in that year is the criminal prosecution of his father Muhammad Husain by Mansab Ali under sections 406 and 415 of the Indian Penal Code (Criminal breach of trust). Muhammad Husain was convicted by the Court of first instance, but acquitted by the Court of appeal. Mansab Ali gave evidence in support of the prosecution (Ex. 6). In answer to questions put in cross-examination he stated: "After this case had come on for one or two hearings in Court our raam came to an end." By 'our' he means that of Nazir Husain and himself. It is pretty clear from the same statement that he wanted Nazir Husain to reconvey the property to him and for that purpose a stamp of the value of Rs. 40 was purchased. Apparently Nazir Husain expressed his intention to abide by the wishes of Mansab Ali, but he disappeared soon after without giving effect to them and this revealed his determination to keep the property to himself.

The second event which happened was that, during the pendency of the criminal proceedings, Mansab Ali applied for mutation of names in his favour. In the deposition mentioned above he stated as follows: "I was desirous of getting back the property through the Court. I gave a petition to this effect to the Tahsildar after the institution of this case. Before this prosecution was instituted I was not desirous of getting back the village not knowing the accused's dishonesty." It is manifest from this that Muhammad Husain and his son, Nazir Husain, had made it vious to Mansab Ali that they were going to keep the property for themselves. We may mention here that Mansab Ali also stated: "My estate has been managed by the deceased and others" (Ex. 6). It is agreed that Mansab Ali's attempt to recover possession by means of mutation of names in his favour failed.

The third event which happened in or about the same year, that is, 1890, was a dispute between Mansab Ali and Nazir Husain which led to proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The learned subordinate Judge is of opinion that this dispute related to the possession of the village in suit. We agree with that opinion. Exhibit 1 is a copy of a letter written by Muhammad Hussain to Mansab Ali. This copy was obtained in the year 1890 and the heading shows that the original was filed in the proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The letter relates to village Saraiyan, which is mentioned therein by name; and it is reasonable to presume that it was filed in those proceedings by Mansab Ali, and was accepted by the Court in evidence because it was relevant to those proceedings. It follows that the proceedings related to village Saraiyan. The learned Subordinate Judge refers to some other evidence also in support of his conclusion. That evidence is, in our opinion, of doubtful admissibility. We think that the intrinsic evidence furnished by Exhibit 49, coupled with the reasonable probabilities surrounding it, is sufficient upon which we may base our own conclusion in this behalf. To Exhibit 49 may be added Exhibit 50, which is also a letter addressed by Muhammad Husain to Mansab Ali. The copy now filed was taken in the year 1890, and the heading shows that the original was a part of the record of the proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. We have seen that the mutation in favour of the brothers of Nazir Husain was made in the year 1895. In 1896 Mansab Ali was examined as a witness in a case between two persons in respect of certain lots of land in village Saraiyan in the Court of the Tahsildar of Nawabganj. His deposition was recorded on the 25th June 1896. Therein it is stated as follows:—

"Nazir Husain is in possession under that sale-deed. He does not pay the profits since 5 or 6 years. He used to do so formerly. Litigation, criminal as well as revenue, goes on between me and Nazir Husain. I am not at all on friendly terms with him. Our dealings with one another are not those of relations." The reference to the 5 or 6 years takes us back to the year 1890, which year, in our opinion, as we have shown above, gives us the land-mark of definitely hostile relations between Nazir Husain and Mansab Ali. In the year 1901 Nazir Husain mortgaged the 4-annas share in the village in suit which had remained with him after the mutation of names of the 12-annas share in favour of his brothers in 1895 (Exhibits D2, D4, D5). In May 1905 the mortgagee entered into possession of that share under a decree of Court (Exhibit D8) and is still in possession of it and is defendant No. 4 in this suit. In 1904 Nazir Husain's equity of redemption in the said 4-annas share was sold in execution of a simple money decree against him and was purchased by his father, Muhammad Husain (Exhibit B 48). In the years 1903 and 1905 the mortgagee obtained decrees for profits in respect of the 4-annas share against Altaf Husain, now deceased, brother of Nazir Husain, who was a lambardar of the village since 1902 if not earlier (Exhibit E9). Altaf Husain paid the Government Revenue in the Government Treasury for the village in suit in his capacity as a lambardar from the year 1902 to the year 1907 (Exs. B15 to B38). On the death of Altaf Husain, his brother, Ashfaq Husain, defendant No. 2, was made the lambardar of the village, and he still continues to be so. On these materials the conclusion at which we have arrived is that the possession of Nazir Husain and through him of his brothers, who came in by virtue of the transfer under the mutation proceedings of 1895, was adverse to Mansab Ali from the year 1890. The suit is, therefore, barred by limitation.

The appellant's learned Counsel relied before us upon a large number of letters (Exs. 9 to 48) purporting to have been written by Nazir Husain to Mansab Ali from time to time. These letters, if true, certainly displace the finding as to adverse possession but, in agreement with the Court below, we are satisfied that their genuineness is not established. The learned Subordinate Judge had dealt with them carefully and exhaustively and as the reasons for our opinion in this behalf are the same as those of the learned Subordinate Judge it will serve no useful purpose to repeat them in this judgment. We will, however, make a few general observations. These letters purport to show that Nazir Husain used to pay large sums of money to Mansab Ali within each year of his possession right up to the death of Mansab Ali. From the Khatarnis Khewats of several years on the record it can be safely inferred that the net profits of the entire village amounted to something between Rs. 600 and Rs. 700 a year. The letters, when collected together for any particular year, will show that the payments amounted to Rs. 900 to Rs. 1,200 a year. To this may be added the fact that the mortgagee of the 4-annas share was constantly realizing by decrees of Court his share of the profits and the further fact that, since the year 1895, Nazir Husain had ceased to be in possession of the 12-annas share which he had transferred to his brothers; and his remaining 4-annas share was taken possession of by the mortgagee in the year 1901. We would give here some of the yearly payments alleged to have been made under these letters. For the years 1895 to 1902 these payments are given in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge except for the year 1899 in which, according to one of the letters, Exhibit 36, Rs. 1,100 were paid.

1903	Rs. 1,100 (Exs. 26 and 27)
1904	" 900 (Ex. 25)
1905	" 1,200 (Exs. 21, 22 and 23)
1906	" 1,000 (Exs. 19 and 20)
1907	" 1,300 (Exs. 16, 17 and 18)

These letters, therefore, cannot be genuine. In agreement with the learned Subordinate Judge we reject these letters (Exs. 9 to 49) as not proved. Our finding as to adverse possession consequently stands.

There were two subsidiary matters mentioned at the hearing of the appeal to which we may now conveniently advert. Defendant No. 3 is a minor. It appears from the proceedings of the Court below that one Munshi Sajjad Ali, a pleader, was appointed by that Court as the guardian ad litem of the minor. In the memorandum of appeal to this Court, however, the appellants changed the guardian of their own accord and put the minor under the guardianship of Nazir Husain, defendant No. 1. It was, however, agreed on all sides at the hearing of the appeal that this change has done no harm whatsoever to the minor. We have, therefore, treated Nazir Husain as a duly appointed guardian of the said minor. If it is necessary to record a formal order we do it hereby, and Nazir Husain should be treated to have been appointed guardian by us for the purposes of this appeal.

The other matter relates to three documents which are printed in Appendix I of the record. They were printed on an application made by the appellants to this Court. The Court, however, in passing the order for their being printed reserved the question of their being admitted or not admitted in evidence to be decided at the hearing of the appeal. We are of opinion that they should not be admitted. In the first place, they were not mentioned by the learned Counsel for the appellants in his arguments at the opening of the appeal, though they were mentioned in reply. In the second place, one of the grounds on which the application was based was, that they were tendered in evidence before the lower Court. This is not borne out by the record. Thirdly, the pleadings in the case sufficiently indicated the position taken up by the defendants in respect of the matter to which these documents are stated to relate. We refer to paragraph 18 (b) of the written statement of the defendant No. 3 which was filed on the 21st July 1920; the plaintiffs' evidence was closed on the 23rd February 1921 and the defendants' evidence had not begun till the middle of May of the same year. If the plaintiffs wanted to rely on these papers they should have produced them, at the latest, before the defendants produced their evidence.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Dr. H. S. Gour, and Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Respondent 1 (others ex parte)JUDGMENT.—In execution of a decree against defendant No. 2 Kashi Bai, the daughter of Mst. Bhulai, deceased, and Kashi Bai's husband Bansaji, defendant No. 3, Shriram, defendant No. 1, got a house attached and sold. Defendant No. 4 Singraji purchased it. The plaintiff Rajaram who is Bhulai's son sues for a declaration that the house, which he alleges is his ancestral property, is not liable to be attached and sold in execution of the decree against Kashi Bai.
Bhulai was a resident of Berar where also the property in suit is situated.Shriram pleaded that the house was acquired by Bhulai and that after Bhulai's death Kashi Bai became entitled to it and was in possession as her heir. Kashi Bai admitted the plaintiff's claim. Bansaji did not appear and defend the suit. Singraji pleaded that the house belonged to one Sakharam Selki, that Sakharam mortgaged it to Bhulai, that Bhulai foreclosed it and became its owner, and that on her death Kashi Bai became the owner. The plaintiff replied that the mortgage though written in Bhulai's name wasreally to his father Janshet who had advanced the money secured by it; that Bhulai foreclosed it after Janshet's death and held the house on plaintiff's behalf till 1907 when she died, and that since that time the plaintiff has been in possession. He urged that even if the house belonged to Bhulai he was her legal heir and entitled to it.It has been found by the lower Courts that the house in dispute was the stridhan property of Bhulai and not the property of Janshet. The question is who became entitled to it after Bhulai's death, the plaintiff Rajaram or defendant Kashi Bai or both? The trial Court held that Kashi Bai inherited the property after Bhulai's death. The lower Appellate Court has held that both Rajaram and Kashi Bai inherited the property in equal shares. Shri-ram appeals and contends that Kashi Bai inherited to the exclusion of Rajaram.The lower Appellate Court has found that the house in dispute was Bhulai's Anvadheyaka Stridhan since the money advanced by her on the mortgage was given to her by her father after her marriage. It is admitted that if the Stridhan in question is Anvadheyaka and the Mitakshara applies the daughter succeeds in preference to the son, but that if the Mayukha applies the son and daughter succeed in equal shares. It is, however, contended on the appellant's behalf that there is nothing to support the finding that the money advanced by Bhulai was given to her by her father. The evidence of Sakharam (P. W. 5) affords sufficient basis for the finding that the money was given to Bhulai by her father at the time of the mortgage when she was already married. The finding that the Stridhan was Anvadheyaka must, therefore, stand.The question then is whether the Mitakshara or the Mayukha applies in this case. The lower Appellate Court holds that the "Bombay School" is followed in Berar and has applied the Mayukha. It is said that the Mayukha applies only in certain parts of the Bombay Presidency, namely, Gujrat, North Konkan and the Island of Bombay; Vyas Chimanlal Harjiwan v. Vyas Ramchandra Asharam (1), and outside these places the Mitakshara applies. Therefore, it is argued the Mayukha(1) 24 B. 367; 2 Bom. L. R. 163; 12 Ind. Dec.
(N. S.) 778.

SHAHADAT v. GANESH DAS

cannot be applied indiscriminately in Berar since it is not applicable indiscriminately in Bombay. But whatever may be said about the application of the Mayukha as regards the Bombay Presidency, so far as Berar is concerned we find it accepted in a number of rulings that the Mayukha applies in Berar in preference to the Mitakshara when the two differ. In Girjabai v. Vyankatesh (2) it was held that the law compounded of Mitakshara, Mayukha and custom which obtains in the Bombay Presidency is applicable to Marathas in Berar. In Ram Prasad v. Subu Bai (3) Stanyon, A. J. C., referred to the above ruling and observed: "In my own experience of judicial work in Berar I never found it disputed, but on the contrary invariably taken for granted, that the Mitakshara, read with Mayukha, was the predominating authority on Hindu Law in Berar cases." This case was followed in Dawlatrao v. Govindrao (4). In Musammatt Chandrabhaga v. Vishwanath (5) which was a case from Berar, it was held that the parties were presumably governed by the Bombay School of Hindu Law, namely, the Mitakshara as interpreted by the Mayukha, that being the lex loci in Berar. In Bhadia v. Musammatt Bhagi (6) and Madho v. Janki (7) the view in Ram Prasad v. Subu Bai (3) appears to have been accepted.

It seems to me that in the local rulings where expressions such as "Mitakshara read with Mayukha" or "Mitakshara as interpreted by the Mayukha" or "Mitakshara as interpreted in the Bombay Presidency" or "Mitakshara as interpreted in Western India" are used, what is meant is that where the Mitakshara and the Mayukha differ the Mayukha is to predominate.

I, therefore, hold that the rights of the parties must be determined with reference to the Mayukha. According to that law both Rajaram and Kashi Bai inherited the house in dispute. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Shamilat, whether accessory to khewat land—Mortgage of khewat land—Shamilat acquired subsequent to date of mortgage—Extinguishment of right of redemption—Shamilat, whether transferred to mortgagee.

The rights of a proprietor in the shamilat of a village are not a mere accessory to the land separately held by him, and a transfer of the latter does not ipso facto convey any rights in the former to the purchaser. [p. 370, col. 1.]

A clause in a wajib-ul-arz providing that shares in the shamilat are proportionate to the khewat lands held by each proprietor cannot confer any rights in the common land on a purchaser of khewat land to whom such rights have not been conveyed by the deed of sale. Such a clause in a wajib-ul-arz merely fixes the measure of the right of the proprietors in the shamilat with reference to their separate or khewat lands, for purposes of partition and cannot be construed to work forfeiture of valuable rights in the land by automatically transferring them to a purchaser of khewat lands. [p. 370, col. 1.]

Pareem Chand v. Sardara, 10 P. R. 1894, dissented from.

Mirza v. Kahan Singh, 52 Ind. Cas. 539; 96 P. R. 1919, distinguished.

Plaintiffs executed a mortgage of certain khewat lands in favour of defendants prior to 1856. In the latter year a large area of Government waste land was entered in the Revenue Records as shamilat of the village. In 1831 plaintiffs sued to redeem their mortgage, but their suit was dismissed as time barred. In 1905, the shamilat was partitioned and plaintiffs' share was entered in the name of the defendants who had become owners of the khewat land which had been mortgaged to them. Plaintiff's brought the present suit for possession of the shamilat land—

Held, (1) that it must be assumed that Government made a present of the waste in 1856 to the proprietary body of the village and that the plaintiffs, who were at that time members of that body, became rightful owners of a share in it in proportion to their khewat holding;

(2) that the mere fact that they had subsequently lost their khewat land did not operate to transfer their rights in the shamilat to the defendants.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jhang, at Sargodha, dated the 20th May 1919.

Mr. B. D. Kureshi, for the Appellants.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Zafar Ali, J.—The plaintiffs (respondents) are successors-in-interest of persons who in the first Settlement Record of 1856 were entered as mortgagees of certain shares in two wells and lands attached thereto. The owners of one of the two wells sued for redemption in 1881, but their suit failed on the ground that it was instituted more than 60 years after the mortgage. In consequence of this decision the mortgagees (plaintiffs) were entered as owners in the Revenue Records. In 1905 the shamilat of the plaintiffs' patti was partitioned and the land now in dispute fell to the plaintiffs' share by virtue of their being khewat owners or proprietors in the patti and was duly mutated in their names. But in 1908 followed another mutation order by which the names of the defendants, who are the representatives of the old mortgagors, were substituted for those of the plaintiffs. The latter instituted the present suit in 1917 for possession of that land. Their case was that, as stated in paragraph 86 of Steedman's Settlement Report of the Jhang District, there were, 'before the advent of British rule, no villages in that District with fixed boundaries; that it was after annexation that village boundaries were demarcated and the waste area, which fell within the boundaries of each village, was allotted to that village and described in the revenue papers as shamilat, though it originally belonged to Government; that at the time of the first Regular Settlement of 1856 they were owners and not the mortgagees as the mortgagors' right to redeem had become extinct long before the year 1856, and that they as owners of khewat lands became entitled to a share in the shamilat thus formed by act of Government for the benefit of persons who were then proprietors of khewat lands, and who, according to the wajib-ul-arz, were co-sharers in the shamilat in proportion to their khewat lands. The Courts below accepted this theory and the plaintiffs' suit was decreed.

In deciding that the mortgagors' right to redeem had been extinguished before 1856 the Courts below acted upon the assumption that the rule of limitation barring 'the right of redemption on the expiration of 60 years from mortgage was in force from the date of the mortgage in question. But the learned Counsel for the defendants-appellants points out that no law of limitation was in force in the Punjab in 1856 or before that, and that the first Limitation Act was enacted in 1859. Therefore, he argues that, in the absence of any law of limitation, it could not be said that the mortgagors ceased to be the proprietors of the land mortgaged or that their right to redeem was lost by lapse of time. Presumably, the revenue authorities described the parties in the records of 1856 as mortgagors and mortgagees because this relationship between them was admitted by all concerned. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs has nothing to urge to the contrary on this point and, therefore, it is not possible to hold that the mortgagees had become owners in or before 1856. On this view of the matter, the plaintiffs' claim as originally set out in their plaint must fail because they laid claim to the shamilat on the ground that they were proprietors in the village when it was formed. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents advances, however, the argument that in early times shamilat was not of much value and was considered accessory to the khewat lands and that, consequently, when shamilat accrued in this case it went with the mortgage. But it is obvious that it could not go with the mortgage because it was not even in existence when the mortgage was effected.

Next, it is argued, upon the basis of the entries in the wajib-ul-arz declaring shares in the shamilat to be in proportion to the khewat holdings, that as the plaintiffs are now the owners of the khewat land which once belonged to the defendants the shamilat should go to them and not to the latter. But even if it be conceded that Government waste land was converted into shamilat in 1856 in the way stated above, it would follow that Government made a present of this waste area to the proprietary body of the village and that the mortgagors, who were at that time members of that body, became rightful owners of a share in it in proportion to their khewat holding. Therefore, the question is, whether they lost that share subsequently when their right to redeem the khewat land was extinguished. On this point the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents cites Pareem Chand v. Sardara, (1) which is the solitary authority for the proposition that "the khewat carries with it as appurtenant to it a proportionate share of the common land." But in spite of this ruling, which was referred to in Ram Das v. Amir Shah (2), it was decided in that case by a reference to other authorities that the rights of a proprietor in the shamilat of a village are not a mere accessory to the land separately held by him, that a sale of the latter does not ipso facto convey any rights in the former to the purchaser, and that a clause in the wajib-ul-arz providing that shares in the shamilat are proportional to the khewat lands held by each proprietor cannot confer any rights in the common land on the purchaser not conveyed by his deed of sale. The following passages may be quoted from this judgment:—

"It has been repeatedly held by this Court, Maluk Singh v. Muhammad (3) and Baju Shah v. Hukma (4), that the rights of a proprietor in the shamilat of a village are not a mere accessory to the land separately held by him, and that where a person comes into Court alleging purchase of the former, the onus of establishing it is on him, which is not discharged by proof that lands of separate khatas have been sold to him."

"Shamilat lands are lands held in joint ownership with other proprietors of the patti or village, as the case may be, and there can be, in the nature of things, no necessary presumption that they are transferred because the separate land of the proprietor is transferred. Frequently, they are more valuable than the individual holdings of the village owners. The clause in the wajib-ul-arz relied on by the plaintiffs merely fixes the measure of the right of the proprietors in the shamilat with reference to their separate or khewat lands, presumably in accordance with custom and mutual agreement among them. The rule so laid down is to be acted on at the time of partition, but it does not follow that because the khewat land has been sold, the shamilat land must be given to the purchaser without his paying for it, or its being transferred to him, or must lapse to the rest of the proprietary body. A clause in the wajib-ul-arz meant to define the rights of the village owners in the shamilat for the purpose of partition cannot be construed to work forfeiture of valuable interests in property in this manner."

Mirza v. Kahan Singh (5), cited on behalf of the respondents, is not applicable to this case. The ancestors of the plaintiffs in that case had given up the whole of their holding and quitted the village for good and, therefore, it was held that they had abandoned all the rights they had in the village including rights in the shamilat. In the present case there is nothing to show that the defendants have quitted the village or that they own no other land therein. On the other hand, it appears from the partition papers of 1905, copy of which is on the record, that they were still owners of other khewat and shamilat lands in the village at the time of that partition. Therefore, the allegation that they had ceased to be proprietors in the village is not well founded. Duni Chand v. Muhammad Bakhsh (6) and Jalal v. Beli Ram (7), relied on by the Courts below and again referred to in this Court, are also not in point. In Duni Chand v. Muhammad Bakhsh (6) also the dispute was in respect of the shamilat of a village in the Jhang District and paragraphs 85 and 86 of Mr. Steedman's Settlement Report of 1880 for the Jhang District were referred to therein. As the defendants in that case had purchased khewat holdings in 1836 and 1851, and as it was found that they (defendants-purchasers) had been receiving a share of the profits derived from the shamilat and had broken and brought under cultivation certain areas of it, they were declared to have acquired a share in the shamilat. In the present case it is not even alleged that the plaintiffs-respondents ever enjoyed the shamilat in any way.

GANESH DAS v. RAJA SURAJ PAL SINGH

The facts of Jalal v. Belram (7) were briefly as below :—One Ghasita was the original owner of 25 ghamaos of khewat land, but Singha had been in possession thereof for 25 years when Ghasita sued in 1863 to recover possession. His suit was dismissed as barred by time. At the subsequent Regular Settlement of 1865 Ghasita's name was removed and the other proprietors and Singha were entered as ordinary maliks and the shamilat was described as owned by the malikan. This entry was repeated at the Settlement of 1891-92 and continued up to the time of the suit. Under these circumstances, it was held that Ghasita or his representatives had lost their rights in the shamilat. Therefore, this case is quite distinguishable from the present.

Another point taken up by the Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents was that in the redemption suit of 1910 the mortgagors' claim for possession of khewat as well as shamilat land was dismissed. But it is obvious that in that case the mortgagees were in possession of both khewat and shamilat lands and, further, the questions now raised were not considered in that case.

I would, therefore, accept the appeal and, reversing the judgments and decrees of the Courts below, dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887) Sch II, Art. 95 (1)—Suit to recover value of trees cut and removed by defendant, whether cognisable by Small Cause Court

A suit by a landlord to recover the value of trees belonging to him cut and removed by the defendant who had purchased them in execution of a decree obtained against the tenant of the plaintiff falls under Article 95 (1) of Schedule II to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and is, therefore, excluded from the cognizance of a Small Cause Court.

Civil Revision from an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Kasganj, dated 24th July 1923.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Applicants.

Mr. Asthana, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This application must succeed. The suit was tried in the Court of Small Causes and the defendants, who are the applicants here, put forward the plea that the suit was not cognizable in the Small Cause Court. The lower Court decided this issue against the defendants and gave a decree to the plaintiff.

It is necessary to state the facts which are relevant to the matter now under discussion. It appears that Ganesh Das, the first defendant, held a simple money decree against one Chhidda who was impleaded as defendant No. 3.

In execution of his decree he attached and brought to sale certain trees which were standing on the occupancy holding of his judgment-debtor.

After the trees had been sold, but apparently before they were cut down, the present plaintiff, Raja Suraj Pal Singh, the zemindar, brought a suit for a declaration that these trees were not liable to be taken in execution as being the property of the judgment-debtor, Chhidda, but that they belonged to him. The Raja lost his suit in the first Court but he won in the Court of the District Judge in appeal on the 3rd of August 1922. After that he applied to the Court under section 144, Civil Procedure Code, and asked that the value of the trees might be paid over to him by the decree-holder and the auction-purchaser. This application was disallowed with the result that this suit was brought on the 5th July 1923.

The above facts are all set out in the plaint. The relief claimed was Rs. 150 by way of damages arising out of the unlawful attachment and sale, in execution, of the plaintiff's property.

The Judge of the Court below disposed of the objection to jurisdiction on the ground that the claim was not a claim for compensation for wrongful attachment. In the opinion of the learned Judge it was only a case of

NANHELAL v. MANGILAL

"damages for the trees belonging to the plaintiff and cut by the defendants." Even so, it seems to me that if the claim was of the nature described by the learned Judge, it was still a claim which was outside the cognizance of the Court of Small Causes [cf. Article 35, clause (ii).]

I agree with the argument put forward on behalf of the applicants here that this suit is really a suit of the nature described in Article 35 (j) of the Schedule to the Small Cause Court Act, and, that being so, it was not competent for the Court below to deal with it.

I, therefore, allow this application, set aside the decree of the Court below and direct that the record be sent back to the Judge of the Court below with directions to return the plaint to the plaintiff for presentation to the proper Court. The applicants are entitled to their costs both here and in the Court below.

Appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge, Hoshangabad, dated the 22nd June 1922, in execution case arising out of civil suit No. 7 of 1917 dated 28th June 17.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Appellant,

Messrs. V. Bose, and J. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are that Jagannath, Chhotelal and others obtained a decree against Mahadeo and Mangilal (respondent). Mahadeo died and his heirs are Babhutilal and Sheoprasad. Plaintiff Nanhelal is the assignee of the decree and wishes to execute it against Mangilal alone.

Mangilal contends that Nanhelal is a benamidar for the co-judgment-debtor Babhutilal and that he cannot execute the decree under O. XXI, r. 16. He also contended that he is liable for only half the debt and that he has made an arrangement with Babhutilal and Sheoprasad, to which Nanhelal was a party, for the satisfaction of the decree. The First Subordinate Judge, Hoshangabad, dismissed the application, holding that Nanhelal was not the real assignee and had no right to execute the decree.

The only point that has been taken in appeal is whether O. XXI, r. 16, Civil Procedure Code, is a bar to execution of a decree by a benamidar for one of the judgment-debtors and whether the applicant Nanhelal is such a benamidar.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the decree in question was against Mahadeo. His legal representatives Babhutilal and Sheoprasad do not, therefore, fall under the definition in O. XXI, r. 16, Civil Procedure Code. It was held in Panachand v. Sundrabai (1), that a decree for money against several persons means a personal decree for the payment of money by two or more defendants jointly. That ruling has been dissented from in Sadagopa Aiyengar v. Sellammal (2), where it was held that the expression "decree for money against several persons" is not restricted to a personal decree for money against two or more defendants." Therein the Court held that the observation of Chandavarkar, J., in Panachand v. Sundrabai (1) that a 'decree for money against several persons' means a personal decree for the payment of money by two or more defendants jointly, puts an unduly narrow interpretation on this section. The spirit of the rule is, that a judgment-debtor should not, by acquiring the interest of a decree-holder, be allowed to put himself into a position in which he can force the other judgment-debtors to pay the whole of the decree amount, when his proper remedy is a suit for contribution, and for this purpose it does not seem to signify whether the assignee decree-holder is one against whom a personal money decree has been passed or one who has been directed to pay the decree amount out of the proceeds of the property in his hands.

The Bombay case inserts the word 'personally' which does not occur in O. XXI, r. 16. Further, under section 52 of the Civil Procedure Code the judgment-debtor would, in certain circumstances, be personally liable even in a case like the present. The same man cannot be both plaintiff and defendant; cf. Rustomji v. Purshonndus (3), I am of opinion, following Sarlagopa Ayyangar v. Sellamal (2), that the provisions of O. XXI, r. 16 will apply to a case like the present. It has also been held that a benamidar cannot apply to execute a decree. Cf. Gour Sundar Lahiri v. Hem Chunder Chowdhury (4), Balkishen Das v. Bedmati Koer (5), and Bayyana Ramayya v. Nidamarthi Krishnamurthi (6).

As regards Nanhelal's being a benamidar for Babhtital it is admitted that they are relations and Nanhelal and his witnesses admit that he purchased the decree with the object of recovering the whole amount from Mangilal. Nanhelal's brother Ganesh Ram is in the service of Babhtital. The learned Additional District Judge has elaborately discussed Nanhelal's financial position in his lengthy judgment. In estimating the evidence we start with the basis that, on his own showing, Nanhelal purchased this decree not for the purpose of making any profit out of it, but for the purpose of preventing it being executed against his relative Babhtital. In one place he says pressure was put on him to do so by his relatives who threatened that they would not return certain ornaments to him unless he did so. The lower Court has not believed this particular statement, but when it is admitted that the assignment was for the benefit of Babhtital to prevent the decree being executed against him, there is a presumption that the purchase was benami for Babhtital. It is not likely that Nanhelal would pay a large sum of money and involve himself in litigation for the purpose of benefiting Babhtital, unless he was acting merely as a benamidar for Babhtital. If the evidence is read in the light of these admissions, it will appear that the view of the lower Court that Nanhelal is not the real assignee of the decree is correct, and that this assignment was made in the interests and for the benefit of one of the judgment-debtors Babhtital, and Nanhelal merely lent his name to the transaction which is against the provisions of O. XXI, r. 16, Civil Procedure Code.

The decree of the lower Court must be confirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs.

Takavi advance—Attachment and sale of debt due to tenant—Suit to recover debt—Plea of payment, whether can be taken.

Certain tenants borrowed money from the Government as takavi. This was sought to be realised by attachment of the rent said to have been payable to the borrowers by their sub-tenants. The latter protested that they had paid up the rent and nothing was due from them, but their application was dismissed in default. The alleged debt was then put to auction and was purchased by the plaintiff who brought a suit to recover the amount from the sub-tenants. It was found that the latter had paid up the rent previous to the attachment ;

Held, that the suit was liable to be dismissed as there was no guarantee that the debt purchased by the plaintiff was actually due and the dismissal of the defendants' protest did not in any way operate to bar their plea of payment in answer to the suit.

DULA SINGH v. BELA SINGH

Mr. H. Mushtaq Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a simple matter. But it clearly appears that the lower Court has gone astray. Certain tenants borrowed money from the Government as takavi. This was sought to be realised by attachment of the rent said to have been payable to the borrowers by their sub-tenants, the present appellants. The appellants protested that they had paid up and nothing was due by them. Their application containing this protest was dismissed for default. Then the debt, namely, the rent supposed to be payable, was put to auction-sale and was purchased by the respondent Ram Prasad. Ram Prasad then brought this suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, in the Revenue Court for recovery of a sum of a Rs. 200, rent and interest. The appellants who are the principal defendants in the case (the sub-tenants) contended inter alia that they had really paid up and the auction-purchaser purchased nothing.

The Court of first instance disbelieved this story and decreed the suit. There was an appeal lodged before the learned District Judge. He sustained the plea of payment; but he thought, it is difficult to see really what he thought, the judgment is entirely unintelligible. I called upon the learned Counsel for the respondent Ram Prasad to sustain the decree of the lower Court on any ground he thought fit to do so. The decree is really unsupportable. It appears to me that what was sold was a debt supposed to be due. There was no guarantee at the time of the sale either by the Government or by anybody else that the debt was really owing. The fact that the alleged debtor's protestation was not heard owing to their own default makes no difference. Even if the Court had held that their plea of payment had not been established it could not be said that that finding would operate as res judicata. It is not the case of an objection to the attachment of a property by a third party under O. XXI, r. 58 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In such a case, unless the unsuccessful objector brings a suit to obtain a declaration of his title within a period of one year, the decision of the Court executing the decree is taken to be conclusive. An authority for this proposition will be found in the case of Maharaja of Benares v. Patraj Kunwar (1). Further, the Court which was selling the debt was not a Court constituted under the Civil Procedure Code and was not authorised to exercise the powers laid down in O. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code. The law on the point lays down that the loans advanced are to be realised as if they were arrears of revenue, vide Act XII of 1884, section 5.

The appeal succeeds and the suit of the plaintiff-respondent fails. The suit is dismissed with costs throughout which will include fees in this Court on the higher scale

DULA SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

BELA SINGH—DEFENDANT—

RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property (Act IV of 1882) s. 55 (2)—Sale—Covenant for title whether implied in Punjab.

The Transfer of Property Act is not in force in the Punjab. Its provisions are no doubt useful guides in deciding points of equity and are frequently so applied by the Courts of this Province, but there is no obligation upon the Courts so to use the Act as if every particular detail of it was the law of the Province.

The question whether the broad principle contained in section 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act is to be applied to a particular case in the Punjab depends upon the facts of that case.

Plaintiff purchased a house from the defendant which the latter had purchased at an insolvency sale, of which the plaintiff was aware. A third person subsequently established his right to one-half of the house and plaintiff was deprived of that portion. Thereupon he brought the present suit to recover the purchase-money which he had paid to the defendant.

Held, that as the plaintiff was aware that the defendant had purchased the house at an insolvency sale he must have known that the latter was conveying to him the interest which he had acquired in the auction and that the plaintiff was to stand at his shoes; that, therefore, equity did not demand that the Court should presume a covenant for title in favour of the plaintiff.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Amritsar, dated the 1st May 1922.

Lala Kahan Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Mehr Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a house, stated to be the property of one Jowala Singh, insolvent, was sold by auction by the Official Receiver for Rs. 255, to Bela Singh on the 27th August 1917. Bela Singh obtained a sale-certificate from the Court on the 25th January 1918 and on the 7th October 1919 sold the house for Rs. 650 to Dula Singh. No sale-deed was drawn up but Bela Singh handed over to Dula Singh the sale-certificate and a receipt for the money.

Subsequently, one Khushala secured a decree that the whole of the house did not belong to Jowala Singh and that half of it belonged to him (Khushala). Dula Singh, accordingly, was deprived of half the house and he then brought the present suit against Bela Singh for the return of his purchase-money, Rs. 650, alleging that there had been an oral agreement between Bela Singh and himself that the whole of the purchase-money would be returned if the whole or any part of the house were to be lost by him.

Both the Courts below concurred in holding that Dula Singh had failed to prove any such oral agreement. In the memorandum of appeal to the lower Appellate Court the vague claim was made that, apart from the oral agreement, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree on other grounds also. The learned District Judge disposed of this by saying that there appeared to be no other ground on which in the present suit the plaintiff-appellant was entitled to recover anything. The dismissal of the suit by the trial Court was upheld.

Dula Singh has now come to this Court on second appeal and claims, on the strength of section 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act, that, in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary, Bela Singh must be presumed to have guaranteed to Dula Singh a good title. Reference is made to Basaraddi Sheikh v.

Enajaddi Maleah (1) where it was held that, in the absence of any contract to the contrary, there is, under section 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act, an implied covenant for title on the part of the vendor.

The Transfer of Property Act, however, is not in force in this Province. Its provisions no doubt are useful guides in deciding points of equity and are frequently so applied by the Punjab Courts, but there is no obligation on the Courts to so use the Act as if every particular detail of it was the law of the Province. The question whether the broad principle contained in section 55 (2) is to be applied to a particular case depends upon the facts of that case. In the present instance, there is no doubt that Dula Singh knew exactly what he was buying, i.e., property purchased by Bela Singh at a forced sale. The sale is mentioned in the receipt for the price given by the vendor and the sale-certificate was handed over to Dula Singh. It was plain, therefore, to Dula Singh that Bela Singh was conveying merely what he had acquired at the auction and that he (Dula Singh) was to stand in the shoes of Bela Singh as a purchaser in an involuntary sale. In the circumstances, it does not appear to me that equity demands that the Court shall presume Bela Singh to have covenanted for title, particularly as the suit was brought upon an alleged special agreement which was not proved and since the benefit of the principle contained in section 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act appears to have been claimed specifically in second appeal for the first time I am not prepared to interfere and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 250 of 1921, decided on the 8th April 1922.

Mr. M. R. Dixit, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. R. Pandit, R. B., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by defendant No. 2 Sonba, a transferee from defendant No. 1 Kisan. The plaintiff Babya gives the following genealogical tree in the plaint from which his relationship with defendant No. 1 will be clear :—

Kisan was given in adoption to Amrita. Amrita and Bhojaji formed a joint family owning amongst other property fields Survey Nos. 30 and 42 Mouza Udupur, Taluq Darwha. Vithu, the father of plaintiff, died in a state of jointness. Plaintiff and defendant No. 1 could not pull on together since 1915 and, therefore, plaintiff demanded from defendant No. 1 his half share in the estate in 1917. But the defendant No. 1 gave plaintiff the eastern half share out of the southern half portion of Survey No. 42 held by him and it is in plaintiff's separate possession along with his share of the house by virtue of a registered partition-deed, dated 1st December 1919. But as Survey No. 30 and northern half portion of Survey No. 42 were already sold by defendant No. 1 and were in the possession of the stranger purchasers, no partition was or could be then effected in respect of them. One Ganuwarthi had purchased the whole of Survey No. 30 in which the plaintiff had half share. He settled the dispute with the plaintiff relating to the latter's half share in that field by paying him Rs. 250 and taking a sale-deed from him in respect of that share on 29th May 1920. The plaintiff demanded a half share of the northern portion of Survey No. 42 which was sold by defendant No. 1 to defendant No. 2 Sonba by a registered sale-deed, dated 15th February 1915 from the alienee Sonba, but the latter declined to give him his share and, therefore, the present suit has been instituted for recovery of a separated half share out of the said northern portion of the field. This suit was filed on 23rd October 1920. The defendant No. 1 was practically a pro forma defendant, and supported the plaintiff's claim. The contesting defendant is defendant No. 2. He raised several pleas but we are not concerned with all of them. The plea with which this second appeal is concerned is the plea of the bar O. II, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, by reason of the present claim not having been included in the previous suit, No. 102 of 1920, which the plaintiff had filed against the present defendant No. 1 in the Court of the Munsif, Yeotmal, for partition and possession of his share in the houses and moveables held by defendant No. 1. But in that suit, No. 102 of 1920, the present defendant No. 2 was not made a co-defendant.

As regards the bar of O. II, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, by reason of the previous suit, No. 102 of 1920, the plaintiff urged that that suit was based upon a specific grievance of the plaintiff against defendant No. 1 alone, and, consequently, the claim for half share out of the alienated northern half portion of Survey No. 42 enforceable as against defendant No. 2 was not joined in that suit. It was also pointed out that the land was held and possessed by a stranger to the family from before the date of that suit and the plaintiff was not legally bound to include his present claim in the former suit for partition against a member of the family. In other words, the plaintiff's contention was that his cause of action for recovery of his half share out of the alienated northern portion of Survey No. 42 was distinct from the cause of action which formed the basis of the former suit, No. 102 of 1920. The relevant issue is No. 7.

"(7) Whether the present suit is barred under O. II, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code?"

The Court of first instance held that the suit was barred by O. II, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Court of first instance accordingly dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The lower Appellate Court upset the dismissal by holding that the suit was not barred by O. II, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code. The learned Counsel who appeared for the appellant-defendant No. 2 did not press the other pleas of res judicata and limitation raised by him as grounds Nos. 2 and 3 in the memorandum of second appeal. The only plea raised is about the bar of O. II, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code.

Admittedly, the northern half portion of Survey No. 42 which is now in dispute was not in the possession of defendant No. 1 at the time when the former suit, No. 102 of 1920, was instituted. It was in the possession of defendant-appellant since its purchase by him. The second defendant was not a party to the said suit. Just as being a prior alienor he could not be estopped as being privy in estate by a judgment obtained in an action against the alienor commenced after the alienation dated 15th February 1915, Abdul Ali v. Mukhan Abdul Husein (1). Similarly, he could not claim the benefit of that litigation for setting up the bar of O. II, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code against the present suit. On this ground alone the finding of the Court of first instance was liable to be set aside as the District Judge very rightly did upset it. Although O. II, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code requires that every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action, still that rule does not require that every suit shall include every claim or every cause of action which the plaintiff may have against the defendant; Cf. Mothoor Mohun Mundul v. Khemunkuree Dossee, (2) affirmed by the Privy Council in Ramhurry Mondul v. Mothoor Mohun Mondul (3). It is clear that the former suit, No. 102 of 1920, was a suit for partition of certain moveable and immoveable property by one member against another member of the family. The plaintiff was not bound to join in that suit his distinct cause of action against the stranger purchaser, defendant No. 2. It was held by that learned Hindu Judge of the Bombay High Court, Justice Ranade, in Purushottam v. Atmaram Janardan, (4) on the authority Narayan of Hari v. Ganpatrao (5), that the rule that every partition suit shall embrace all the joint family property is subject to certain exceptions such as (i) where different portions of it are situated in and out of British India: Baamcharya v. Anantacharya (6); (ii) where a portion of it is not immediately available for partition by reason of its being in the possession of mortgagees, or because it was inam land which required Government permission to give Courts jurisdiction: Narayan v. Pandurang (7), Balkrishna v. Hari (8) and Pattaravy Mudali v. Audimula Mudali (9). He has also pointed out a third class of cases which could be similarly excepted from the rule, viz., where the property was held in partnership by the joint family along with strangers who had no interest in the family partition among the sharers, and who could not, therefore, be made parties in the family partition suit. Cases are possible where the mere fact that the partition has been effected, does not by itself, in the absence of an agreement to that effect, bar the right for partition of property still undivided, and in respect of which the members may retain their share in the undivided estate. The whole village or a particular community may have joint property in a common pasturage or a forest, and such common enjoyment may continue even after there has been a private partition among the members of any one or more of the component families. No intention to relinquish a part of the claim can be inferred by the mere non-inclusion of such a common claim in a family partition suit. The cause of action, i. e., the fact or facts which afforded grounds for complaint in the former partition suit, was the plaintiff's relationship in the family, and his desire to have the property still left with the family, divided into shares. While the cause of action in the present suit is the right of the plaintiff to ignore or avoid the alienation made by a member of the family so far as it prejudicially affected the plaintiff's interest in the alienated item of the joint family property. The causes of action being thus distinct, O. II, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, can have no operation here. There is, therefore, ample authority for the view that the present suit was not barred by reason of the non-inclusion of the plaintiff's claim for a half share of the northern half portion of Survey No. 42 in the former suit. The ground No. 1, therefore, fails.

As a result of the above decision, the appeal stands dismissed with costs. The costs in the lower Courts will be paid as already ordered.

Application against the decree of the District Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated 17th April 1923, upholding decree of the Additional Munsif, Rae Bareilly, dated 22nd August, 1923.

Mr. Radha Krishna, for the Applicants.

Messrs. Zahur Ahmad and Vilayat Husain, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—The applicants brought a suit in the Court of the Additional Munsif of Rae Bareilly for possession of a 1 kirant share in village Serai Mughlan, District Rae Bareilly. The suit was dismissed. The plaintiffs preferred an appeal against the decree of the Munsif to the Court of the District Judge of Rae Bareilly. During the pendency of the appeal in the last mentioned Court, the parties agreed to refer the matter in dispute to arbitration. Mr. Muhammad Shwaib, a practitioner of that Court, was appointed the sole arbitrator with the consent of the parties. He accepted to act as arbitrator and finally he gave his award. The applicants were dissatisfied with the award, and raised several objections against it. The learned District Judge has overruled those objections and confirmed the award, and directed a decree to be prepared in terms thereof. The net result of the award was the confirmation of the decree of the Court of first instance and dismissal of the appeal preferred against it. The present application seeks to impugn the validity of the award.

MIRZA MUHAMMAD HASAN BEG v. MIRZA SHAKIR BEG

In the first place, it is to be observed that the application does not fall within the terms of section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure under which it purports to have been made. The learned Judge was clearly acting within his jurisdiction by referring the matter in dispute between the parties to arbitration with the consent of these parties. Reference to arbitration having thus been made and the arbitrator having consented to act, the learned Judge ceased to have any jurisdiction over the matter in dispute. This is in accordance with clause (2) of paragraph 3 of the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure. He again became seized of the jurisdiction when the arbitrator submitted his award to the Court by the order of which the reference had proceeded. Objections being filed against the award, the Court had jurisdiction to deal with them under paragraphs 12, 14 and 15 of the Second Schedule to the Code. The objections in the present case were so dealt with by the learned Judge, and his final order is founded upon the provisions of paragraph 16 of the same Schedule. According to those provisions he has refused the application praying for an order to set aside the award and pronounced judgment in accordance with it. He has, therefore, acted throughout within jurisdiction and I discover neither any illegality nor any material irregularity on the part of the learned District Judge in the exercise of his jurisdiction. This will be a sufficient ground to dismiss this application.

A point of law of some importance was, however, raised at the hearing of this application and I think it desirable that I may express my own opinion on it. In the first instance, it was argued that in the present case there was no application in writing by the parties, asking the Court in which the appeal was pending, to refer the matter to arbitration, and inasmuch as clause (2) of paragraph 1 of the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure requires that an application contemplated by that clause shall be in writing, the reference to arbitration was wholly ultra vires. There are decisions which lay down the proposition that the provision of clause (2) is merely directory, see, for instance, the cases of Shama Sundram Iyer v. Abdul Latif (1) and Abdul Hamid v. Riazuddin (2). These decisions were passed under the old Code of Civil Procedure but there is no material difference between the provisions of the old Code and the new Code in this behalf. Speaking for myself, I am not prepared to hold broadly that the requirement imposed by clause (2) that the application shall be in writing is merely directory. My own opinion in the matter is that the applicants are estopped from raising the plea that the application for reference was not in writing with the object of defeating the entire arbitration proceeding and the award following it. I prefer to rest my decision on the grounds stated by Jenkin's C. J. in the case of Luxumbai v. Hajee Wadina Cussum (3). The learned Chief Justice observed: "Here, however, the matter has advanced a stage further, the order has actually been made and the case has reached that point at which it may be asked whether the rule that consent cures error should not be applied." In the case before him he applied that rule and in support of his opinion he quoted the cases of Tyernan v. Smith (4) and Andrews v. Elliott (5). The learned Chief Justice also distinguished the two Privy Council decisions in the cases of Nusserwanjee Pestonjee v. Meer Mynodeen Khan (6) and Stafford Bettsworth Haine v. The East India Company (7).

In the present case, the objection which I am now considering, was not taken in the Court below. These applicants accepted the reference, signed their names on the order sheet of the Court in relation to the order of reference, attended the proceedings, which the arbitrator held for the purpose of making his award and attempted to produce certain documentary evidence before him which he declined to receive. Now that the award has gone against them, I think it is too late for them to impeach the legality of it on the ground that the original application for reference was not in writing. In the case of Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Gunguli (8) the rule on which I rely was stated by Lord Shaw in the following terms: "To use language common from very early times in Scotland, and highly approved in the case of Maddison v. Alderson (9) in the House of Lords, it is no doubt true that there is a locus penitentiae, that is, a power of resiling from an incomplete engagement, from an unaccepted offer, from a mutual contract to which all have not assented, from an obligation to which writing is requisite and has not yet been adhibited in an authentic shape." This is the situation where the parties stand upon nothing but an engagement which is not final or complete. But where the actings and conduct of parties are founded on, then in all such cases, to use the language of Professor Bell in his Principles, 10th edition, section 26, "rei interventus raises a personal exception, which excludes the plea of locus penitentiae. It is inferred from any proceedings, not unimportant, on the part of the obligee, known to and permitted by the obligor to take place on the faith of the contract, as if it were perfect; provided they are unequivocally referable to the contract and productive of alteration of circumstances, loss or inconvenience, though not irretrievable". His Lordship added, that there is nothing either in the law of India or of England inconsistent with the principle above stated, but that, on the contrary, these laws follow the same rule.

It was further argued that the arbitrator refused to receive documentary evidence which the applicants desired to produce in support of their case before him, and that this refusal amounted to misconduct on his part sufficiently grave to vitiate the award. I do not agree with this contention. The arbitrator has stated in writing the grounds on which he acted in the matter of refusing to receive the evidence. His opinion was, that the case had come before him from a Court of Appeal where it was pending in the form of an appeal from the decree of the Court of first instance and that he could only act within such jurisdiction over the matter as could be exercised by the Court of Appeal. His opinion may be wrong. I am not concerned with that, but he certainly had power to decide whether he should accept additional evidence or not. He was arbitrator on all matters whether of fact or of law. The Court hearing objections against an award is not a Court of Appeal sitting in judgment over the award. In case of Badruddin Hasan v. Amir Begam (10) a Bench of this Court laid down the proposition that, where the award is good on the face of it the parties cannot object to the arbitrator's decision either upon law or fact, and the Courts will not ordinarily review his discretion provided he acts within his authority and behaves fairly to each party; nor will they interfere with his judgment on any mere ground of mistake. This decision was upheld by their Lordships of the Privy Council on appeal, see Amir Begam v. Badruddin Hasan, (11). The application is dismissed with costs.

Account-books, whether sufficient to prove purpose of loan.

The question of what are "necessaries" within the meaning of section 68 of the Contract Act is not a pure question of law but is a mixed question of law and fact and as such cannot be allowed to be raised for the first time in second appeal when it has no foundation in the pleadings. [p. 381, col. 2.]

Mere general words are insufficient to create a charge on property either moveable or immoveable if it is not specifically indicated. A covenant that the obligee should recover from the "person and property" of the debtor is too wide to fasten a charge on any of his property. [p. 382, col. 1.]

A mere covenant to charge an estate does not create a charge unless the property can be identified by existing facts and circumstances so that there may be no ambiguity about them. There must be expression of a present intention coupled with the necessary words of hypothecation in order to constitute it. [p. 382, col. 1.]

A creditor is bound to prove purposes for which loan is borrowed by independent and reliable evidence and mere entries in his account-books will not constitute such proof. [p. 382, col. 2.]

Mr. N. G. Bose, R. B., for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. V. Khare and K. K. Gandhe, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The present appeal arises out of a suit to enforce a simple money-bond, dated 24th July, 1914 (Ex. P-1) executed by Aheliabai, defendant No. 1, for herself and as the guardian of her minor adopted son Yeshwant Rao, defendant No. 2. The consideration of the bond which is Rs. 2,000 is made up of the balance due on previous transactions of loans or on account of price of articles supplied to the minor's guardian from time to time. The plaintiff claimed relief against the person and property of both the defendants. The first Court decreed the claim against defendant No. 1 but dismissed it as against the minor defendant No. 2 or his estate on the ground that no benefit to the defendant No. 2 was proved. Defendant No. 2 died and in his place his widow Anusuya's name was substituted by the District Judge, Akola, who confirmed the finding as to absence of benefit and dismissed the plaintiff's appeal. It is against this dismissal of the claim as against defendant No. 2 Yeshwant Rao or his legal representative that this appeal has been preferred. Both the Courts below held that the plaintiff failed to prove that the several items which formed the consideration of the bond in suit were borrowed by defendant No. 1 for the benefit of her minor son or his estate. This finding of fact precludes me from entertaining this second appeal.

It is, however, contended that the District Judge decided the case against the plaintiff under the erroneous impression that "there is no clause in it (bond Ex. P-1) which purports to bind the estate of Yeshwant Rao (vide paragraph 4 of the lower Appellate Court's judgment). My attention is drawn to the following clause in the bond, Ex. P-1. "This bond is binding on my estate and heirs", and it is contended on the strength of these words that the bond (Ex. P-1) is a document which creates a charge against the estate of the minor and that, as plaintiff had expressly asked the relief against the estate of the minor defendant No. 2, the Courts below ought to have decreed the claim against the estate, on the strength of the said clause.

In the argument the learned pleader developed the point and very ingenuously urged that even assuming that the words mentioned above did not make the bond in suit a document purporting to bind the estate of the minor, still, upon a scrutiny of the various items which went to form its consideration, the Courts below ought to have concluded that, at any rate, majority of them represented the "necessaries" supplied to the minor for which section 68 of the Indian Contract Act provided a statutory charge. To take up the last argument first: a perusal of the Order Sheets dated 7th May 1918, 5th July 1918 and 26th February 1919 and the pleadings recorded in the case will clearly show that plaintiff was not able to make any satisfactory statement as to the purposes of the loans and as regards the existence of legal necessity or benefit to the minor defendant No. 2. It is rightly pointed out by the defendant No. 2's learned pleader before me that, the question of what are "necessaries", is not a pure question of law but is a mixed question of law and fact and cannot be allowed to be raised for the first time in second appeal;

MANNI LAL v. RANI

Jagon Ram Marwari v. Mahadeo Prasad Sahu (1) as it has no foundation in the pleadings. I do not feel inclined to entertain it here particularly as by the death of the minor his legal representative would not be able to prove the special circumstances within the knowledge of the infant himself which make those articles not necessities—(page 779 ibid). The argument as regards the statutory charge under section 68 of the Contract Act, therefore, fails.

The next point is, whether the bond in suit creates any charge on the estate of the minor. No authority has been cited in support of the proposition that the words quoted above are sufficient to impose a valid charge upon the estate. On the contrary, the respondent contends that several ingredients are wanting to make the covenant a covenant binding the estate of the minor. It is pointed out that the responsibility rested on the creditor when the bond was taken for the debt to take care that the bond was so drawn as to render the estate of the minor in law liable for the debt. Krishnan Cheity v. Vellaichami Tevan [Arumugam Chetti v. Duraisinga Tevar] (2). Section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act which deals with immoveable property clearly contemplates that the property which is made security for the payment of money to another must be specific property of the debtor:—vide The Collector of Etawah v. Beti Maharani (3) followed in Kishan Lal v. Rani Bhawan Kuar (4); see also Jagatdhar Narain Prasad v. A. M. Brown (5). Mere general words are insufficient. Similarly, for creating a charge on moveables, the property or funds must be specifically indicated: Watson v. The Duke of Wellington, (6) and Percival v. Dunn (7). In other words, a covenant that the obligee could recover from the "person and property" of the debtor is too wide to fasten a charge on any of his property. See also Batchu Ramajogayya v. Vajjula Jagannadham (8). Although the law does not require a writing to create a charge, it is fairly arguable that in order to be valid, a charge must conform to the requirements of the Registration Act if a writing is executed or relied upon in support of the charge. A mere covenant to charge estate does not create a charge, unless the property can be identified by existing facts and circumstances so that there may be no ambiguity about them. There must be expression of a present intention coupled with the necessary words of hypothecation in order to constitute it. I cannot find any such expressions in the bond in suit as would make it an instrument creating a charge on any portion of the minor's estate. The argument that the charge was created by acts of parties also, therefore, fails.

One more argument remains to be considered. The lower Courts have accepted the entries in the account-book as correct for the purpose of holding that the bond in suit was for consideration but they erred in rejecting them as constituting no proof of the purposes mentioned therein. I do not see any force in the argument, particularly as the creditor was bound to prove the purposes by independent and reliable evidence which is miserably lacking in the present case. The result is that the appeal stands dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal from a decree of the District Judge of Farrukhabad, dated the 14th September, 1922.

Gulzari Lal, for the Appellants.

Dr. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendants' appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption.

The plaintiff and the vendor in this case are co-widows and they admittedly are co-sharers in the plot described as grove which has been sold. Both the Courts below have decreed the suit holding that there is a custom under which a "hissedar karibi" is entitled to preference as against other co-sharers and that the present plaintiff comes within the definition of the expression hissedar karibi of the vendor. The defendant transferee is also a co-sharer in the same grove but is not in any way related to the vendor. There is now before us no dispute as to there being a right of pre-emption with regard to the sale-deed. The only question is, whether the plaintiff has preference as against the transferees. Both the Courts below have come to the conclusion that, having regard to the fact that these ladies belong to the same Hindu family and by marriage have become members of the family, they are hissedars karibi of each other.

On behalf of the defendants it is contended before us that the word karibi means a blood relation and that, therefore, the plaintiff and the vendor who are connected with each other only through marriage are not blood relations. The word karibi is derived from the word karib which is defined in Wilson's glossary as meaning near, near to; also near in relationship, a kinsman, a relative, a connection by birth or marriage, excepting the relation of parent and child.

It was also pointed out in the Full Bench case of Khuman Singh v. Hardai (1) that the word karibi is sometimes ambiguous but in connection with other words it may have a very wide meaning. Mr. Justice Karamat Hussain in a case reported in Radhay Parshad v. Nannu (2) was of opinion that the word rishtedaran karibi meant near relations by blood or marriage. In the present case the word rishtedar is not used at all, we have only the word karibi and that, in our opinion, simply means relation.

We may point out that in a case reported in Jagrani v. Bisheshar Dube (3) it was held that a son-in-law was not a rishtedar karibi because he was not connected with the Hindu family whose daughter he had married. It was also pointed out that the cases of Hindu females are different on the ground that they become members of the families into which they marry. This remark distinguishes that case from another case of the same Bench Kuria v. Jafri (4) which was a case of Muhammadans and where it was held that the two widows of two deceased brothers were not near relations so as to come within that category. In this view of the matter, we are of opinion that the view of the Courts below on this point was correct.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal must fail and it is hereby dismissed with costs.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887) Sch. II, Art. 8—"Rent", meaning of—Damages for use and occupation, suit to recover, nature of—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Courts.

(1) 11 A. 41; A. W. N. (1889) 1; 6 Ind. Dec. N. S., 455.

RAKHMABAI v. VITHUSA

The word "rent" in Article 8 of Schedule II to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act is intended to be understood in the ordinary sense of a return in money or kind for the enjoyment of specific property held by one person from or under another, and does not include damages for the use and occupation of land by a trespasser.

A suit to recover such damages, therefore, does not fall within the Article and is not excluded from the cognizance of a Small Cause Court.

Chuni Lal v. Shazada Khanam, 158 P. R. 1884 dissented from Vira Pillai v. Rangasami Pillai, 22 Mad. 149; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 106 relied on.

Potition under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, for revision of the order of the Munsif, with Small Cause Court powers, of Jullundur, dated the 24th October 1922.

Lala Fakir Chand and Mr. Sagar Chand, for the Petitioner.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order, dated the 24th of October 1922, passed by a Munsif having the powers of a Judge of Small Cause Court, at Jullundur, awarding plaintiff a decree for Rs. 15 on account of rent of some land. It is argued that the order is without jurisdiction, inasmuch as the suit was one for the recovery of rent other than house rent and consequently excluded from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court by reason of Article 8 of the second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act of 1887. On behalf of the defendant the contrary view has been presented that the sum claimed is not in the nature of rent but of damages for use and occupation of land held by him as a trespasser and consequently cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. The facts are that on the occasion of Baisakhi festival in the month of April 1921 the defendant put up a temporary shop on some land owned by the plaintiff. The plaintiff thereupon brought this suit for the recovery of Rs. 30 on account of rent of this land. The defendant denied that the land belonged to the plaintiff and stated that it was a public place. The trial Court found against the defendant and, holding that the land belonged to the plaintiff, passed a decree for Rs. 15 in his favour.

The question for decision is whether the suit is one for rent or for damages for use and occupation. I have given a careful consideration to this matter and the conclusion at which I have arrived is that the contention of the respondent is correct and that the suit is not for rent but for damages for use and occupation of the land held by the defendant as a trespasser. Reliance is placed on behalf of the petitioner on Chunni Lal v. Shazada Khanam (1) where it was held that the expression "rent" in section 6 of the Small Cause Court Act, 1865, was not limited in meaning to rent due on contract but included money claimable in respect of premises of the plaintiff used and occupied by the defendant without a contract. The question, however, was not fully discussed in this authority and it does not appear on the facts stated whether the land was occupied by the defendant with or without the permission of the plaintiff. On the other hand, Mr. Badri Das contends that the word "rent" in the section, was intended to be understood in the ordinary sense of a return in money or kind for the enjoyment of specific property held by one person from or under another. In my opinion this seems to be the correct view, and a decision of the Malras High Court in Vira Pillai v. Rangasami Pillai (2) points to the same conclusion. The present claim is obviously not of this nature and is, therefore, not excluded from the cognizance of the Court of Small Causes.

I do not see any force in this petition and dismiss it with costs.

RAKHMA v. VITHUS

The right way of judging in ordinary cases whether a loan on a mortgage of family property for purchasing an estate constitutes a benefit to the family is not by looking at the ultimate result of the purchase many years after but to determine the question of benefit with reference to the time of purchase. [p. 886, cols. 1 & 2.]

A debt incurred on the security of the family property is not "an antecedent debt" [p. 886, col. 2]

Sons and grandsons not born at the date of a mortgage take by their birth an interest in the family property subject to the mortgagee's rights in respect of the father's shares as they existed at the date of the mortgage and they are not entitled to object to the alienation of such shares. [p. 887, col. 2]

Appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, dated the 30th June 1921, in Civil Suit No. 49 of 1919.

Mr. N. G. Bose, R. B. and Mr. G. V. Deshmukh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts and issues material to the decision of this appeal are as follows. Vithusa, defendant No. 1, Puransa, defendant No. 2 and Nagosa, defendant No. 3, are brothers. They and a fourth brother Govindsa, now deceased, executed a mortgage, Exhibit P-1, on the 19th December 1907 in favour of Puranmal, deceased husband of the plaintiff Rukhmabai. The consideration was Rs. 7,500 made up as follows :—

Rs. 1,500 were to be paid by the mortgagee to Sheolal Ramlal, a mortgagee of some land in Mouza Parwatpur belonging to the mortgagors ;

Rs. 5,500 cash borrowed and paid to Madho Rao and others from whom the mortgagors had purchased two fields Nos. 17 and 24 situated in mouza Fazalpur also called Khaparkhed for Rs. 6,500 on the same day, i. e., the 19th December 1907 ;

Rs. 500 taken for the use of the family.

The property mortgaged consisted of fields situated in five villages and included the two fields purchased from Madhorao and others with the borrowed money.

The plaintiff admits repayments to the extent of Rs. 8,925 and asks for a decree for Rs. 15,000 according to the rule of Damdupat.

The defendants Nos. 4 to 18 are the sons and grandsons of the mortgagors. Defendants Nos. 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 15, 16 and 17 were not born at the date of the mortgage. Defendant No. 4 was major and the remaining defendants were minors at the date of the mortgage. The defendants Nos. 4 to 17 are joined on the ground that they are members of a joint family with defendants 1 to 3 and are entitled to redeem the mortgage. These defendants pleaded that there was no legal necessity for the mortgage-debt nor any benefit of the family therefrom and that their shares were not liable. It was also pleaded that the defendants who had effected a partition should each be allowed to redeem his respective share by paying a proportionate part of the mortgage-debt as the mortgage had been split up by the mortgagee consenting to a sale of the part of the mortgaged property. The plaintiff replied that the debt was incurred for legal necessity; that defendant No. 4 who they admitted was major at the time of the mortgage gave his consent to the mortgage and that the defendants who were not born at the date of the mortgage could not raise the question of legal necessity or benefit.

The issues on these pleadings were,—

2. Was the debt such as to bind the shares of defendants Nos. 4 to 17 in the property ?
3. Can defendants Nos. 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 15, 16 and 17 who were born after the mortgage in suit raise the question about the nature of the debt and the liability of their shares for it ?
6. What right of contribution exists between the parties by reason of sale of part of the property to Syed Ajamal Hasani and others and what was the value of the several items of the mortgaged property on the date of mortgage ?
7. Had Sheoram, defendant No 4, been consulted and had he agreed to the mortgage in suit ?

The lower Court found on issue 2 that the purchase of the fields was not for the benefit of the family ; that the Rs. 500 said to have been paid for the use of the family were not proved to have been paid for cultivation or any family purpose ; that out of the item of Rs. 1,500 Rs. 800 were paid to the mortgagee Sheolal and Rs. 700 to the mortgagors ; that the latter item was not for a purpose necessary or beneficial to the family and that the Rs. 800 paid to Sheolal did not constitute an antecedent debt. On issues 3 and 7 the lower Court found that Sheoram had not consented to the mortgage and that the defendants who were not born at the date of the mortgage could raise the question of the non-liability of their shares. On issue 6 it held that the question of contribution did not arise. On these findings the lower Court passed a decree for the full claim and costs against defendants No. 1 to 3 and declared that the shares of these defendants and Govindsa would be liable for the amount decreed.

The plaintiff appeals challenging the above findings and urging that the decree should have been passed against all the defendants and that at any rate a decree against the entire fields Nos. 17 and 24 purchased with the money borrowed from the plaintiff should have been passed.

It will be convenient to decide the questions involved in issues 2 and 7 first. As regards the consent by Sheoram, we agree with the lower Court that it is not proved. The only witness examined to prove it is P. W. 5. The witness is indebted to the plaintiff and is not corroborated by any other evidence on the record. There is no particular reason why Sheoram, if he had no objection to the mortgage, did not sign or was not pressed to sign the mortgage-deed. The evidence is unconvincing and insufficient to prove Sheoram's consent.

As regards the binding nature of the consideration we agree with the lower Court that the purchase of the fields was not an act beneficial to the joint family. This will be plain if we look at the result of the transactions of the purchase and the mortgage so far as it affects the family property. Before these transactions the family was in possession of 106½ acres unencumbered land. After the transactions the family came to hold this area plus 63 acres 8 gunthas, the area of the purchased land, with an encumbrance of Rs. 5,500 carrying interest at 1 per cent. per annum liable to be increased to 1½ per cent. per annum compound rate. We do not think that the right way of judging in ordinary cases whether a loan on a mortgage of family property for purchasing an estate constitutes a benefit to the family is by looking at the ultimate result of the purchase many years after. The fact that the purchase turned out to be a good bargain many years after its date is not a ground for holding that it was for the benefit of the family when it was made. A speculative and hazardous purchase may turn out in the end to be a good bargain but it cannot for that reason be held to have been beneficial to the family. The question of benefit must be determined with reference to the time of the purchase. In our opinion the transaction could not have been considered at the date of the mortgage one for the benefit of the family. Even judging from the result the transaction can scarcely be said to be such. It has necessitated the selling away of a part of the family lands for part satisfaction of the mortgage-money. The purchase was admittedly followed by costly litigation.

As regards the item of Rs. 1,500 which the mortgagee retained to pay to Sheolal, only Rs. 800 were paid to him. Sheolal's debt was incurred on the security of the family property and was, therefore, not an antecedent debt according to the rulings of the Privy Council and the mortgagee must be deemed to have known that the sons were not liable for its payment. As regards the Rs. 700, they were paid to the mortgagees themselves about a year after the date of the mortgage. There was no reason whatsoever for paying this amount after it was discovered that it was not required for the particular purpose to which it was to be applied. The payment was neither for a necessary purpose nor for the benefit of the family.

As regards the item of Rs. 500, there is neither any evidence that there was legal necessity for it nor that it was taken for the benefit of the family.

No case of reasonable enquiry by the mortgagee was pleaded and we do not think that if any reasonable enquiry had been made the mortgagee would have been satisfied that the loan was necessary or for the benefit of the family.

It is urged that, at any rate, equity requires that a decree should have been passed against the whole of the two fields purchased with the mortgagee's money. At the most, a decree could be passed against 5,500/6,500ths, that is 11/13ths, of those fields for the fields were purchased for Rs. 6,500 and only Rs. 5,500 were borrowed from the plaintiff for payment to the vendor. But in view of the fact that land of the value of Rs. 7,000 belonging to the family has been sold and the purchase-money paid to the mortgagee in part satisfaction of the mortgage-money, we do not think that any equity arises in favour of the plaintiff on the ground that the family will receive at the plaintiff's expense benefit for which it has not paid.

It is next contended that the sons and grandsons not born at the date of the mortgage took by their birth an interest in the family property subject to the mortgagee's rights in respect of the fathers' shares as they existed at the date of the mortgage and that they were not entitled to object to the alienation of such shares. This contention must be upheld: Hazari Mal v. Abaninath Adhuriya (1), Tulshi Ram v. Babu Lal (2), Abdul Rahman v. Muhammad Yar (3) and Jowala Prasad v. Protap Udai Nath Sahi Deo (4) which are against this contention are from provinces where alienation of the joint family property by the father without the consent of the coparceners or without legal necessity is not valid even to the extent of the father's share and cannot properly be applied in the present case where the alienation is good to the extent of the father's share. Sobharam Teli v. Makdu (5) was a case of a gift which was wholly invalid. We think the true principle is laid down in Chinnu Pillai v. Kalimuthu Chetti (6). The share of the father to which the mortgagee is entitled is the share to which the father would have been entitled if a partition had been made at the date of the mortgage. The shares of the fathers in this case at the date of the mortgage were Vithusa 1/16th, Puransa and Nagosa 1/8th each and Govindsa $\frac{1}{2}$ that is 9/16ths.

No question of contribution arises nor, in view of the above findings, any question under the last paragraph of section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act

The decree of the lower Court is defective in several respects. A fresh decree will now be drawn up in accordance with the above findings. The parties will be further heard as to the form and terms of the decree.

Rs. 737 8-0 by the plaintiffs to the defendant within three months from the date of the decree. The decree further provided for the contingency of default of payment within the period prescribed by it. It said that in default the suit was to stand dismissed. The plaintiffs did not comply with the condition imposed by the decree. More than a fortnight after the prescribed period had expired, they asked that the money which they then wanted to pay in satisfaction of the condition of the decree might be accepted. This application was treated and rightly as one asking for extension of time within the provisions of section 148 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Following a series of decisions of this Court, the learned Munsif has refused to extend time on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to alter the terms of the decree, and that section 148 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not confer such a jurisdiction on him. This application is against the order just now mentioned.

At the time of the admission of this application, the learned Judicial Commissioner referred to a decision of a predecessor of his in the case of Bhola v. Sheo Darshan Singh (1) supporting the view that no application under section 115 lay in a case like this for the reason that an appeal lay. I am of opinion that the decision is not applicable to this case. The original decree passed by the Court of first instance was complete in its terms and the suit of the plaintiffs was to stand dismissed not because of any subsequent order or decree the Court might pass in the event of default in payment but it would be because of the terms of the decree itself. In the present case an application to extend time under section 148 of the Code of Civil Procedure was made. That application has been thrown out on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain it. A revision would, therefore, lie against such an order under section 115 of the Code because, clearly, no appeal could lie from that order.

I have, therefore, heard the application on its merits.

Two points were urged at the hearing of the application : 1. On the 24th March 1923 the plaintiffs and the defendant filed a joint application before the learned Munsif asking that the hearing of the application filed by the plaintiffs for extension of time might be adjourned to enable them to come to an amicable settlement. The application was granted and the case was adjourned. At the adjourned hearing, however, the defendant took up the objection that the Court had no power to grant an extension of time. If the application of the 24th March 1923 were filed within the period prescribed by the decree for the payment of the money it might have worked out as an estoppel against the defendant but it was filed long after the period had expired and in the end proved abortive altogether. On the strength of this application it was argued that the defendant, as well as the Court, by accepting the application had given their tacit consent to the extension of time.

That the defendant had such an intention may be conceded, but it is impossible to treat that intention as amounting to a valid consent, more so when the subsequent conduct of the defendant was clearly contradictory to his previous intention. The application of the 24th March 1923 and the circumstances subsequent to it did not give the Court any jurisdiction to extend time which it had not under the law.

The second question is, whether the learned Munsif was right in his opinion that he had no jurisdiction to act under section 148 of the Code of Civil Procedure and extend time for the compliance with the condition of the decree. I am of opinion that the learned Munsif was right. This Court has repeatedly held that Courts have no jurisdiction to extend time where the effect of such an extension would be to alter the terms of a decree which has become final between the parties. The learned Munsif has referred to some of the cases decided by this Court on this point. Other cases will be found collected in the case of Jangu Singh v. Lachmi Narain (2). This view of the provisions of section 148 of the Code coincides with the view taken of those provisions by the High Court of Allahabad, for instance, see the case, of Suranjan

Second appeal against the decree of the Second Additional District Judge of Gorakhpur, dated the 14th February, 1922.

Mr. S. P. Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question for determination in this appeal is, whether a landlord can sue the usufructuary mortgagee of an occupancy tenancy for rent.

The respondent brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen for recovery of rent of an occupancy holding from two sets of defendants. The appellant who was the mortgagee with possession constituted the second set. He pleaded that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between him and the plaintiff and he could not be held liable for the rent. The suit failed as against the appellant in the Court of first instance, but the learned Additional Judge of Gorakhpur decreed the suit against the appellant as well.

For the respondent Mr. Haribans Sahai argued that the mortgagee had been paying rent and thereby converted himself into a tenant. But there was no such allegation of the plaintiff in the Court below and there was no such finding. No doubt, the principal tenants said that the mortgagee had been paying rent and they should be held liable. But, as I have said, there was no issue on the point and there was no decision.

The mortgage in question was created before the present Tenancy Act came into force. According to the rulings of this Court, an occupancy tenant could, in spite of the provisions of section 9 of Act XII of 1881, sub-let his right to occupy the lands and it naturally followed from this that, he could transfer his right of possession to a mortgagee. It was in this view alone that this Court upheld, as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, an usufructuary mortgage by an occupancy tenant. The leading case is that of Khiali Ram v. Nathu Lal (1). At page 231 of the same volume * will be found another Full Bench case Mahesh Singh v. Ganesh Dube, (2) in which it was considered whether an occupancy tenant could sub-let his holding in perpetuity. The Court remarked that the term of the sub-tenancy was really immaterial and said that such sub-letting could not make the sub-lessee a tenant of the landlord. If any authority were needed for a clear proposition like this, this Full Bench case of Mahesh Singh v. Ganesh Dube provides one. There is no contract between the mortgagee of an occupancy tenancy and the landlord and because the tenant is prohibited by law from making a valid transfer, he, by the very fact of the transfer, cannot convert the transferee into a tenant in his own place. In the case of Saulagar Singh v. Ganga Singh (3) it was distinctly held by a Bench of two Judges of this Court that, even in the case of a fixed rate tenancy, the mortgagee did not become a tenant of the landlord even if he paid the rent with his own hand. It was observed that the

Mr. J. K. R. Cama, K. B., and Mr. V. R. Pandit, R. B., for the Appellant.

Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment governs the disposal of Second Appeal No. 257-B of 1922 also.

The first objection to the lower Appellate Court's decree is that joint possession not having been claimed in the plaint should not have been allowed. But though it was not claimed in the plaint an alternative claim for it was made in the pleadings and it is made the subject of the 4th issue. It is not argued that the plaintiff should not have been allowed to make the alternative claim. It is next urged that the plaintiff, having already obtained joint possession under the decree in his favour, he should not be allowed to maintain a suit for it and that his remedy lies in a partition. But there is no reason why, if the joint possession obtained under the decree is disturbed, the plaintiff should not be able to sue for its restoration.

The lower Appellate Court has decreed joint possession relying on Hayat Khan v. Button Khan (1). It is urged that joint possession should not have been decreed as the defendants (here appellants) have shown special circumstances for not allowing it. Reliance is placed on Padmasingh v. Sahadeo Sao (2), where a claim for joint possession was disallowed. The circumstances urged are, first, that the Settlement pardha is in favour of the defendants. But this fact cannot be a circumstance which entitles the defendant, to resist the plaintiffs' claim for joint possession if it is otherwise proved. The next circumstance is that the defendants have been in exclusive possession for six years before suit. But it has been found, and the finding is not challenged by the appellants, that the plaintiff was already in joint possession from 1899 till 1912—13 of the sir land in the village to the extent of 14a. 3p. with the defendants who owned the remaining 1a. 9p. share. The plaintiffs' title to joint possession must be taken to have been denied and he must be taken to have been excluded from joint possession after 1912—13 and the fact that he delayed bringing a suit till 1920 is not the kind of special circumstance which disentitles the plaintiff from being again placed in joint possession. In Padmasingh v. Sahadeo Sao (2), the plaintiffs who were purchasers from co-sharers were never in possession themselves and their vendors had also been excluded from possession for very many years. The defendants were in fact in undisturbed possession for at least 20 years. The third circumstance relied on is that the plaintiff is admittedly now in exclusive possession of certain khudkashi land. This ground has considerable force. The defendants, however, state that what they urged in the lower Courts was not an arrangement amounting to a partition but an arrangement for exclusive physical possession and enjoyment such as is referred to in Jaggannath v. Ramprasad (3). In the plaint, however, the plaintiff claimed sole ownership of the fields in suit by virtue of the decree in his favour. But in his oral pleading dated the 21st August 1920 he stated that originally he had obtained joint possession of all the sir plots to the extent of 14 a. 3 p. and that, subsequently, about the year 1903-04, an arrangement was entered into according to which he was given the plots in suit and other plots for his share of 14 a. 3 p. and that he continued in possession of them under the arrangement. It is complained that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in assuming that the plaintiff pleaded an arrangement amounting to a partition; but I think the statement that the plaintiff was given the plots in suit and other plots for his share of 14 a. 3 p. sir justifies the conclusion that in the lower Appellate Court the plaintiff meant to plead and pleaded an arrangement amounting to a partition as appears from paragraphs 5 and 6 of that Court's judgment. Such an arrangement not being proved, the plaintiff at the most is entitled to joint possession of the fields in dispute. But the circumstance that he is himself in exclusive possession of certain home farm land which is now recorded as his sir at the Settlement seems to be a good ground for not awarding joint possession of the land in dispute. The plaintiff prays, and the prayer is not opposed, that if the arrangement is not proved and it is considered that he is not entitled to joint possession at least a decree declaring his right to joint possession of the fields in dispute should be passed. I think this is a reasonable course to follow in the circumstances of the case. I, therefore, modify the decree of the lower Appellate Court and direct that a decree be passed in favour of the plaintiff declaring that he is entitled to joint possession of the fields in dispute to the extent of his share of 14 a. 3 p. in the village. Each party will pay its own costs in all Courts. The cross-objection was not argued and is dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application of a somewhat unusual character. It is perhaps advisable that we should explain precisely the circumstances under which it comes to be presented. The suit out of which it arose was one filed in the Court of an Assistant Collector. The plaintiff in that suit, alleging himself to be the proprietor of certain land in the possession of the defendant as a rent-free grantee, claimed to resume the said grant under the provisions of section 154 of the Local Tenancy Act (II of 1901). The trial Court fixed a large number of issues and decided all of them. In substance, it came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief claimed and it decreed that relief accordingly. There was an appeal by the defendant to the Court of the District Judge and it is not denied that, under the circumstances, an appeal lay to that Court. The District Judge came to the conclusion that the land in possession of the defendant was not liable to resumption under section 154 aforesaid. By reason of the provisions of section 153 of the same Act the Court, hearing a suit for the resumption of a rent-free grant and finding the grant not liable to resumption on grounds other than those specified in section 151 of the Act, is bound to proceed to determine whether that land is liable to assessment of rent, or whether the holder thereof is liable to pay the revenue assessed thereon. The District Judge proceeded to deal with this matter himself. He found on the evidence that this land had been held rent-free for fifty years and by two successors to the original grantee, and on this finding held that the defendant must be deemed to hold the land in proprietary right. This made it necessary that the revenue payable by the defendant should be determined. There were no materials on the record upon which this could be done. The District Judge, therefore, passed an order in which he stated that the appeal was allowed with costs, but that the record must go back to the Assistant Collector in order that the revenue payable by the defendant might be determined. The order is not happily worded. It does not embody the important finding that the defendant is declared to be the proprietor of the land. Moreover, it does not refer to any provision of the law on the strength of which the case is remanded to the Court of first instance for further proceedings. The defendant assumed that the order of the Appellate Court at that stage must be treated as an order of remand under O. XLI, r. 23 of the Code of Civil Procedure and he was advised that no appeal from such an order would lie to this Court. There is a decision to that effect in the case of Anandgir v. Srinivas (1). When the Assistant Collector had carried out the direction given him, the plaintiff presented to the Court of the District Judge an appeal against the final decree in the suit. The District Judge held that no appeal lay to him and passed an order returning the appeal for presentation to the proper Court, meaning thereby no doubt the Court of the Commissioner of the Division. Against this order no appeal lay and even an application in revision would not have been entertained by this Court in the existing state of the authorities. We feel bound to remark that it is a matter deserving the attention of the Legislature whether some definite procedure ought not to be provided, by which the question as to whether an appeal in a particular instance lies to the District Judge or to the Revenue Courts, might be brought before this Court for adjudication. The application before us now, however, has nothing to do with this order of the District Judge refusing to entertain the plaintiff's appeal against the final decree of the Assistant Collector. Our jurisdiction is being invoked under section 107 of the Government of India Act in respect of the order by which the learned District Judge, after having adjudicated the defendant in the suit to be the proprietor of the land in question, remanded the case to the Court of first instance to have the amount of the revenue payable by him determined. In argument before us this order has been treated as an order of remand under O. XLI, r. 23 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Looking at the order in this way, it has been contended that it is not a proper order, because the trial Court had disposed of every single issue fixed in the suit and the necessity for a further proceeding in that Court had arisen under the provisions of the Tenancy Act by reason of the District Judge's finding that the defendant was entitled to be declared the proprietor of the land in suit. It has further been suggested that, under the circumstances, the District Judge would have been better advised to remit an issue to the trial Court under O. XLI, r. 25 of the Civil Procedure Code, calling for a finding as to the amount of the revenue payable. Certainly, if this had been done, the District Judge would then have been in a position to pass a decree in appeal determining every question which had arisen on the pleadings, or which required to be determined under the provisions of the law, and against such decree a second appeal would have lain to this Court. Looking into this matter in the course of the arguments addressed to us to-day, we find some reason to doubt whether the District Judge's order is really one under the provisions of O. XLI r. 23 of the Civil Procedure Code. If it is not, it would have to be described as a decree in the suit, and in that case it would seem that an appeal might have been presented to this Court. We appreciate the difficulty in which the plaintiff was placed. The ruling of this Court to which we have already referred was passed in a suit very similar to the one now before us and only distinguishable from it by reason of the fact that it was a suit instituted by the holder of the rent-free grant for a declaration that he had become by operation of law proprietor of the same. The difference between the two cases, therefore, is that, in the case referred to as a ruling, the whole of the proceedings had throughout been under section 158 of the Tenancy Act whereas we are dealing here with a proceeding initiated under section 154 of the same Act and it only required to be supplemented by a further proceeding under section 158 because of the decision arrived at by the Appellate Court and the provisions of section 153 of the Act. We are not in a position, as the matter now stands before us, to pronounce a final opinion as to whether a distinction could be drawn in principle between the present case and that of Anandgir v. Srinivas (1) already referred to; still less can we undertake to reconsider that case or to pronounce an opinion as to whether it was rightly decided. Obviously, if upon a correct view of the law the order drawn up by the Court of the District Judge on the judgment delivered by him when he heard and determined the appeal filed by the defendant did amount to a decree, then there is no foundation for the application now before us. It would be, on the face of it, absurd for this Court to issue a direction to the District Judge to draw up a decree on the basis of a certain judgment, if, as a matter of fact and of law, such a decree had already been prepared. We must, therefore, deal with the application before us on the assumption that the order which it is desired to call in question is not a decree, but is an order of remand, whether such remand be assumed to be based upon the provisions of rule, 23 Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, or on some inherent power of remand exercisable by the Appellate Court independently of that rule. Looking at the matter from this point of view, it seems to us that we are really being asked to hold that the District Judge made an improper exercise of his discretion in passing this order of remand, instead of either remitting an issue under Order XXI, rule 25 of the Civil Procedure Code, or drawing up his decision on the appeal in such a form as to put it beyond doubt that the said decision was a decree and not an order of remand. Now, in the case of Muhammad Sa'aiman Khan v. Fatima (2), it was held, as long ago as the year 1886, that the power of superintendence vested in this Court, which is now embodied in section 107 of the Government of India Act, was not intended to authorise this Court, in the exercise of the authority so given, to interfere with and set right the orders of a Subordinate Court on the ground that such order has proceeded on an error of law or an error of fact. We approve of the principle laid down in this decision and we propose to follow it. It is, in our opinion, fatal to this present application. We dismiss it accordingly with costs.

The interest of a mortgage in the property mortgaged is immovable property for the purposes of Article 141 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. The provisions of section 66 of the Civil Procedure Code were designed to create some check on the practice of making what are called benami purchases at execution sales for the benefit of judgment-debtors, and in no way affect the title of persons otherwise beneficially interested in the purchases. Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge of Khuri, dated the 27th May 1922.

Messrs. Ishri Pershad and Salig Ram, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Basudeo Lal and Sita Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—After the confiscation of Oudh following the Mutiny of 1857, the Taluq of Mahewa situate in the District of Kheri was granted by the British Government to Thakur Balbhaddar Singh under the Sanad of the 19th October 1859, and was in his possession till his death which occurred on the 12th December 1898. His brother, Sheo Singh, then obtained possession of the estate and mutation of names was effected in his favour in the Revenue Records. Thereupon Balbhaddar Singh's widow, Rani Raghubans Kuar, instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur for recovery of the possession of the taluga and some other properties against Sheo Singh. Rani Raghubans Kuar succeeded in both the Courts in India. Sheo Singh preferred an appeal against the decree of this Court to His Majesty's Privy Council. His appeal was allowed in 1905. The judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council is reported in Sheo Singh v. Raghubans Kunwar (1), Sheo Singh died during the pendency of the appeal before the Privy Council. His eldest son, Rajindra Bahadur Singh, was substituted as the appellant in place of his deceased father. The Privy Council decree granted a declaration "that the taluga Mahewa, as constituted at the date of the Sanad, with accretions (if any) or properties (if any) appurtenant to the taluga, has passed to the appellant, and that, as to any other property of the deceased, the decrees of the Courts below are not affected." To determine what property fell under one category and what under the other the case was remitted for inquiry to the Courts in India. The inquiry was accordingly made and was finally disposed of by their Lordships of the Privy Council by their judgment of the 25th February 1918 in Rajindra Bahadur Singh v. Raghubans Kunwar (2). The properties now in suit were not the subject-matter of the inquiry then conducted.

It appears that Thakur Balbhaddar Singh held a large number of mortgagees of immovable property. Some of these mortgages were put in suit by Rani Raghubans Kuar and decrees were obtained thereon. Rani Raghubans Kuar died on the 23rd July 1910. On her death the reversionary heirs of Thakur Balbhaddar Singh, in respect of the non-talugdari property, were the sons of Sheo Singh, namely, Rajindra Bahadur Singh, Sheo Indir Bahadur Singh, Mahendra Bahadur Singh and Narindra Bahadur Singh. Rajindra Bahadur Singh put other mortgages held by Thakur Balbhaddar Singh in suit, obtained decrees thereon and proceeded to execute those decrees as well as the decrees which Rani Raghubans Kuar had obtained in her lifetime, reference to which has already been made. In execution of both classes of the decrees the mortgaged properties were put to sale and purchased by Rajindra Bahadur Singh. Rajindra Bahadur Singh died in October 1912. The defendant-appellant, Jai Indra Bahadur Singh, succeeded to the estate under the Will of Rajindra Bahadur Singh, dated the 14th

JAI INDER BAHADAR SINGH v. SHEO INDER BAHADAR SINGH

June 1907. He was a minor at the date of the succession and, consequently, his estate came under the superintendence of the Court of Wards. Sheo Indir Bahadur Singh is the plaintiff in the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, and is the father of the defendant-appellant. The plaintiff claims a one-fourth share in the properties purchased in execution of the mortgage-decrees on the basis of his title to that share in the non-talugdari property of Thakur Balbhaddar Singh which fell into the possession of himself and his other three brothers on the death of Rani Raghubans Kuar. This claim was resisted by the defendant-appellant. The grounds of defence will appear from the issues framed by the Court below. They were, —

1. Is the plaintiff entitled to the share claimed in the property in suit as reversioner to Thakur Balbhaddar Singh under the Hindu Law?

2. Is the suit or any part of it barred by limitation? If so, what part?

3. If the claim for plaintiff's share in any property is decreed, is the defendant entitled to any amount by way of contribution to the costs of the suits by which the properties were acquired? If so, to what amount?

4. To what amount of mesne profits, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

5. Is the suit barred by O. II, r. 2, Schedule I, of the Civil Procedure Code?

All these issues were decided by the Court below in favour of the plaintiff-respondent and inquiry into the amount of mesne profits was directed to be made later under O. XXV, r. 12 of the Code. A decree was accordingly made by that Court in favour of the plaintiff except with reference to the properties mentioned in paragraphs 14 and 15 of the plaint and which are items 4 and 5 in the list of properties attached to the plaint. In respect of these two items the suit has been dismissed for the reason that the plaintiff gave up his claim with regard to them. There is no cross-appeal relating to those items before us.

The subject-matter of issue No. 5 quoted above was not argued before us by the learned pleader for the appellant. The decision of the Court below on issues 1, 2 and 3 was challenged. It was argued, in the first instance, that the plaintiff was not entitled to any share in the property though he would be entitled to a share in the money for which they were purchased if that claim were not barred by limitation. The learned Subordinate Judge opens in his judgment the discussion of issue No. 1 with the following remarks:—"The only question raised under this issue is whether the property in suit is to be considered as accretion to the taluga property and is, therefore, to be governed by the terms of the Sanad or whether it is to be treated as property governed by the Hindu Law of inheritance. Parties are agreed that the plaintiff has no title in the former case and that he has a title in the latter case." He decided, on the authority of the decision in the case Rajendra Bahadur Singh v. Raghubans Kunwar (3), that the properties in suit cannot be treated as accretion to the Sanad property. To the authority relied upon by the learned Subordinate Judge may be added the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Rajendra Bahadur Singh v. Raghubans Kunwar (3), already referred to. In this decision their Lordships approved of the opinion expressed by Mr. (afterwards Sir Edward) Chamier in the case reported in 11 Oudh Cases 256 (3). In the appeal before us, the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point was not challenged. It follows that the title to the properties in suit is regulated by the Hindu Law of inheritance, and it would seem that, in virtue of the agreement of the parties referred to by the learned Subordinate Judge in the quotation given above, nothing remains to be said against the title of the plaintiff-respondent to the one-fourth share in those properties. The argument of the learned pleader for the appellant is a clear attempt to go behind the said agreement. On the merits of the argument, we have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the plaintiff is entitled to a one-fourth share in the properties in suit. The mortgages, which eventually resulted in the acquisition of these properties were admittedly owned by Thakur Balbhaddar Singh and on his death they devolved by right of inheritance under the Hindu Law on his widow, Rani Raghubans Kuar. The fact that Rani Raghubans Kuar and the defendant's

TH. JAI INDER BAHADAR SINGH v. TH. SHEO INDER BAHADAR SINGH

father, Rajendra Bahadur Singh, had obtained decrees on those mortgages and the latter had purchased the mortgaged properties at auction-sales in execution of those decrees does not affect the plaintiff's title which arose on the death of Rani Raghubans Kuar. The title to those properties must depend on the nature of the title which the plaintiff had in the mortgages themselves. That he acquired a title in those mortgages on the death of Rani Raghubans Kuar as one of the reversioners of the estate of Thakur Balbhadar Singh cannot be doubted.

The learned pleader for the appellant relied on two decisions of the Allahabad High Court in the cases of Amina Bibi v. Najmun-Nissa Bibi (4) and Abdul Ghaffar v. Nur Jahan Begam (5). They were both cases of simple money decrees in execution of which properties of the judgment-debtors were attached, put up to sale, and purchased. We do not think that those decisions can be any guide in the determination of the question before us. The whole argument of the learned pleader for the appellant is answered by two recent decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council, the second of which has a marked analogy with the case before us. The first one is the case of Bandhu Ram v. Chintamon Singh (6). In that case a simple money bond stood in the name of Raj Dhari, a member of a joint family. Raj Dhari was one of the three sons of Chandan Singh. After the date of the bond, partition took place at which the three sons of Chandan Singh took a one-third share each but remained joint. Later, there was a separation amongst the sons of Chandan Singh. After this separation had taken place, Raj Dhari bought the property then in suit in execution of a decree on the bond which stood in his name. Subsequently, Raj Dhari sold the property to the defendant, who was the appellant before their Lordships of the Privy Council. Raj Dhari's brother then instituted the suit, out of which the appeal arose, for recovery of one-third of the property bought by Raj Dhari. Their Lordships, having held that the consideration for the bond which eventually resulted in the decree in execution of which Raj Dhari had purchased the property in suit was joint family property, decreed the suit for possession. The second case is that of Ganga Sahai v. Kesri (7). In that case the claim was for a share in property purchased under a sale held under a mortgage-decree on the ground that one-third of the amount advanced on the mortgage transaction belonged to the claimant's ancestor, Bahadur Singh. In delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, Mr. Ameer Ali said: "Their Lordships agree with the Courts in India that the heirs and representatives of Bahadur Singh are entitled to recover from Ganga Sahai a one-third share of the properties purchased by him in execution of the joint mortgage decree." It need hardly be said that the fact of there having been a joint decree on the mortgage in that case makes no difference in principle. The present case is one where the mortgages originally stood in the name of a person whose heirs the present parties are. We, therefore, reject the argument.

It was next urged that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in applying Article 141 of the first Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act to the plaintiff's suit and that the Article applicable is 62 of the same Schedule. This argument rested on the ground that the plaintiff was not entitled to any share in the properties in suit and, consequently, Article 141, which relates to the recovery of immoveable property, was inapplicable. But we have already held that the plaintiff is entitled to a one-fourth share in the immoveable properties in suit. To this may be added that the interest of a mortgagee in the property mortgaged is immoveable property. So the plaintiff had all along a title in immoveable property. This title did not and could not fall into possession earlier than the death of Rani Raghubans Kuar. We are, therefore, of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in applying Article 141 to this suit.

On the question of title, it was lastly contended by the learned pleader for the appellant that he was protected by the provisions of section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure, his predecessor having acquired the properties, in which the plaintiff now claims a share, at auction-sales and having obtained certificates in respect of those sales from the Court. This contention may well be answered in the language of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ganga Sahai v. Kesri (7) already referred to: "In their Lordships' opinion the provisions of that section have no application to the present case. They were designed to create some check on the practice of making what are called benami purchases at execution sales for the benefit of judgment-debtors, and in no way affect the title of persons otherwise beneficially interested in the purchases. An example of this will be found in the case of Bolih Singh Doodhoria v. Gurnesh Chunder Sen (8), decided by this Board in 1873." We accordingly overrule this contention. On the question of title, therefore, the conclusion at which we arrive is that the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge awarding possession to the plaintiff-respondent over a one-fourth share in the properties in suit except the items Nos. 4 and 5 mentioned in the list attached to the plaint is correct.

The last point urged in appeal related to issue No. 3. We have already mentioned that some of the decrees were obtained by the Rani Raghubans Kuar. They are mentioned in paragraphs 21 and 22 of the plaint. In respect of the costs of these decrees the defendant claimed a contribution from the plaintiff to the extent of Rs. 5,179-2-0. The learned Subordinate Judge rejected this claim on the ground stated by him in the last paragraph of his judgment, printed at page 22 of part I of the Paper Book. This decision is not challenged before us though it was the subject-matter of ground No. 6 in the Memorandum of Appeal.

Now remains the defendant's claim in respect of contribution to the costs of the suits brought by Rajindra Bahadur Singh. This claim was also rejected by the learned Subordinate Judge but it has been urged in grounds Nos. 9 and 10 of the Memorandum of Appeal. We think that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be maintained in this respect. The grounds on which he has acted seem to be two: 1. That the defendant's as well as the plaintiff's estate in the non-talugdari property was under the administration of a Receiver from the time of Rani Raghubans Kuar's death up to some date in 1920 and the Court of Wards entered into possession of the defendant's estate soon after the death of Rajindra Bahadur Singh. The Manager of the Court of Wards was also the Receiver of the property and the administration of both classes of the properties was carried on by the same staff and establishment. The learned Subordinate Judge does not express himself in that manner but what he means is, that the plaintiff's share in the reversionary estate being in the same hands as that of the defendant's estate, it is difficult to reach the conclusion that the expenditure in the suits on the mortgages were incurred only out of the defendant's money. The second ground is that Rajindra Bahadur Singh had been allowed costs of the suits which he had brought against the judgment-debtors and in cases where he has recovered such costs either out of Court or by execution through Court there is no reason to compel the plaintiff to make any contribution to the costs of such cases.

As to the first ground, our opinion is that the facts on which it rests do not lead to the conclusion at which the learned Subordinate Judge has arrived. It is admitted that Rajindra Bahadur Singh instituted the suits on the mortgages, obtained decrees in those suits, put them into execution and the properties were finally sold thereunder and purchased by him: ex facie he must be presumed to have incurred all the necessary expenditure relating to those proceedings and the defendant as his heir, would be entitled to call upon the plaintiff to make a contribution in respect of that expenditure in proportion to his share in the properties. It would, of course, be open to the plaintiff to show that he or his estate has already made the contribution in full or in part but so long as that is not proved the defendant is certainly entitled to an order for contribution.

As regards the second ground, it may be a reasonable one for the reduction of the claim for contribution but it is certainly not a ground for the total rejection of it. If Rajindra Bahadur Singh has recovered any costs of the suits which he had brought, from the judgment-debtors of those suits either out of Court or by execution through Court, the defendant's claim for contribution will be reduced by the amount or amounts so recovered and this, on the face of it, is a matter calling for an inquiry.

On these grounds we affirm the decree of the Court below for possession of a one-fourth share in the properties mentioned above in favour of the plaintiff. We further direct that an inquiry be made into the claim of contribution made by the defendant on the lines indicated above. As the parties had had an opportunity to produce evidence in this behalf no fresh evidence will be admitted. This inquiry may be conducted on the materials on the record along with the inquiry into the amount of mesne profits to which the plaintiff is clearly entitled and the result of both the inquiries will be embodied in a final decree to be hereafter prepared by the Court below. The amount of mesne profits and the amount of contribution will be set off against each other and the excess, if any, will finally be ordered to be paid by the party who may be found to be liable for it. The record of the case will be sent down to the Court below for this purpose. The respondent will have his costs of the appeal in this Court and the appellant will bear his own costs. The order of the Court below as to the costs in that Court will stand.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 333-B OF 1922.

October 26, 1923.

Present :—Mr. Kinkhede, A. J. C.TULSIRAM—APPELLANTversusTUKARAM AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Evidence Act (I of 1872) s. 116—Estoppel—Mortgagor, whether can deny title to property mortgaged—Mortgagee aware of defect in mortgagor's title—Fraud—Burden of proof—Findings based on conjectures—Facts twisted to suit law—Registration Act (XIV of 1903), s. 28—Title of mortgagor in dispute—Sub-Registrar, whether has jurisdiction to go into question of title—Refusal to register because title defective—Knowledge of parties that title is disputed, whether affects legality of deed—Presumption as to knowledge of law.

In a mortgage-suit, the mortgagor is estopped from pleading that he had no title to the property mortgaged at the date of the mortgage [p. 399, col. 1.]

The plea of estoppel is not, however, available to the mortgagee if he is proved to have been aware of the actual state of facts as regards the mortgagor's title to the property. [p. 399, col. 1.]

The law presumes good faith in every transaction, and fraud and collusion are exceptions. The burden, therefore, of proving invalidating circumstances such as these lies on the party who affirms them. [p. 400, col. 1.]

Conjectures do not supply the place of evidence and, in the absence of evidence, a Court cannot base its decision on mere conjectures. [p. 400, col. 1.]

Every man must be presumed to have known the law and to have acted for his benefit.

The province of a Judge is first to find facts and then to apply the law to those facts and not to twist the facts to suit the law. [p. 400, col. 2.]

The requirements of section 28 of the Registration Act are all that have to be complied with; if any portion of the property to which the document relates is situate within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar where the deed is registered, that being sufficient to give him jurisdiction, it is not the province of the Sub-Registrar to enquire or investigate into the title of the mortgagor or vendor or others presenting the documents to registration and to refuse admitting them to registration on the ground of want of title of the executants. [p. 401, col. 1.]

The knowledge of the parties to a document that the title of the executant is in dispute, does not affect the validity of the document and the Sub-Registrar has no jurisdiction to refuse registration on that ground. [p. 401, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Amraoti, dated 25th March 1922 in, Civil Appeal No. 168 of 1921.

Mr. G. R. Pradhan, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. R. Pandit, B. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff-appellant's suit based upon a mortgage dated 19th May 1909 has been dismissed on the ground that the deed was not duly registered. This question of registration depended upon the decision of two questions, (1) whether at the date of the mortgage the mortgagor was the owner of 1 acre of land of Mouza Wadali which, along with other fields, was given as security, and (2) whether the mortgagee was then aware of the want of mortgagor's title. There is no dispute as to the existence of that item of property. It is situate at Mouza Wadali in Akot Taluq while the bulk of the other property comprised in the security is situate in

TULSIRAM v. TUKARAM

Daryapur Taluq. The document was written, signed, attested and registered at Akot on 19th May 1909. The original mortgagor as also the original mortgagee are both dead. The present suit had been instituted by the original mortgagee's son against the mortgagor's husband's brother who inherited the mortgaged property and against transferees from the mortgagor's husband. The following preliminary issues will give an idea of the pleadings urged by the defendants :—

"1. Whether the mortgagor had no title to the field Survey No. 21, 1 acre.

"2. Whether it was included in the mortgage to practise fraud upon registration.

"3. Whether the mortgagee was aware of the fraud if any."

The findings of the first Court may be summed up as under,—

- (1) that Gopi, the mortgagor, had no title to the said 1 acre of land of Survey No. 21 of Wadali on the date of the mortgage in suit ;
- (2) that Gopi did not really intend to mortgage that 1 acre as he had no title to it, and that the said 1 acre was included in the mortgage merely with a view to have the deed registered at Akot ;
- (3) that there is no direct evidence to prove that the mortgagee was a party to the fraud, but that there were facts from which inference of fraud could reasonably be drawn, and that the inclusion of the item of property situate at Wadali was intended to be fictitious and that the mortgagee was aware of the intended fraud at the date of the mortgage.

The result was that the plaintiff's suit was dismissed with costs. The appeal to the District Judge was disposed of in a meagre judgment. The findings of the lower Appellate Court are as under,—

(1) that the whole field Survey No. 21 had been transferred and that nothing remained in possession of Mt. Gopi at the time of the mortgage in suit ;

(2) that there is no direct evidence that the mortgagee was aware of the fraud, but the device seemed to be such an obvious one that the Court thought itself bound to hold that the mortgagee knew of it. In other words, that both the mortgagor and mortgagee were aware of the fact that Gopi was not in possession of any part of Survey No. 21 of Wadali at the date of the execution of the mortgage in suit.

Plaintiff has come up in second appeal. I am clearly of opinion that, so far as the finding on the question of mortgagor Gopi's title to the 1 acre of Survey No. 21 of Mouza Wadali is concerned, it is based on evidence both oral and documentary, and I am precluded from interfering with it in second appeal. But the question still remains whether, in spite of this, she believed that she had a claim to that land and, therefore, she and her husband dealt with that property as if it was her or his property, and they had subsisting interest therein.

As regards the finding about the mortgagor and mortgagee having intended to practise fraud on the Sub-Registrar, I must at once say that I am not prepared to accept it. There is, as admitted by the Courts below, absolutely no evidence. Moreover, the mortgagor, the mortgagee and the writer of the mortgage-deed in suit are all dead ; there is nothing in the present state of the record to show that the attesting and identifying witnesses who might presumably have thrown some light are still in existence or have not become incapable of giving evidence.

In a mortgage-suit the mortgagor is not allowed to deny his own title to the property. He is estopped from pleading that he had no title to the property at the date of the mortgage. This estoppel is based upon the principle that the mortgagee having, on the faith of the representation of the mortgagor that he had a good transferable interest in the property he purported to mortgage, advanced money on the security of the property he could not be prejudiced by any subsequent plea of want of title by the mortgagor. But if the mortgagee is proved to be well aware of the actual state of facts as regards the mortgagor's title to the property, then the plea of estoppel is not available to him. This itself shows that, whoever wants to get out of the estoppel must establish knowledge on the part of the mortgagee of the defect in the mortgagor's title, otherwise the estoppel will preclude proof of

want of title, in a mortgage-suit. The law presumes good faith in every transaction and fraud and collusion are exceptions. The burden, therefore, of proving invalidating circumstances such as these lies on the party who affirms them. The burden of proof, therefore, lay on the defendants to prove that the mortgagor Gopi had communicated her intention to the mortgagee to deceive the Sub-Registrar into admitting the document to registration by mentioning in it an item of property not belonging to her but situate within his jurisdiction, and further that both collusively induced the Sub-Registrar to admit the document to registration. If evidence is wanting to prove this fact I fail to see how a Court of Justice can base its decision on mere conjectures. Conjectures do not supply the place of evidence. There may be ground for suspicion and Gopi's conduct in the past may engender doubt, but the Court's decision must rest, not upon suspicion, but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony. Mina Kumari Debi v. Bijoy Singh Dudhisi (1). The Court will not be justified in drawing inferences adverse to the mortgagee and impute to him knowledge of facts which will invalidate his document unless the party relying on such facts has laid any foundation for their application. The law's presumptions cannot be lost sight of. Every man must be presumed to have known the law and to have acted for his benefit. A mortgagee will not deliberately or knowingly take an invalid security or be a party to a collusive or fraudulent arrangement which might recoil on himself. The ordinary course of human conduct is entirely against imputation of such an intention. The mere circumstance that the item of 1 acre was worth Rs 25 and, therefore, did not in itself afford ample security to the mortgagee ought not to make any difference in principle. Merely because the mortgagor may have, with a view to deceive a Sub-Registrar, adopted a certain device in the year 1900 in connection with certain transactions with certain persons, there is no presumption that she must have necessarily acted in the same manner in connection with another transaction of a different nature with a different individual eight years thereafter. It does not also follow that the other party to the transaction also shared her intention to deceive the Sub-Registrar and thus agreed to lose the benefit of his own valuable security for the purpose of merely avoiding the inconvenience of a journey to a more distant place for registration. It is incompatible with ordinary common sense and course of human conduct to expect a man to risk his money like this. No one would try to deceive himself however willingly he may become an instrument for deceiving third persons. Under these circumstances, I will presume that the representations contained in the recitals in the mortgage-deed in suit were true, and were believed to be true by the mortgagee, and that he acted upon that belief.

The following extracts from the first Court's judgment will show how artificially the facts of the case have been twisted to suit the law laid down by the Privy Council in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhri v. Haridasi Debi (2):—

"The above findings show that the case clearly falls within the rule laid down by the Privy Council in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhri v. Haridasi Debi (2), and is on all fours with Urakudya v. Doma (3). For the plaintiff reliance is placed on Pahladi Lal v. Musammam Laraiti (4) and on Dirg Lal Singh v. Pahladi Lal (5), which do indeed show that in order to bring a case within the principle of the Privy Council ruling above referred to it must be shown that the mortgagee was a party to or was cognisant of the fraud. I have, however, found that this condition, too, has been fulfilled in the present case. I hold, therefore, that registration of the mortgage in suit is invalid and consequently the mortgage is invalid."

The province of a Judge is first to find facts and then to apply the law to those facts, and not to twist the facts to suit the law.

TULSIRAM v. TUKARAM

(6) As pointed out in Pahladi Lal v. Musammat Laraiti (4) and Musammat Ram Dai v. Ram Chandrabali Debi (6) the requirements of section 28 of the Registration Act are all that have to be complied with: if any portion of the property to which the document relates is situate within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar where the deed is registered, that is sufficient to give him jurisdiction. It is not the province of the Sub-Registrar to enquire or investigate into the title of the mortgagor or vendor or of others presenting documents to registration and to refuse admitting documents to registration on the ground of want of title of the executants. In the Privy Council case the item of property was non-existent within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar who registered the deed and that circumstance was treated as an index of the intention of both the parties to deceive the Sub-Registrar. Such is not, however, the case here. That case is easily distinguishable from the present one, firstly, because the 1 acre of Survey No. 21 of Wadali is situate within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar of Akot and, secondly, because the executant, although she may have no title or her title may have become extinct, still she presumably believing that she had a subsisting title to that item of property, actually represented to her transferee that she had it, and induced the latter to advance money on the faith of that title, and the latter in his turn, acting upon that belief permitted its inclusion in the property sought to be transferred by the instrument. If the recital in the deed had been false in the sense that it falsely described certain property as existent within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar whereas, as a matter of fact, it did not so exist or was not situate within his jurisdiction, that recital might have been a fraudulent recital as against the Sub-Registrar, because, but for that representation through the medium of that recital, the Sub-Registrar would not have been induced to accept the deed for registration. Can it be argued with any show of reason that, if a person who lays claim to a certain item of property which is in the possession of trespassers, but who having no funds to fight out his case, executes a sale-deed in favour of a financier and inserts in the deed to be registered words to the effect that his title to one of the items of the property is disputed and was denied by the trespassers in possession within 12 years and, therefore, he is in a hurry to file the suit within 12 years of such denial, the Sub-Registrar will be in a position to refuse to admit the deed for registration although the requirements of the provisions of section 28, Indian Registration Act, are duly complied with. I am clearly of opinion that the Sub-Registrar will have no jurisdiction to refuse registration on that ground. Both the parties enter into the transaction with full knowledge of the fact that the title of the vendor to one of several items of property situate within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar is likely to be the subject of a very serious litigation and may turn out to be of no avail to the vendee and, therefore, he may have to run a great risk in taking a conveyance regarding it, but that is no ground for holding that, because the parties are aware of such defect in the title of the executant, the validity or otherwise of the deed should in any way be affected thereby. The document must operate against such interest as the executant may then have in the property covered by the deed. I am fortified in this view by the rulings of the Allahabad, Calcutta, Madras and Patna High Courts reported in Pahladi Lal v. Musammat Laraiti (4), Durgpal Singh v. Pahladi Lal (5), Kunhi Sankaran Nambiar v. Narayanan Tirumunpu (7), Brojo Gopal Mukerjee v. Abhilash Chandra Biswas (8), and Musammat Ram Dai v. Ram Chandrabali Debi (6).

The case of Urkudya v. Doma (3) is easily distinguishable from the present case. In that case the mortgagee was examined as a witness and the Court gave a clear finding based on evidence that the mortgagee knew the mortgagor's intention to practise fraud. In view of the finding that, even though Gopi's intention in including the item of 1 acre of Wadali in the mortgage-deed may have been to practise deception still that intention was not shown to have been shared by the mortgagee, the case does not fall within the purview of the Privy Council ruling on which the case in Urkudya v. Doma (3) is based.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) s. 11, expl. IV—Suit to protect property from sale as wakf, dismissal of—Suit, subsequent, on basis of personal right—Res judicata.

It is not obligatory on a party seeking to protect certain property as wakf property from an impending sale, to assert in the same suit any personal right thereto, to which he may afterwards find himself entitled, in case the property is not found to be wakf property, and the omission to set up a personal right in the suit does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit in which such a right is set up. The identity of the causes of action for the two suits is immaterial. [p. 403, Col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Allahabad, dated the 28th January, 1920.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Appellant.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Kanhaiya Lal, J.:—The dispute in this appeal relates to a house which was mortgaged along with another house by Najabat

Khan in favour of the defendant-appellant and his brother Madho Prasad in 1892. On the death of Madho Prasad his interest devolved on the defendant-appellant. The defendant-appellant brought a suit to enforce his mortgage and got a decree for sale against the present defendants Nos. 2 to 6 as the heirs of Najabat Khan and in execution thereof he got the two houses aforesaid put up to sale.

A suit was then brought by the present plaintiffs-respondents other than Musammam Umda Bibi for a declaration that the house now in dispute was used as an Imambara and was wakf property; that the other house was his exclusive property by inheritance from Fateh Khan, and that neither of those houses was liable to sale in execution of the above decree. That suit was dismissed in regard to the house now in dispute on a finding that it was not proved to be wakf property, but decreed in regard to a share in the other house which was found to be the property of Fateh Khan, the common ancestor of the then plaintiffs and the mortgagor.

The present suit has been filed by the same plaintiffs and a lady named Musammam Umda Bibi for the protection of their interests in the house, which was previously described as wakf property, from the impending sale. The Courts below decreed the claim.

The first question for consideration is whether the omission of the plaintiffs other than Musammam Umda Bibi to set up the title, now sought to be enforced in the previous suit operates as a bar to the present claim. In the previous suit the then plaintiffs sought to protect the entire house in question on the ground that it was wakf property. They had asserted a right to offer prayers and to perform religious rites therein in their personal capacity as beneficiaries, but the object of the suit was not to protect their personal rights alone but to protect the entire house which they had described as wakf property. In the present suit they seek to enforce their personal interests in the said house as the heirs of Fateh Khan. They had not excluded the present house from their claim in the previous suit. In fact, they were claiming one of the houses mortgaged in their personal rights and seeking to protect the other house now in dispute on the ground that it was a wagf property. Having asserted that the latter was a wagf property, they could not have consistently claimed the same property as their personal property except possibly in an alternative form. They were, however, not under an obligation to adopt the latter course. Section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure requires that the decision in a previous suit would not be a bar to a decision in a subsequent suit unless the matter in issue was directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title. The title set up in the previous suit was a title based on the property in dispute being treated as wagf property, in which the plaintiffs were interested as much as other persons entitled to offer prayers therein. In the present suit they are claiming a personal title in themselves as the heirs of Fateh Khan. Explanation 4 of that section provides that any matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of defence or attack in a former suit should be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit, but it is not obligatory on a party seeking to protect certain property as wagf property from an impending sale to assert in the same suit any personal right thereto, to which he may afterwards find himself entitled, in case the property in question is not found to be wagf property. It is immaterial whether they could have joined in the previous suit an alternative claim for the protection of the personal share they are now seeking. There was no obligation to join the two claims and their omission to set up the present title in the previous suit does not, therefore, bar the decision of that matter in the present litigation. As observed in Ali Moidin Ravuthin v. Elayachanilathil Kom'hi (1), the identity of the cause of action is immaterial. The right in which relief was claimed in the previous suit was not the same in which the relief is claimed in the present one. The former suit was brought for the protection of what was described as public property. The present suit has been brought for protection of personal or private rights. So far as the house in dispute went, the capacity in which the plaintiffs sued was not the capacity in which they are now suing, and section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure has, therefore, no application.

The second point for consideration is, whether the claim was barred by adverse possession. It is stated that in 1865 a suit for partition was brought by one Rahamat Ali Khan, the predecessor-in-title of two of the plaintiffs, against Najaf Khan and Najabat Khan for partition of his share in the house in question, and a decree was obtained in respect of which no steps were taken to obtain execution. The finding of the Courts below, however, is that, in spite of that omission, the plaintiffs have been in possession of the disputed property and that the mortgagor or his heirs have not been in adverse possession of the same. In the face of that finding, the above contention is without any force.

The other pleas taken in the memorandum of appeal have not been pressed.

The appeal must, therefore, fail and is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Mukerji, J.: - Assuming that the present claim might have been made as a claim in the alternative in the former suit, it is perfectly clear to my mind that it ought not to have been so added. The result of combining the two claims would have been this. In the same breath, the plaintiffs would have been under the obligation to adduce evidence that the property had been dedicated and belonged to the Almighty, and in the same breath it would have been obligatory on them to adduce evidence to show that it was nobody else's property but theirs. In claiming the property as their own they would have been obliged to trace how the property descended and what share was theirs. Thus, contradictory issues would have arisen and the trial would have been immensely complicated. It was never, therefore, desirable that the two claims should be combined. This is enough to discredit the plea of res judicata. I agree in the rest of the judgment of my learned brother and in the order proposed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 907 OF 1919.

RAM MEHR—PLAINTIFF—

PALI RAM—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. XLI, s. 25
—Punjab Courts Act (VI of 1919) s. 41 (3)—Appeal, second—Remand, findings on—Finding of fact, whether Mauzali Narah, Tahsil Sonapat, Rohtak District.

When the finding and evidence upon an issue of fact remanded by the High Court in second appeal under O. XLI, r. 25 of the Civil Procedure Code are returned to the High Court, the finding is conclusive and cannot be challenged on the evidence before the High Court as in the case of a first appeal. [p 404, col. 2.]

Balkishen v. Jasoda Kuar, 7 A. 765; A. W. N. (1885) 225; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 908; Nehal Singh v. Sewa Ram, 40 Ind. Cas. 128; Beri Pershad Kuari v. Nand Lal Sahu, 24 C. 98; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 780; relied on.

All that is laid down in section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act is that no appeal shall lie to the High Court regarding the validity or existence of any custom without a certificate by the Judge of the lower Appellate Court. There is no provision that when once an appeal has been properly filed, a certificate should be required at any subsequent stage of the hearing. [p. 405, col. 1.]

The provision as to a certificate is only intended to apply as a condition precedent to the filing of an appeal and not as a condition precedent to the challenging of a finding on a question of custom remanded to the lower Appellate Court. Once a second appeal has been legally instituted the appellant can contest at the hearing any findings of the lower Appellate Court which are against him, so long as he has taken exception to them in his ground of appeal. [p. 405, col. 1.]

When, therefore, an issue on a question of custom is remanded in second appeal under O. XLI r. 25 of the Civil Procedure Code, the finding on that issue recorded by the lower Appellate Court can be questioned before the High Court without a certificate. [p. 405, col. 2.]

There is no custom in village Narah, Tahsil Sonapat, Rohtak District, under which ancestral immovable property is liable in the hands of the holder for the just debts of his predecessor. [p. 405, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Karnal, dated the 7th July 1919.

Mr. Sagar Chand and Sh. Niaz Mohammad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Scott-Smith, J.—A return has now been made by the District Judge to this Court's orders of remand of the 13th January and 11th December 1922. The finding on the first issue is in the affirmative, on the second that the plaintiff's father had not an unfettered right of alienation with regard to these properties, on the third that there is a special custom in the locality in which the parties' village is situate which makes ancestral property in the hands of the next holder liable for the just debts of his predecessor, and on the fourth that the defendant has made improvements valued as follows:—

On property B	...Rs. 2,500
On property C	450
On property D	821

At the hearing Mr. Shamair Chand on behalf of the respondent raised two preliminary points,—

(1) that findings of fact by the District Judge upon the issues remanded to him cannot be challenged before us, and

(2) that the findings as regards custom cannot be challenged without a certificate, having regard to section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act.

As regards the first point, it was held in Balkishen v. Jasoda Kuar (1) that, when the finding and evidence upon issues remanded under O. XLI, r. 25, Civil Procedure Code, are returned to the High Court the finding is conclusive and cannot be challenged on the evidence before the High Court as in first appeal. The ratio decidendi was, that a second appeal is not allowed on questions of fact. This was followed in a case reported as Nehal Singh v. Sewa Ram (2) and in Beri Parshad Kuari v. Nand Lal Sahu (3) same view was taken. We agree with the decisions in these cases and we hold that the findings of fact returned to us by the lower Appellate Court cannot be challenged.

RAM MEHR V. PALI RAM

As regards the second point, it is pointed out that under section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act no appeal lies to the High Court from a decree passed in appeal by any Court subordinate to the High Court regarding the validity or the existence of any custom or usage unless the Judge of the lower Appellate Court has certified that the custom or usage is of sufficient importance, and the evidence regarding it is so conflicting or uncertain that there is such substantial doubt regarding its validity or existence as to justify such appeal. It is urged that the finding on the 3rd issue sent down should be considered as part of the original judgment of the lower Appellate Court and that, therefore, it can not be challenged without a certificate. It was argued on the other side that the appeal was rightly instituted without a certificate because, at that time, there was no contention regarding the validity or existence of any custom. What was urged at the original hearing was that the lower Appellate Court ought to have framed an issue upon a point of custom which it had not done and we were asked to frame such an issue and remand it for trial. In our opinion the same reasons which prevent a finding of fact by the lower Appellate Court on an issue remanded to it from being challenged in this Court, do not apply to a decision on a question of custom so remanded. All that is laid down in section 41 is that no appeal shall lie to the High Court regarding the validity or existence of any custom without a certificate by the Judge of the lower Appellate Court. There is no provision that when once an appeal has been properly filed, a certificate should be required at any subsequent stage of the hearing. The proviso to sub-section (3) lays down that an application under sub-section (3) shall not be received after the expiration of thirty days from the date on which the decree of the lower Appellate Court was passed and this proviso, in our opinion, clearly shows that the provision as to a certificate was only intended to apply as a condition precedent to the filing of an appeal and not as a condition precedent to the challenging of a finding on a question of custom remanded to the lower Appellate Court. Once an appeal has been legally instituted in this Court the appellant can contest at the hearing any findings of the lower Appellate Court which are against him, so long as he has taken exception to them in his grounds of appeal.

This is his right and we do not think that it should be taken away from him unless there is a clear provision of the law to this effect. We do not find anything in section 41 (3) which supports the position taken up by the respondent's Counsel and we hold that the findings on a question of custom now submitted to us can be challenged in this Court.

The finding on the first issue and on the fourth issue as to the value of the improvements cannot be challenged before us; that on the second issue is not challenged. The finding on the third issue, however, is challenged by Counsel for the appellant who urges that it has not been proved that there is any special custom in this locality which renders ancestral property liable in the hands of an heir for payment of the debts of his predecessor. In our opinion the learned District Judge has arrived at his findings on this issue on insufficient materials. He says that 13 instances have been cited by the witnesses from the locality in question in which a decree has been obtained and either executed against the immoveable property of the judgment debtor after the death of the latter without objection by his heirs or in which the heirs had compromised. The Commissioner who made a local inquiry and recorded the evidence in which these instances were referred to has pointed out that the evidence in support of them is defective. The learned District Judge says that some of them are supported by documents but Counsel has not been able to point out to us which of them are so supported and, in our opinion, they have not been properly proved. The learned District Judge also admits that many of the instances are not indeed instances of execution of a decree against ancestral landed property after the death of the original judgment debtor. Under the circumstances, we are quite unable to regard this evidence as sufficient to prove that, in the locality where the parties reside, ancestral immoveable property is liable in the hands of the next holder for the just debts of his predecessor.

We held in our original order of remand that the prior mortgages on the properties A and B had not been proved while those on C and D had been proved. B was a vacant site when it was mortgaged to the respondent in 1915 and he built a pucca house on it since that date or it is possible that he began it just at the time of mortgage and completed it afterwards. He had no right under the terms of the mortgage to build a house at a cost of Rs. 2,500 on the property of a minor and make it difficult, if not impossible, to redeem it. As regards the property C, it is clear from the old mortgage-deeds that the materials belonged to Jai Ram and it was agreed that at the time of redemption he could either remove his materials or claim the value of them. It is also probable, having regard to the evidence of Sudan, that the building was constructed prior to the mortgage of Jai Ram. The property D had been in mortgage for a great many years and the improvements thereon were also made very long ago and in the life-time of the minor's father without any objection being made by him. In our opinion the mortgagee is entitled to the value of the improvements on these two properties.

We, therefore, accept both the appeals. In appeal No. 967 we decree the plaintiff's claim conditional on payment of the mortgage-money of Rs. 300 plus Rs. 821, the value of the improvements. In appeal No. 968 we decree the claim conditional on payment of Rs. 200 mortgage-money, plus Rs. 450 the value of the improvements. Under all the circumstances of the case, we direct that the parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

Harrison, J. -I agree with the conclusions and am of opinion that in this case the finding on the third issue can be impugned at this stage without a certificate. The remand is under O. XL1, r. 25 and whether objections be presented or not, it is our duty as an Appellate Court seized with the original appeal to proceed to determine that appeal after examining the correctness of the findings on the additional issues. To this rule there is the important exception that it is not within our province to examine such findings when they deal with facts. The contention of the respondents is that, in virtue of section 41(3) of the Punjab Courts Act, questions of custom, if unsupported by a certificate, are or must be treated as questions of fact. In a sense this is true and, for practical purposes, in second appeals findings on custom unsupported by a certificate are treated as findings of fact. The wording of the section, however, makes it more correct to say that such questions are treated as questions of law subject to the proviso regarding the certificate, and, therefore, may be said to be penalised questions of law rather than privileged questions of fact. The difference is all important. Doubtless, questions of custom may be and often are questions of fact; oftener they are questions of law, sometimes mixed questions of law and fact. Whatever may be their nature, they are all classified under section 41 of the Courts Act with questions of law and usage, which may be agitated as a matter of right on second appeal. A penal condition is then added making the presentation of a certificate an indispensable preliminary. Had the contrary procedure been adopted and had such questions been classified with questions of fact subject to privileged treatment being accorded on the production of a certificate, the position would have been very different. The finding would then have been a finding of fact unassailable until certain conditions had been observed; now it is more akin to a question of law which can be agitated as a matter of right subject always to the disabling provisions of section 41(3) so far as they may be applicable. This sub-section penalises an appeal from a decree. Here we have no decree and no appeal except the original decree from which the appeal was presented and which dealt with no question of custom. No certificate is, therefore, required. The penal condition does not in terms apply and the question can be agitated in exactly the same manner as an ordinary question of law. This result may be due to a defect in the Act with which we are not concerned for the words are clear and, in applying a penal provision, the greatest strictness must be observed.

SOMASUNDARAM CHETTY—

RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXVI, r. 4—Defendant residing beyond Court's jurisdiction, examination of—Refusal of Court to issue commission—High Court, whether can interfere—Revision.

In a suit brought in a Court at Ramnad, the defendant applied for a commission to examine himself as his own witness. It appeared that he had been residing in Rangoon with his family for many years and was served with summons there. It appeared, further, that the plaintiff himself was a resident of Rangoon and was examined on commission there. The Court having refused to issue the commission, the defendant applied to the High Court in revision.

Held (1) that in these circumstances the defendant should have been allowed to be examined on commission;

(2) that in refusing to examine defendant on commission in the circumstances of this case the Court had acted with material irregularity and it was open to the High Court to interfere in revision.

Petition against the order of the District Munsif of Devacottah, dated the 16th March 1923.

Messrs. G. Krishnaswami Iyer and R. Swaminatha Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. E. Doraisami Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the District Munsif has refused to issue a commission to examine the 2nd defendant as his own witness, and the revision is against that order. The learned Munsif dismissed the petitioner's petition rather summarily without noticing the importance of the fact that the defendant was the person applying and without his attention having been drawn to the cases which show in what manner a Court should deal with an application of a defendant to examine himself as a witness on commission as distinguished from an application by a plaintiff.

A reference to the case Ross v. Woolford (1) and to the case Sarat Kumar Roy v. Ram Chandra Chatterji (2) will show how a defendant's application should be dealt with. In this case a defendant has been a resident of Rangoon with his family for many years. He was served with summons there. The plaintiff himself was a resident of Rangoon and was examined on commission himself there. In these circumstances, the defendant should have been allowed to be examined on commission. The watching of his demeanour which the lower Court refers to in support of its order is not a sufficiently strong ground to justify the dragging of the defendant all the way from Rangoon to Ramnad. I would, therefore, set aside the order of the Munsif and direct him to issue a commission to examine the defendant in Rangoon as prayed by him.

It was argued that this was not a proper case for intervention in revision and reliance was placed on the observations of their Lordships in Bala Krishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (3).

Their Lordships recognise irregular exercise of jurisdiction as a ground for interference as the section also says. I think this is a case of such irregular exercise of the lower Court's powers in examining witnesses. In refusing to examine defendant on commission in the circumstance of this case, the Court is acting with material irregularity, as it might lead to his evidence being lost to the defendant altogether. The objection that it is not open to this Court to act in revision is, therefore, overruled.

The respondent will pay the costs of the petitioner in this Civil Revision Petition but I do not interfere with the order as to costs in the lower Court.

AND OTHERS--RESPONDENTS.Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 13—Mortgage—Joint liability of defendants—Mortgage decree passed ex parte against some defendants, whether can be set aside against only some defendants.

The liability of the defendants in a mortgage suit being a joint liability a decree in such a suit, passed ex parte against some of the defendants and on contest against the rest, is of such a nature that, under the provisions of O. IX, r. 13, Civil Procedure Code, it cannot be set aside against all the defendants and not only against any particular defendant.

Appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge of Darbhanga, dated the 10th September 1923.

Mr. S. C. Mitter, for the Appellant.

Mr. Lachmi Kant Jha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We are obliged to allow the appeal not because there is any merit in this appeal, but because the learned Subordinate Judge has set aside the mortgage decree as against defendant No. 9.

The facts are these. The suit was on a mortgage and on the 30th of January 1923, the Subordinate Judge passed an ex parte decree as against defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 9, and a decree as against defendants Nos. 4 to 8 on contest. The petitioner, who was cited as defendant No. 1 in the action, and defendant No. 9 made separate applications for setting aside the decree under the provisions of O. IX, r. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The application of defendant No. 9 succeeded, but the application of defendant No. 1 failed. Now, the Code provides that where the decree is of such a nature that it cannot be set aside against any particular defendant, it may be set aside against all or any of the other defendants also. As I have already stated, the suit was brought on a mortgage and the liability of the defendants was a joint liability. That being so, the learned Subordinate Judge in setting aside the decree as against defendant No. 9 should have set aside the decree as against all the defendants. Strictly speaking, this point really arises in the application which was made on behalf of defendant No. 9. But the position now is this, that, although the liability of the defendants is a joint liability, the decree has been set aside as against defendant No. 9 and maintained as against defendant No. 1. The position is an impossible one.

We must allow the appeal; but, as the appellant succeeds only by reason of the fact that the application of defendant No. 9 succeeded in the Court below, he must pay the costs of this appeal to the opposite party.

RESPONDENTS.Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 115, 151, O. XLIII, r. 1 (4)—Remand under inherent power of Court—Appeal—Revision.

There is no appeal provided in the Civil Procedure Code against an order made under the inherent power of the Court conferred by section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, to remand a case for retrial.

The validity of such an order can, however, be impugned in a second appeal to the High Court against any decision which may subsequently be passed by the lower Appellate Court on appeal from the decree of the Court of first instance.

The High Court will not interfere in revision in a case where there is another remedy open to the aggrieved party.

Second appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge, Mianwali, dated the 28th May 1923.

Lala Nawal Kishore, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order of remand made under section 151, Civil Procedure Code. A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies from such an order and Raghunandan Singh v. Jadunandan Singh (1) and Ramchandra v. Narayan Lal (2) are relied on in support of this objection. An appeal from an order of remand of course lies under O. XLIII, r. 1 (u), Civil Procedure Code, but the remand according to that rule must be under O. XXI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code. There is no appeal provided in the Civil Procedure Code against an order made under the inherent power of the Court conferred by section 151, Civil Procedure Code, to remand a case for retrial. The preliminary objection prevails, and the appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Next, it is prayed that if no appeal lies, the petition of appeal may be treated as a petition for Revision. I am unable to accede to this prayer. The petitioner can impugn the validity of the order of remand when he comes up in second appeal to this Court against any decision which may subsequently be passed by the lower Appellate Court on appeal from the decree of the Court of first instance, and there is ample authority for holding that when an aggrieved party has another remedy open, this Court will not interfere in revision.

Mr. Dipchand Chandmal, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Fatechand Assudamal, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—On the 2nd September 1917 the defendant firm of Gokaldas Khataoo contracted to sell to the firm of Miyomal Jethanand, plaintiff No. 2, 200 candies of bajri at Rs. 26-9-0 per candy deliverable between the 22nd April and 11th May 1918. It is alleged that the defendants committed breach of the contract which resulted in damage to the extent of Rs. 4,420-3-0 to Miyomal Jethanand. The firm of Hiranand Versimal had obtained a decree in suit No. 893 of 1918 against the firm of Miyomal Jethanand and in execution of it they attached, under O. XXI, r. 46, Civil Procedure Code, the sum due to Miyomal Jethanand by Gokaldas Khataoo. A garnishee notice was issued to the latter but they stated that there was nothing due by them to Miyomal Jethanand. Hiranand Versimal proceeded to sale of the claim of Miyomal Jethanand against Gokaldas Khataoo and at the sale held by the Nazir of this Court the claim was purchased by the plaintiff No. 1 who called upon the defendants to pay up the amount due and as the latter failed to do so, this suit has been filed.

Amongst other defences to the action, the defendants urged that the right of Miyomal Jethanand to claim damages on an alleged breach of contract was not a debt within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 46, Civil Procedure Code and plaintiffs No. 1 acquired nothing by their purchase and the sale of a mere right to sue for damages is bad in law as opposed to section 60, Civil Procedure Code and conferred no right on the plaintiffs. Both the parties desired me to record my findings on the two first issues that have been raised before discussing the question as to the responsibility for the breach of the contract, and these issues are,—

(1) Has the plaintiff a right to sue?

(2) Is the sale bad as being against the provisions of section 60, clause (9), Civil Procedure Code?

Mr. Fateh Chand for the defendant contended that the claim of Miyomal Jethanand was a claim for damages arising out of a breach of contract and under section 60, clause (e), Civil Procedure Code "a mere right to sue for damages " could not be attached, nor sold. He further argued that the order of the Court allowing the attachment under O. XXI, r. 46, Civil Procedure Code was a wrong order as the claim that was attached was not a debt and there being no valid attachment, the sale by the Court was infructuous and conferred no title on the purchaser.

Mr. Dipchand for the plaintiff argued that the attachment was perfectly valid as the claim was attached not as a debt under clause A of O. XXI, r. 46, Civil Procedure Code, but under clause C of the same rule as "other moveable property not in the possession of the judgment-debtor" and the sale being under an order of the Court, the Transfer of Property Act would have no application, as by the preamble and section 2 of the said Act it only relates to transfers by the act of parties as distinguished from transfers by operation of law, as, for instance, in cases of insolvency, forfeiture or sale in execution of a decree. I think Mr. Dipchand's argument is correct and the transfer in the present case cannot be impugned under the Transfer of Property Act. The point for consideration, however, remains whether the claim of Miyomal Jethanand against the defendants was not 'a mere right to sue for damages' and thus exempted from attachment and sale by virtue of the provisions of section 60, Civil Procedure Code. Mr. Dipchand argues that a right to sue for damages arising out of a contract can be attached though it may not be assignable. There can be little doubt that the right of Miyomal Jethanand against the defendants was to sue them for damages arising out of a breach of contract. Defendants ascribe the breach of the contract to Miyomal Jethanand and allege that, owing to their embarrassed circumstances, they were not in a position to fulfil the contract. And it was after the breach that the claim of Miyomal Jethanand has been attached and sold. Now the attachment of this claim as a debt under O. XXI, r. 46, clause A is certainly not justifiable for the clause refers to a debt, and, as remarked in Halsbury, Vol. 14, page 92, para. 168, "to be capable of attachment there must be in existence a debt on the date when the attachment becomes operative something which the law recognises as a debt and not merely something which may or may not become a debt", and, further, in para. 169 "the debt must be a sum certain and, therefore, a claim for unliquidated damages cannot be attached until the amount has been ascertained." Nor, in my opinion, can the attachment be validated under clause C of r. 46. O. XXI, r. 46 determines the mode in which a debt by a negotiable instrument or a share in the capital of a Corporation or other moveable property not in the possession of a judgment-debtor may be attached, and with regard to the last the attachment is to be made by a prohibitory order restraining the person in possession of the moveable property from giving it over to the judgment-debtor. Now, to describe a right to sue for damages as moveable property not in possession of the judgment-debtor and to direct its attachment would be to override the meaning of the plain words in clause E of section 60, Civil Procedure Code, exempting from attachment 'a mere right to sue for damages.' Mr. Dipchand relied on my judgment in Suit No. 931 of 1918, the Official Assignee of the High Court of Judicature v. Chandumal Chimanlal (1) as supporting his contention that the words, 'a mere right to sue for damages' as used in section 60, Civil Procedure Code, ought to be interpreted as implying that a suit for damages arising out of a personal wrong or bodily or mental suffering cannot be attached but the right to sue for damages to the estate of a person is attachable. In this case the Official Assignee in whom the estate of an insolvent had vested filed a suit for the recovery of damages arising out of breach of contract between the insolvent and the defendant. It was argued that the right to claim damages after the breach of a contract did not vest in the Official Assignee and the suit was not maintainable. After discussing the relevant provisions of the English Bankruptcy Act and the Presidency Towns and Provincial Insolvency Acts and the authorities bearing thereon I came to the conclusion that 'all rights of action which relate directly to the bankrupt's property and can be turned into assets for the payment of debt pass to the trustee in bankruptcy, but where a cause of action arises from the bodily or mental suffering or personal inconvenience of the bankrupt or from injury to his person or reputation then the right of action remains with the bankrupt.' And I consequently held that the right to claim damages arising out of the breach of contract passed to the Official Assignee on the vesting order being made. The ratio decidendi of this judgment was as to the property that vested in the Official Receiver on the adjudication of insolvency and not on what property is attachable. And the judgment is to be interpreted as a judgment on that point and that point alone. The question before me in the present case is, whether a right to sue for damages is attachable and to this my answer is in the negative; and, there being no valid attachment, the sale becomes equally invalid.

MUHAMMAD SHER KHAN v. SETH SWAMI DAYAL

My finding, therefore, on issue 1 is that the plaintiff No. 1 has no right to sue and on issue 2 that the sale is bad as being in violation of the provisions of section 60, clause E, Civil Procedure Code.

The result is that the suit stands dismissed with costs.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Kheri, dated the 8th October 1922.

Mr. Ghulam Hasan, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and H. K. Ghosh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary and a final decree for redemption in a suit brought by Muhammad Sher Khan, mortgagor, are attacked in the three appeals which have been jointly heard. The litigation ending in these decrees has been long drawn out. On 9th June 1908, Muhammad Sher Khan executed a mortgage-deed of his property in favour of Raghubar Dayal, father of the defendant, Raja Seth Swami Dayal, who died during the pendency of the litigation. Under the terms of the deed, Seth Swami Dayal sued for possession of the property on 14th July 1913; it was decreed to him by the Subordinate Judge of Kheri and the decree upheld by this Court. He took possession on 14th February 1915. Special leave was obtained by the mortgagor, Muhammad Sher Khan, to appeal to the Privy Council against the decree of this Court. Soon after the decree of this Court was passed, Muhammad Sher Khan, mortgagor, brought a suit for redemption on 18th June 1915. This suit was dismissed as premature by the Subordinate Judge and the decree upheld by this Court on 19th June 1919. An appeal was taken to the Privy Council where both the appeals, one from the suit for possession and the other from the suit for redemption, were heard by their Lordships at the same time. It may be mentioned that when the mortgagee sued for possession the defendant-mortgagor offered to redeem the property.

It will be convenient at this stage to summarize the terms of the deed of mortgage. The mortgage at its inception was simple for a sum of Rs. 82,000 repayable at the end of 5 years. During that term interest at 9½ annas per cent. per mensem was to run with 6 monthly rests. It was stipulated in the first clause that if the interest be not paid on due date it would be added to the principal and interest at the above rate would run on the total amount of principal and interest. The second clause gave the mortgagor power to redeem the mortgaged property on payment of the entire principal, interest and compound interest after 5 years in the fallow season. The third clause gave the mortgagee option to take possession of the mortgaged property in lieu of the principal amount for a period of 12 years from the date of entering into possession in default of payment of four consecutive instalments of interest or on the property not being redeemed at the end of 5 years, or to permit interest to run on the principal at the compound rate. Under the 5th clause the mortgagor declared that he will have no right of redemption during the period of 12 years if the mortgagee took possession. The 6th clause was as follows : —

"That during the period of possession the mortgagee will appropriate in lieu of interest all the produce and profits of the mortgaged villages after payment of the Government revenue according to the present Settlement. During the period of possession, neither the mortgagee will have any claim to interest nor I, the mortgagor, to profits ; nor will there be any accounting as to shortage or surplusage of profits at the time of redemption." Clause 9 provides "that on the expiry of 12 years I shall redeem the mortgaged property on payment of principal, interest and compound interest" and other specified payments. Pending the payment of the entire demands due hereunder, the mortgagee will as usual remain in possession and occupation of the mortgaged property in accordance with the above mentioned conditions.

Interest fell into arrear and at the stipulated time the mortgage-money was not paid. This led to the institution of the suit for possession by Seth Swami Dayal referred to above.

Upon these facts, their Lordships held that the mortgagor had a right to redeem at any time on the expiry of the period of 5 years from the date of the mortgage because of the provisions of section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act. They set aside both the decrees of this Court and directed the preparation of a preliminary decree for redemption. It is important to remember that their Lordships did not merely decree the appeals but specifically indicated how the preliminary decree was to be prepared. The directions are, "there should then be one preliminary decree for redemption in both suits in accordance with O. XXXIV, r. 7, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. But in taking accounts the period during which the mortgagee may have been in possession under the decree in suit No. 234 of 1913 (that is, the suit for possession by the mortgagee) should be excluded for, though the provisions of the mortgage entitling the mortgagee to possession cannot operate to defeat Section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, effect should be given to them so far as they provide that the mortgagee is to appropriate in lieu of interest all the produce mal and sewai and profits of the mortgaged villages after payment of the Government revenue. And so, during this period as in effect provided by the mortgage, neither will the mortgagee be accountable for profits nor the mortgagor for interest."

On return of these directions of their Lordships, this Court remitted both the suits to the Court of the Subordinate Judge for the preparation of a preliminary decree for redemption. On 8th April 1922 that Court put the mortgagor in possession before passing a decree for redemption but on appeal here the order of the Subordinate Judge was set aside and the mortgagee took over possession again on 27th May 1922. On 9th October 1922 a preliminary decree for redemption was passed by the lower Court and a final decree on 2nd November 1922.

The decree-holder has been paid the principal sum secured by the mortgage and interest and compound interest as stipulated under the deed up to 14th February 1915 when he took possession of the property. He has also been paid the amount collected by the mortgagor during the interim dispossession of the mortgagee between the 8th April 1922 and the 27th of May 1922. The claim of the decree-holder here, as it was in the lower Court, is for a further payment of interest and compound interest on the sum which had accrued by way of interest up to 14th February 1915. The argument of the decree-holder's learned Counsel was that the mortgagee took possession in lieu of the principal sum of Rs. 82,000 only and it must be taken that interest and compound interest continued to run on the balance due on the date when the mortgagee took over possession. This claim is in conflict with the directions laid down by their Lordships in their judgment of 9th December 1921. It was definitely stated therein that during the period during which the mortgagee was in possession neither will the mortgagee be accountable for profits nor the mortgagor for interest. These are clear directions and binding on this Court. Those directions do not permit of any interest being calculated on any portion of the mortgagee's claim during the period of his possession. We may, however, say that even without these definite directions of their Lordships we would have arrived at the same conclusion under the terms of the mortgage. The mortgagee's claim for interest on the sum due on 14th February 1915, the date of his possession, in excess of the principal is based only on the wording of clause (3) of the deed that the mortgagee was to take possession in lieu of the principal. It is obvious, however, that principal there meant the full amount due at the time. According to the terms of clause (1) interest if not paid was to be added to the principal. Such a condition would turn the interest into principal and the word 'principal' in clause (3) is used to indicate the original sum of Rs. 82,000 together with every sum of interest which may have been added to the principal and so turned into principal at the time of the mortgagee entering into possession. This is made clear by the express terms of clause (6) that during the period of possession the mortgagee will have no claim to interest. If the intention had been to permit the running of interest on the sum which was payable in excess of Rs. 82,000 at the time of the mortgagee's possession, such an intention would have been incorporated in clause (6.) The mortgaged property is of considerable value with constant increase of profits year by year. Statements prepared by the mortgagee himself show large increase in profits between 1908 and 1922. During his possession the mortgagee recovered in profits, a rate of interest in excess of the stipulated 7-1/8 per cent. on the entire sum due to him at the time of taking over possession. The claim for interest during his possession is entirely untenable.

The other ground of appeal related to costs. The lower Court directed the parties to bear their own costs and we consider that order to be just. Their Lordships allowed the mortgagee a larger amount than was really due to him. Under these circumstances, the mortgagee was rightly disallowed his costs subsequent to the decree of the Privy Council.

The appeal by the plaintiff-mortgagor has no force. He objects to the payment ordered by the lower Court of profits recovered by him during the period from 8th April 1922 to 27th May 1922. There is no dispute as to the amount actually recovered by him out of the property. His learned Counsel argued that during that period the mortgagee can only recover interest at 7-1/8 per cent. Such an argument overlooks the effect of the decree of this Court setting aside the order of the Subordinate Judge putting the mortgagor in possession. That order was discharged, so the mortgagee must be restored to the same position as if the mortgagor had never been put into possession. (Section 144, Civil Procedure Code.) This can only be done by the mortgagor refunding all the advantage he derived during that period from the possession of the property. The mortgagor has already paid that amount and no question arises as to the manner of its recovery as a money decree or a charge on the property. The mortgagee was entitled to the restitution and that is all that has been ordered by the lower Court.

In the result, we dismiss all the three appeals with costs in appeals Nos. 68 and 75. In appeal No. 9 of 23 we pass no order as to costs. The Counsel of the mortgagee-appellant prayed that the Court-fee paid by him on the petition in that appeal may be refunded. We are of opinion that the mortgagee is entitled to such refund. When an appeal was pending, from the preliminary decree it was not necessary for the mortgagee to file another appeal from the final decree. The result of the appeal in the preliminary decree would have governed the final decree as well. This was the view taken in Kanhaiya Lal v. Tirbeni Sahai (1) and the opinion has been subsequently followed by other High Courts.

Under the Risk Note B, a Railway Company is liable only for the loss of a complete consignment or of one or more complete packages, and is not liable for damage done to the goods, for instance, by being exposed to rain in transit.

Rule against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Assansole.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and Ambicapada Choudhury, for the Petitioner.

Babu Bhagirath Ch. Das, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the claim was for damages caused to 24 bags of flour consigned by the opposite party through the Railway Company. There is no case of total loss of any complete consignment or a complete package. The consignment was covered by a Risk Note known as Risk Note B, under which the company is liable only for the loss of a complete consignment or of one or more complete packages. The plaintiff's case was that they got the bags but that they were damaged by being exposed to rain in transit. This point came up for decision before this Court on many occasions and it was decided that, having regard to the Risk Note, the company is liable only for the loss of a complete consignment or of one or more complete packages. There being no such case in this case the decree passed by the Small Cause Court Judge must be held to be wrong. The rule is, therefore, made absolute, the order passed by the Small Cause Court Judge set aside and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs. The petitioner is entitled to the costs of this Rule. I assess the hearing fee one gold mohur.

Construction of document—Sale of land with definite boundaries—Sale-deed mentioning smaller area—Rule of interpretation.

Second Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Coimbatore.

Mr. S. Ranganatha Ayyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question that has been raised before us is what exactly is the land that was purchased in Court-auction under Exhibit II, the Court sale certificate. This certificate describes the land in the following terms :—

"In Coimbatore District, Ganapathi Sub-District, Coimbatore Taluk, Annaparapalayam village, situate to the north of the east to west main road, west of Venkataswami Goundan's house, south of the temple and east of Kaliannan's land ; lying within these and belonging to the defendant, measuring 12 cubits east to west and 24 cubits north to south, together with one thatched shed herein." It was contended before the lower Appellate Court and that Court has given effect to that contention, that what was sold was only the extent mentioned in the land falling within the boundaries given and not the whole of the land within those boundaries. It is not pretended that the whole of the land within the boundaries mentioned did not belong to the judgment-debtor ; but, because the measurements given are smaller than the measurements as taken now, it is claimed by the plaintiff's temple that all the land within the four boundaries mentioned in the above description over and above 12 cubits east to west, and 24 cubits north to south still belong to them and not to the 1st defendant who claims under the auction-purchaser. We are unable to agree with the construction put upon this sale certificate by the learned District Judge.

It seems to us to be quite clear that what was actually sold was the whole of the land within the boundaries and that the measurements were not accurately given, the mistake being in the measurements alone. Ordinarily, when a piece of land is sold with definite boundaries, unless it is very clear from the circumstances surrounding the sale that a smaller extent than what is covered by the boundaries was intended to be sold, the rule of interpretation is that boundaries must prevail as against the measurements. There is no reason to suppose that, when the judgment-debtor was putting up the property for sale in execution of his money decree, he was reserving any portion of the property to be left to his judgment-debtor and settling only a portion of the property belonging to him. The property is a single property forming one block on the Avanas road. We think that all the circumstances point to the whole of the property within the boundaries having been sold. We agree with the District Munsif in his construction of the sale certificate and set aside the decree of the District Judge and restore that of the District Munsif with costs in this and in the lower Appellate Court.

The word "subject" in s. 17 of the Court-Fees Act means "cause of action", and cause of action means "every fact which it would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove, if traversed, in order to support his right to the judgment of the Court." [p. 416, col. 1.]

The question whether a suit does or does not embrace two or more distinct causes of action must be decided on the terms of the plaint. [p. 416, col. 1.]

It is open to a plaintiff, who has sustained losses in respect of different consignments of different dates by reason of the negligence of a Railway Administration, to consolidate his claim and to serve the Railway with one notice, under s. 77 of the Railways Act, in respect of all the losses. Where one notice is served in such a case it is a part of the "cause of action" of the plaintiff and it is impossible for him to maintain separate suits in respect of the separate losses or causes of action. Consequently, the Court-fee in such a case is chargeable on the consolidated sum of money and not the aggregate amount of fees calculated separately on the amount of each distinct loss. [p. 416, col. 1.]

Mr. N. C. Sinha, for the Appellant.

The Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—This is a Court-fee matter. The suit was to recover a sum of money for losses in respect of 38 consignments of mangoes of different dates between the 21st of May and the 18th of August 1920. Before the suit was instituted, the plaintiff, who is the respondent here, served a notice on the defendant under section 77 of the Indian Railways Act claiming a consolidated sum of money in respect of the losses sustained by him by reason of the negligence of the Railway Administration. A Court fee of Rs. 130 was paid by him on the consolidated sum of Rs. 2,012-14-6 claimed by him. The plaintiff's suit succeeded in the Court of first instance. Thereupon the East Indian Railway Company appealed to the Court below, and, on their memorandum of appeal, they paid a Court fee of Rs. 130. The Stamp Reporter has taken the view that as each consignment was a distinct subject within the meaning of section 17 of the Court-Fees Act, the plaintiff was chargeable with the aggregate amount of the fees to which the plaints in suits embracing separately each of such subjects would be liable under the Act. According to him, the memorandum of appeal in the Court below was insufficiently stamped for the same reason.

The schedule annexed to the plaint shows that there were 38 different consignments of different dates, and it is this circumstance which encouraged the Stamp Reporter to say that it was open to the plaintiff to file separate suits in respect of these different consignments. The learned Government Advocate, supporting the report of the Stamp Reporter, has contended before us that though it is open to a plaintiff to combine separate causes of action in a single suit, the position from the point of view of the Court-Fees Act must be exactly the same as if he had brought separate suits on his separate causes of action. It has been held in this Court and in the Calcutta High Court that the word "subject" in section 17 of the Court-Fees Act means "cause of action." But the validity of the argument of the Government Advocate must depend on the question whether the plaintiff's suit did embrace thirty-eight distinct causes of action.

Under section 77 of the Indian Railways Act, it is necessary for the plaintiff to give notice of his claim to the Railway Administration before proceeding to a suit. In his notice to the Railway Administration, the plaintiff claimed a consolidated sum of money in respect of the losses sustained by him by reason of the negligence of the Railway Administration. It is not disputed that it was open to the plaintiff to bring one suit in respect of his losses and to claim a consolidated sum of money. This is exactly what the plaintiff did, and he expressly mentioned the 19th November 1920, the date on which notice was given, as one of the dates on which cause of action accrued to him. Now, "cause of action" means "every fact which it would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove, if traversed, in order to support his right to the judgment of the Court." Mr. Naresh Chandra Sinha has contended before us that, after the notice of the 19th November 1920, it was impossible for the plaintiff to maintain separate suits in respect of his separate causes of action. It seems to me that the notice of the 19th November 1920 is part of the cause of action of the plaintiff, for it is one of those facts which it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove in order to support his right to the judgment of the Court. The question whether a suit does or does not embrace two or more distinct causes of action must be decided on the terms of the plaint, and I find it impossible to hold, on a perusal of the plaint, that the suit embraced 38 distinct causes of action. As I have said before, the notice was part of the cause of action of the plaintiff, and it was impossible for the plaintiff to maintain separate suits after the notice of the 19th November 1920.

I hold that the memorandum of appeal in the Court below was sufficiently stamped.

Ross, J.—I agree.

Section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be applied where the rule of procedure applicable to the case has been expressly laid down in the Code.

Where an appeal is dismissed for the appellant's default under O. XLI, r. 17 of the Civil Procedure Code, the remedy of the appellant is by way of an application for restoration under rule 19 of the Order. Section 151 of the Code has no application to such a case.

Civil Revision against the order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Agra, dated the 17th March 1923.

Mr. N. P. Ashman, for the Petitioners.

Mr. A. Sanyal, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT—Jhinguria and others were appellants in a civil appeal which was transferred to the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge at Agra for disposal. On the date fixed for hearing, as they were absent and unrepresented, the appeal was dismissed for default. It was dismissed on the 25th April 1922 under the provisions of O. XLI, r. 17. There is a specific remedy in the Code of Civil Procedure to cover the case where an appellant has been prevented by sufficient cause from appearing and his appeal has been dismissed under this rule. That remedy is given in O. XLI, r. 19. Under that rule the applicants could have applied for a restoration of their appeal. It appears that they have never so far adopted that remedy. On the

GOKAL CHAND v. SANWAL DAS

6th July 1922 when an application under O. XLI, r. 19 would ordinarily have been beyond time they applied for a restoration under O. IX, r. 8, a rule which had no application. Their application was dismissed. They then applied on the 19th August 1922 for a review of the original order of the 25th April 1922 dismissing their appeal for default. That application was dismissed. They then applied on the 11th November under section 151 of the Code. That application was dismissed. They then applied on 15th December 1922 under section 151 of the Code and on that occasion the presiding officer restored the appeal for hearing. His order is questioned in revision on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to pass it. The plea must prevail. Section 151 is as follows :—

“Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the inherent power of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court.”

The enactment of this section declared the existence of an inherent jurisdiction in all Courts to go beyond the law of procedure in the ends of justice. But section 151 does not lay down that a Court may act in defiance of the law of procedure. A Judge is bound by the Code of Procedure and the Law of Limitation. Where the Code of Civil Procedure is silent, it is possible, and frequently desirable, to apply the provisions of section 151. But the following qualification should be always applied. Section 151 cannot be applied where the rule of procedure is already laid down, and here the case is clear. The remedy lay under O. XLI, r. 19. Owing to the appellants' laxity they waited until it was too late to apply under that rule and have since endeavoured to obtain the relief they desired by ignoring the provisions of the law. I agree that the learned Additional Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to pass his order of the 17th March 1923. He passed that order by assuming an authority which he did not possess. He had no jurisdiction to take up the matter at all. It had been finally decided before. I, therefore, allow this application and set aside that order. The opposite party will pay their own costs and those of the petitioners.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1909), s. 110—Leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council—Substantial question of law, what is.

In order to justify the grant of a certificate for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council under the latter portion of section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code, the High Court must be satisfied that a substantial question of law is involved in the case; that is to say, a question of law in respect of which there may be a difference of opinion.

Parshotam Sarvan v. Hargu Lal, 63 Ind. Cas. 887; 19 A. L. J. 462; 42 A. 513, relied on.

Application under O. XLV, r. 2, and sections 109 and 110, Civil Procedure Code, for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Petitioner.

Lala Sardhar Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under O. XLV, r. 2, and sections 109 and 110 of the Civil Procedure Code for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, and we are asked to grant a certificate to the effect that the case fulfils all the requirements of section 110 of the Code and is fit for appeal to His Majesty in Council. The decree of the lower Court decreeing the suit has been affirmed by this Court. The last paragraph of section 110 provides that, “where the decree or final order appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below the Court passing such decree or final order, the appeal must involve some substantial question of law.” We have, therefore, to see whether this requirement is fulfilled in the present case.

The suit was one for pre-emption, and was based on an alleged custom prevailing in the locality in which the property claimed was situated. The lower Court held that the alleged custom of pre-emption existed in the entire city of Delhi. A large number of instances were cited affirming the alleged custom. The defendant-vendee was not able to cite any single instance in which a claim for pre-emption was ever disallowed on the ground that a custom of pre-emption did not prevail in Delhi. This Court, after an examination of the evidence on the record, agreed with the trial Court as to the effect of the evidence in support of the alleged custom and held that the custom set up had been established by overwhelming evidence.

Against this decision the petitioner proposes to appeal. On the face of it, no substantial question of law arises. The proposed appeal really questions the finding of fact relating to the existence of custom; but it is contended by Mr. Shamair Chand, the learned Counsel for the applicant, that the question whether the evidence produced to establish a certain custom is sufficient is a question of law. Technically it is so; but can it be said to be a substantial question of law? We are clearly of opinion that it cannot be said to be so. What is a substantial question of law has been often considered by the various High Courts in reference to such petitions. In a recent case Parshotam Saran v. Hargu Lal (1) decided by a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court the following opinion was expressed:—

"In order to justify the grant of a certificate for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, the High Court must be satisfied that a substantial question of law is involved in the case; that is to say, a question of law in respect of which there may be a difference of opinion."

This gives an indication as to the nature of the question to be raised.

In our opinion no substantial question of law arises in this case. Accordingly, we dismiss the application with costs.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Oral agreement varying terms of written contract when admissible—Agreement set off, whether can be proved—Interest, rate of—Court, when can give relief.

When, at the time of a written contract being entered into, it is orally agreed between the parties that the written agreement shall not be of any force or validity until some condition precedent has been performed, oral evidence of such agreement is admissible to show that the condition has not been performed and, consequently, that the written agreement has not become binding. [p. 420, col. 2.]

But when a promissory note expressly provides that amount due therein is payable on demand with interest at a specified rate, an oral agreement between the parties that the said amount was to be set off against the amount due to the executant of the promissory note on some other account is not a condition precedent to the enforcement of liability under the promissory note and such agreement is not admissible in evidence [p. 420, col. 2.]

Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Madgavkar, A. J. C., dated the 27th September 1922.

JUDGMENT.

Raymond, A. J. C.—This is an appeal against the judgment of Madgavkar, A. J. C. Ibrahim and his son Adam, whom I shall refer to as the contractors, by a written agreement contracted with the firm of Ramsing Kundansing and Sons, whom I shall describe as the firm, to construct certain buildings for the latter at Malir. The agreement is dated the 27th August 1916 but the work actually commenced in October 1916 and proceeded till January 1917 when it had to be stopped at the instance of the Collector of Karachi as it was under consideration to apply the Town Planning Scheme to Malir and a part of the land on which the buildings were to be erected would be possibly affected by it. On the 30th August 1919 the parties entered into a second written agreement for the further prosecution of the same work which till then, it may be observed, had been constructed up to the plinth, and the work was proceeded with till January 1920 when it was again stopped owing to certain disputes between the contracting partners. For the second agreement the rates for the building construction were somewhat higher than those mentioned in the first agreement. During the period the work was under progress the firm advanced moneys to the contractors but the parties are not agreed whether the advances amounted to 90 per cent. of the value of the work done in terms of the agreements or whether it was less. Substantially, during the same period, the firm granted loans to the contractors and took promissory-notes from them payable on demand.

The contractors filed a suit against the firm for settling accounts of the value of the work done by them at Malir, the advances made towards it and the amount remaining payable. The firm retorted by filing a suit against the contractors to recover the amount due on the promissory-notes with interest. With the consent of the parties both the suits were heard together and have been disposed of by one judgment. In the suit of the contractors the learned Judge awarded them a sum of Rs. 158-11-0 with costs and dismissed the suit of the firm against the contractors. The appeal before us is confined to the dismissal of the latter suit.

The substantial point on which the learned Judge dismissed the suit of the firm was that, in his view, there was an understanding between the parties at the time the promissory-notes were taken in respect of the loans that the amounts covered by them would be set off against the value of the work done. He, therefore, refused to recognise the loans as independent transactions and appropriated the amount due on them towards the value of the work done which necessarily involved the firm being disallowed the interest claimed on the amount of the pro-notes.

The appeal before us is against this finding of the learned Judge which, it is contended, is erroneous both in law and on the facts.

I shall first discuss the legal aspect of the case. All the promissory notes are in the same form except in respect of the amount advanced and the interest payable which in some is 2 per cent. and in others 3 per cent. I reproduce the wording of one of them.

"On demand we promise to pay Messrs, Ramsing Kundansing and Sons and Dayalsing Jethsing or their manager Jethsing Ramsing or order the sum of Rs. for value received by cheque no: on the Karachi Bank, Limited, Karachi, bearing interest at the rate of from this day." The promissory-notes are signed by both Ibrahim and his son Adam.

In para 13 of their plaint the contractors state as follows: 'That according to an understanding between the parties the amount of the pro-notes was to be set-off against the amount due to the plaintiffs on work done but the defendants fraudulently, in order to have the benefit of the high interest mentioned therein, have filed in the Small Causes Court, Karachi, suits on some of them and threaten to file on others as well'. In para 7 of the written statement filed by the contractors in answer to the suit by the firm they stated as follows: 'The pro-notes are voidable at the option of the defendants and unenforceable inasmuch as they have been executed under undue influence and on fraudulent representation made by plaintiff's manager that the interest would not be charged and the amount of them would be set-off against the amount due to the defendants.'

The only witness examined on behalf of the contractors was the contractor Ibrahim and there is not a word in his evidence hinting even remotely at any undue influence or fraud being practiced upon him at the time of the execution of any of the promissory-notes. The utmost that he does say is that there was an oral understanding that the amount due on the promissory-notes was to be set-off against the value of the work done. Now, the promissory-notes expressly provide that the amounts due thereon are payable on demand and they carry interest. There is an unconditional promise to pay contained therein, and no reference to any such understanding as is set up by the contractors. The contractors, therefore, were attempting to set up a case at variance with the written agreement between the parties. In Sri Ram v. Firm Sobha Ram Gopal Rai (1) it was held that the executant of a promissory-note could not be permitted to prove a separate agreement according to which the sum specified in the note was not, as expressed therein, payable on demand, but only after the adjustment of some accounts between the parties. In Vishnu Ramchandra v. Ganesh Krishna (2) it was held that in a suit on a promissory-note payable on demand it is not open to the defendant to plead by way of defence a contemporaneous oral agreement whereby the plaintiff had agreed that he will not present the note although it is payable on demand until he has discharged certain incumbrances in the property he has sold to a stranger. Provisos. 1 and 2 to section 92, Indian Evidence Act have clearly no application on the pleadings in the present case, and unless it were shown that the case was one which came within the purview of proviso 3 to the same section, evidence as to the oral agreement was inadmissible. Now proviso 3 states that the existence of any separate oral agreement constituting a condition precedent to the attaching of any obligation under any such contract, grant, or disposition of property may be proved." What is the position of the contractors in the present case? They say that the promissory notes though payable on demand are, as a matter of fact, not payable on demand in fact they have no force or effect as the amounts mentioned therein are to be set off against the value of the work done by them. Now it is to be observed that, concurrently with the loans to the contractors on the promissory-notes, there were money advances made to them periodically in respect of the work done for which only receipts were taken from them without any obligation as to payment of interest. As pointed out in Amir Ali's Evidence Act, p. 597, "with proviso 3 should be read illustration (J) to section 92 and it is intended to introduce the rule that when at the time of the written contract being entered into it is orally agreed between the parties that the written agreement shall not be of any force or validity until some condition precedent has been performed, parol evidence of such agreement is admissible to show that the condition has not been performed and, consequently that the written contract has not become binding. But in the present case the agreement sought to be introduced by extraneous evidence is not a condition precedent to the enforcement of any liability under the promissory-notes. It is open contradiction of the terms of the written document for whereas the latter expressly provides that the amount shall be payable on demand with interest, it is urged that it can only be set-off against the value of the work done. Such a defence is inconsistent with the terms of the promissory-notes which contain an unconditional undertaking for the payment of the amount mentioned, full consideration for which has admittedly been received: Cf. Kooverbhan Sukhanand v. Madandas Sirvomal (3). The present case is not even one where it is urged that the obligation under the promissory-notes would arise only on the happening of a certain event, the oral agreement, according to the contractors, was that no obligation whatever was to arise under the promissory-notes and that they were to have no force and effect. Such an agreement, in my opinion which distinctly contradicts the terms of the written document is not admissible in evidence. Pleader for the contractors relied on Badal Ram v. Jhulai (4) in support of his argument that the oral agreement was admissible in evidence under proviso (3) to section 92 Indian Evidence Act, but it will be observed that in this case there were reciprocal promises forming the consideration for each other. In the Privy Council case Motabhoj Mulia Essabhoj v. Mulji Haridas (5) evidence as to an oral agreement was admitted under proviso (2) to section 92 as to which the promissory note was silent and which was not inconsistent with its terms.'

The learned Judge of the Court below has not dealt with the legal question as to the admissibility in evidence of the parol agreement though it is asserted, and not denied, that the point was taken before him.

We are of opinion that the oral agreement was not admissible in evidence. This would conclude the case, but out of deference to the learned Judge we may briefly state our reasons which are not in accord with those of the learned Judge on the question of the oral agreement having been proved. As stated by the Privy Council in Motabhoj Mulla Essabhoj v. Mulji Haridss (5) above referred to, an oral agreement must be clearly proved and the onus of doing it is on him who sets it up. In the present case we have the bare evidence of Ibrahim, one of the contractors, on the point stripped of all corroboration.

It is established that advances were made by the firm to the contractors from time to time during the progress of the work and these payments were evidenced by receipts taken from the contractors. Now, if the amounts covered by the promissory-notes were also to be regarded and were meant as advances towards the work done, I find it difficult to understand why only in some instances promissory-notes were taken from the contractors. I placed this difficulty more than once before the pleader for the contractors but I must confess I received no satisfactory explanation from him. Besides, all the promissory-notes provided for the payment of interest, some 2 per cent. and others 3 per cent. per mensem, and it is very improbable that if the loans were intended to be appropriated towards, the value of the work done they would not be on the same basis as the other advances.

On two of the promissory-notes thus executed the firm had filed a suit against the contractors in the Small Cause Court and in both of them a consent decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff-firm. The defence as to the oral agreement that the amounts due on the promissory-notes were to be set off against the value of the work done was admittedly not taken up in this Court. This is an important piece of evidence against the present contention of the contractors. To save the bar of limitation Jethsing, the manager of the firm states that a sum of Rs. 10 0-0 was paid to him as interest on each of the promissory-notes sued upon and the fact of the payment is endorsed on promissory-notes over the thumb-mark of Ibrahim and the signature of his son Adam. Ibrahim, no doubt, denies that he ever paid any interest on any of the promissory notes though he does not deny his thumb-mark and admits he affixed it as Jethsing told him that it was necessary to save limitation. His son Adam has not even ventured into the witness-box to deny his signature. I am quite prepared to make allowances for the illiteracy of the contractors but it was for them to discharge the onus as to their signatures having been taken under false pretences and we have only the evidence of Ibrahim on this point which, in view of various circumstances in this case, we are not prepared to accept unhesitatingly. Jethsing states positively that the interest was paid to him on the date mentioned in the endorsements on the promissory-notes.

In the first written agreement executed between the parties there is a clear stipulation 'that the owner is at liberty to appropriate the money for the work done towards the payment of any loan that I may from time to time take from him'. In the second written agreement it was provided 'that if the owner appropriates any moneys towards the amount that we may take from him as a loan, he can do so and we shall have no objection. Both these clauses seems clearly to differentiate the money loans from the advances in respect of the work done and shows that the intention of the parties was that the loans were not intended as advances towards the work done. All that the contractors can urge in respect of these stipulations in the written agreements is that, in consequence of their illiteracy and ignorance, they were not aware of the contents of these documents.

On the 9th April 1919, that is, before the second written agreement between the parties, the firm by a written notice informed the contractors that they had borrowed from them a sum of Rs. 2,000 on various promissory-notes executed by them and unless this sum were repaid with interest within the time specified a suit would be filed against them. To this, admittedly, there was no reply nor any repudiation of the demand.

It was argued on behalf of the contractors that, though, in terms of the written agreements between the parties, the firm had to pay to them 90 per cent. of the value of the work done yet much less had been paid in actual advances and, therefore the promissory-notes were executed but if this argument be correct then it is difficult to understand why interest should be charged in the promissory-notes if they were payments towards the work done. It was also argued that, in view of the value of the work done exceeding the advances made, the contractors would not have permitted the heavy interest on the promissory-notes to accumulate and would have liquidated them as there was money still due to them. The answer to this argument is that the contractors were under obligation to the firm inasmuch as without any security they secured loans from the firm. It is not shown that the building work was the only concern on which they were engaged at the time and even if some money remained due to them they calculated on the possibility of receiving further loans from the firm which in all probability they may not have received if the accounts had been squared. It has been established that some of the loans on the promissory-notes had been made before the commencement of the building operation and the contractors contend that they were made for the purchase of building materials. This may be perfectly true but this circumstance does not imply that the loan amounts of the promissory-notes were intended in payment of the work done. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, we are of opinion that the contractors have not discharged the onus that lay upon them that the amounts advanced on the promissory-notes were intended to cover the value of the work done; in all probability the firm may not have granted these loans if the contractors had not undertaken their building work, but the promissory-notes are independent contracts for the discharge of which the contractors are liable irrespective of any amount that may be due to them of the building work. The only question that remains is whether the contractors are liable for the amount of interest which the notes carry amounting to Rs. 24 and 30 per cent. per annum. The transactions between the parties were not, on the face of them, unconscionable within the meaning of section 16 of the Indian Contract Act, all that is alleged on behalf of the contractors is their illiteracy, but this is not inconsistent with wisdom or prudence. Even if the firm was in a position to dominate the will of the contractors there is nothing to show that any undue influence had been exercised upon them in respect of any of the promissory-notes: C. Privy Council judgment in Lalla Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah. (6) Admittedly the contractors were not men in affluent circumstances and no security for the loans was forthcoming or furnished. The firm naturally ran some risk in advancing sums of moneys exceeding Rs. 2,000 to men of their financial position.

In the Privy Council case above cited it was observed that two rupees per mensem is by no means an unusual rate of interest in cases from India coming before this Board. In another Privy Council case of Aziz Khan v. Duni Chand (7) it was observed that "it is difficult for a Court of Justice to give relief on grounds of simple hardship in the absence of any evidence to show that the money-lender had unduly taken advantage of the position of the debtor even when the transaction appeared to be undoubtedly improvident." The mortgagor's contract to pay 25 per cent. compound interest was upheld. It is not proved that the firm does money-lending business and the transaction cannot by any means be regarded as improvident for it is highly doubtful whether the contractors could raise money in the market at this rate of interest without any security.

We do not think that the amount of interest payable by the promissory-notes is exorbitant and it is certainly not penal, the firm is, therefore, entitled to it.

We reverse the decree of the lower Court and allow the plaintiffs firm the sum of Rs. 1,358-13-4 with costs throughout in proportion.

MIAN FEROZE SHAH v. SOHBAT KHAN

PESHAWAR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CIVIL REFERENCE NO. 152 OF 1923.

October 22, 1923.

Present :—Mr. Pipon, J. C.

K. S. MIAN FEROZE SHAH—PLAINTIFF
versus
SOHBAT KHAN—DEFENDANT.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1927), ss. 77 (3) (e), proviso, 98—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Mortgage—Mortgagor retaining possession as tenant—Ejectment, suit for—Landlord and tenant, relationship of—Presumption—Procedure.

The general rule is that jurisdiction is governed by the allegations made in the plaint and not by the defence set up. [p. 424, col. 1.]

The proviso to section 77 of the Punjab Tenancy Act is mandatory and has the effect of transferring to a Revenue Court exclusive jurisdiction to decide a case which, nevertheless, so far as the allegations of the plaintiff alone are concerned, may have been rightly instituted in a Civil Court. [p. 424, col. 2.]

The jurisdiction of a Revenue Court, however, is not ousted by a pleading raised in defence. [p. 425, col. 1.]

Where a Revenue Court is confronted with a suit by a mortgagee who seeks to eject his mortgagor in the capacity of his tenant, it is for the Court to see from the plaint, the mortgage-deed, and the plaintiff's own explanation of his case, whether he is actually the landlord, that is, whether the mortgagee is actually holding under him as tenant, and to proceed with the case if it considers that this is prima facie established, but to decline jurisdiction if it is not. If it does not decline jurisdiction on this ground, and if the defendant's pleas raise an issue which it is necessary to determine for the decision of the whole suit and which strikes at the question of the status of landlord and tenant, the Revenue Court can always find on that issue itself and dismiss the suit if the defendant succeeds. Such dismissal does not, however, in any way, bar the plaintiff from suing in a Civil Court on his mortgage. The finding of the Revenue Court on this issue does not constitute res judicata against the Civil Court. [p. 425, col. 2.]

Case-law discussed.

Where there is not only a deed describing a mortgage as one with possession, but also a practically simultaneous deed of lease by which the mortgagor retains possession of the mortgaged land, paying what is described in the deed as rent to the mortgagee, there is a presumption that the latter is entitled to assume the capacity of landlord. [p. 426, col. 1.]

ORDER.—The question before this Court is one which concerns the jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts. The facts of the present case are that on the 12th of March 1917 Sohbat Khan executed a deed by which he mortgaged an area of 1,011 ks. 8 mls. to K. B. Mian Musharrif Shah and others. The deed
